THE role of Diana May is the most interesting Marion Davies has ever created. It offers her a wonderful opportunity for the display of her delicate dramatic art—as well as the most gorgeous collection of gowns this delightful star has ever worn. It will appeal tremendously to every member of the fair sex.

"The Young Diana" really merits the Motion Picture News characterization:

"The Picture That Has Everything"

advertised to the limit!

Goldwyn Pictures in 1922-23

GOLDWYN will produce and distribute during the coming year only TWENTY BIG PRODUCTIONS. Each one is a truly BIG picture in every sense of the word. Each picture is being produced in a BIG way, built on the solid foundation of GREAT stories, directed by the foremost directorial minds in the business, backed by the unlimited resources of the Goldwyn organization, created to make money for you. Each will be sold individually on its own merits.

Intensively Advertised

BIG pictures are BIG from the point of view of your box-office and bigger when they are properly advertised and exploited to your audience. We are going to tell America about each GREAT Goldwyn production through a tremendous advertising campaign. We will tell your audience about our line-up of powerful attractions through intensive national and local advertising, in the principal magazines, in hundreds of newspapers, on billboards.

Goldwyn Will Make "Ben Hur"

BEN HUR, the most widely known book in the world is being made by Goldwyn into a colossal dramatic spectacle, filmed in Palestine, Egypt, Italy, America.

Other great Goldwyn pictures to come:

GIMME—another Rupert Hughes knockout.

SIX DAYS—Elinor Glynn's stupendous love drama.

PASSIONS OF THE SEA—R. A. Walsh's first Big One for Goldwyn.

BROKEN CHAINS—$10,000 prize story directed by Allen Holubar.

THE BITTERNESS OF SWEETS—a wonderful Rupert Hughes story.

LEAVING THE CREAM IN THE BOTTLE

I RECENTLY left the West Coast Studios, after screening practically all of our fall productions, to be released under the forty-one picture program, sold to exhibitors for the first six months of this year.

In talking to exhibitors of these pictures, I promised them the greatest productions that our Producing Department had ever turned over to us for distribution.

Those of you who bought these productions on faith and on our word, know to what extent our pledges have been kept.

We are releasing these productions just as fast as possible, and in many cases pre-releasing, to get them into your hands at the earliest possible moment.

As an example, "Blood and Sand" is just finishing the greatest four weeks' run in Broadway's picture history, and could have been kept on indefinitely. Everyone knows it—admits it—but there was something else to think of besides the profits this picture would make for us after an indefinite run.

Exhibitors are in need of box office attractions now more than ever before in their history, so "Blood and Sand" is being sent on its way so that YOU and YOU and YOU may get it soon. Not only to make you money, not only to start your new season right, but to show to the people who support your theatre, that this is one of the kind of pictures you were talking of when you told them of the new Paramount program of this season.

And this is but one—there are more to follow—for when you have seen "Manslaughter," "The Old Homestead," "Burning Sands," "To Have and To Hold," "The Young Rajah," "The Spanish Cavalier," "Clarence" and others, you will realize more than ever before what a dependable source of supply means, and that the making of good pictures is the result of good planning, good thinking, good resources, and good organization—not the result of just big talk.

Two-dollar pictures? Yes, everyone of them, and they could have been shown at $2 for a long run. But you, Mr. Exhibitor, would not have had them for six or eight months, and you need them now.

They were made for you, for picture theatres to run, at popular prices, and bring back your business as only pictures of this kind can do.

HAMILTON
COMEDIES

Lloyd Hamilton

James W. Dean, one of America's foremost newspaper critics, whose reviews are printed in hundreds of papers, said: "Lloyd Hamilton is hereby nominated for a place in the hall of comic immortals. Chaplin, Lloyd and Keaton must crowd up a bit to give him room."

LLOYD HAMILTON'S excellent work in our Mermaid Comedies has earned for him, through the public's steadily increasing approval, promotion to a producing company of his own. Under the name HAMILTON COMEDIES this comedian will present on the screens of the world six feature comedies, each in two parts, for the season of 1922-23.

As much care, thought, time and money will be spent on these Short Subject features as is usually spent only on five-reel pictures.

The first production featuring this great screen humorist will be ready for your enjoyment early in the fall.

Ask the manager of your favorite theatre now if he has contracted for HAMILTON COMEDIES, and when he will be able to show you the first picture.

HAMILTON COMEDIES, like all motion pictures released by Educational, will carry our trade-mark on their posters and lobby cards and on the motion pictures themselves.

ARTHUR F. BECK Presents
When Husbands
BY AND WITH
LEAH BAIRD
THIS man married to get hold of his wife's money. First he eliminated his rival by a framed up robbery. Then he systematically lied, cheated and deceived the innocent girl behind the respectability of marriage. Eventually the wife found him out. To save his own reputation he attempted to prove her infidelity. She is saved by an unexpected and highly dramatic occurrence.
It is based on life. Any woman in the same situation would do exactly as Leah Baird does.
It is a gorgeous vision of ravishing gowns and lavish settings.
It has an exploitation title. It will open big and hold up for a run.
An early Fall release, now booking.

In the Literary Digest of May 20th is a reprint of an article which Gerald C. Duffy wrote in Picture Play Magazine. This article appears under the sub-heading "Letters and Art," and Mr. Duffy is probably the only screen writer who ever broke into this magazine, let alone this department.

Mr. Harold Hersey, Editor of Ace High Magazine, published by The Readers' Publishing Corporation, states that Mr. Duffy, in his opinion, is one of the best writers of the day.

"The Eternal Flame"

They ought to know a picture when they see one for they are all practical showmen and winners of the National Exploitation Contest last First National Anniversary Week

NORMA TALMADGE has scored another dramatic and artistic triumph!

Such was the consensus of opinion from the eight prize-winning Associated First National exhibitors, after witnessing her latest super-production, "The Eternal Flame," as guests of Joseph M. Schenck. The private showing was held for the exhibitors in Hollywood, which they visited on their tour.

"Miss Talmadge runs the gamut of emotions and reaches the pinnacle of her chosen work," said A. G. Stolte of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, Des Moines, Iowa.

"'The Eternal Flame' is screen literature," said Frank Steffe, after witnessing the preview. "I predict that in my locality it will have a long run and will do the screen an immeasurable good. It is a gem and there is not a slow spot in the 7400 feet."

"The film has a heart appeal that grips and holds one and I predict it will be a tremendous success," was the expression of Ben Davis of the Colonia Theatre, Norwich, New York.

"Marvelous acting and photography, backed by a heart interest story that has no equal, makes 'The Eternal Flame' a masterpiece as well as a magnet that will attract S. R. O. crowds," said Joe Burton of the Star Theatre, Toccoa, Georgia.

O. K. Mason, who represents the Regent Theatre of Wichita, Kansas, was equally vehement in his praise of the film. "It is a wonderful picture, excellently directed and photographed and replete with dramatic value that will please all," he said enthusiastically.

"A brilliant star and a picture the value of which is enhanced through the spending of large sums of money to give it the necessary artistic finish—a film that will satisfy audiences and make money for exhibitors," is the manner in which Alfred Gottesman characterized the picture.

Ralph Lieber, nephew of Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National and Business Manager of the Circle Theatre of Indianapolis, and Nick McMahon, Jr., of Ironton, Ohio, were equally enthusiastic in praising the picture to Mr. Schenck, who asked for candid opinions regarding the production.

Conway Tearle, who plays opposite Miss Talmadge, gives the best performance of his career, say these experts. They also praise Frank Lloyd for his fine direction; Frances Marion for her adaptation and titles, and Tony Gaudio for his photography. The story is adapted from "La Duchesse de Langeais," by Honore de Balzac.

Our Own Medicine

"The big picture deserves big advertising"—

Producers and distributors have been telling the exhibitor for years, season in and season out.

The exhibitor probably believes it now. Believing it, he probably also has that thought in mind when he does his own shopping.

And if that is the case—many producers must be receiving very bad-tasting doses of their own medicine.

To the exhibitor the producer says, "The big picture deserves big advertising."

To his advertising manager he says: "This one will sell itself, it is so good. Get by as cheaply on the advertising campaign as you can."

In those war-time prosperity days when big grosses rolled up as if by magic this producer was able to "get by as cheaply as possible." In the first succeeding days when the unusual picture was so exceptional and rare as to stand out like a lighthouse he still had a chance.

But this is a different day. And the coming season a different season.

There is competition, strong competition, a healthy balance of quality between a wide number of selling organizations.

Competition always demands a return to basic principles. And the foundation of picture merchandising for big grosses is in the thought:

The Chicago Tribune, in the course of a soundly constructive series of merchandising talks, has expressed the thought in a clear-cut picture.

The Tribune says:

TO MAKE AN AIRPLANE FLY

—it is necessary to move it at a high speed. It will "taxi" over the field at 35 miles an hour until it falls apart from old age, yet never leave the ground. The propellers may revolve millions of times. Thousands of gallons of gasoline may he consumed. Construction may be perfect. The ailerons may be properly set for flight. The pilot may be an expert. The weather may be splendid. BUT unless the machine is driven at a speed in excess of 40 miles per hour it will never leave the ground, AND unless it is maintained at a speed in excess of 40 miles per hour it will fall.

ADEQUATE ADVERTISING is in a similar manner essential to advertising success. Copy must he adequate in size and in frequency, and the circulation given it must he sufficient. The attitude of many advertisers is: "How LITTLE space can I purchase and get hy?" when it should he: "How MUCH space can I purchase profitably?" It is always difficult to estimate how SMALL an amount of advertising can be considered adequate. Believing that a concrete, up-to-date example of what is adequate advertising may be of value, The Trihune presents herewith the story of an advertiser whose copy and medium were adequate to raise him out of the common herd and to keep him above their level.

Summing it up:

"The big picture deserves big advertising."

It deserves advertising in the place where the exhibitor shops—the trade paper.

And the trade paper that can come to you on the solid foundation of circulation value, reader interest, and READER CONFIDENCE.

Moving Picture World's reader confidence has been held secure since 1907—it has circulation that you can count, and also weigh.

Robert E. Welsh

I Can't Get Excited—

Over a Number of Things

One of them is the idea that the sort of advertising carried in the trade papers of this business is all wrong.

There is ad copy and ad copy, a time and a place for every variety of appeal.

The critic who makes the general charge that "Advertisers are not properly utilizing their trade paper space" is merely allowing his prejudice to run too strongly towards one particular manner of merchandising in type.

There are times when "service" advertising is good advertising, when announcement copy, performance copy, institutional copy have their place.

But so long as advertising remains SELLING, and each picture production presents a different sales problem—just so long will it be as impossible as it is foolish to lay down one man's rules of advertising to cover an entire field.

Nor Can I Get Excited—

Over the reiterated statement that "There are too many trade papers in this field."

Maybe there are. But it is nothing to get excited about and hold brass band rallies over.

Many thousand years ago Mother Nature gave first proof that whenever there was too much of any one thing at one time—she took the situation in hand.

There are not too many trade papers in this field.

For this one reason, if for no other:

No one trade paper in the field is yet delivering the hundred per cent. of ultimate possible service. And it is only through COMPETITION, the application of continued effort to avoid Nature's selective axe, that the ultimate trade medium will be evolved.

Competition alone makes for all progress.

Any moment that we agree that there is no room for further progress in picture trade papers—then, and then only, will it be possible to say that the tail-enders in the field constitute the "too many" that we are now asked to get excited about.

Strange as It May Seem—

I can't get excited over the idea that every time Mr. Hays turns around it should be the occasion for pages of trade paper space and columns of newspaper publicity.

Mr. Hays is doing a big job, and in a big way. He has every bit of our admiration. He is doing far better work than we, personally, ever expected any man to accomplish in this field.

But isn't it very possible that we can overdo the publicity?

Every time a newspaper reader lets his eye glance over a Hays headline he says, "Oh, yes, that's the fellow who is going to CLEAN UP the movies."

It is barely likely that we are going to reach the day when we will be continually advertising the fact that we are the industry that is being CLEANED UP.

And it is going to be mighty hard to step forth some bright morning and convince the world that "We are now completely CLEANED UP."

For, such is the way of life, it is very probable that we won't look any different than we do today.

I Can't Get Excited—

Over the idea that once a week a trade paper editor ought to deliver a ponderous long-winded sermon on Confidence, Co-operation, Good Will Toward Men, Ethics and the Life Hereafter.

The church is losing its hold because ministers are forced to deliver a SERMON once a week. Film men stopped reading trade paper editorials when they stopped talking about films and began to PREACH.

So, if I occasionally chat "across-the-table" fashion as I do this week—set it down to this fact:

I don't like sermons.

No more than you do.

Robert E. Welsh

Editorial Personalities

Feel all chipper and gay this week over our new dress. We don't feel a bit bashful about saying it. Nor about telling you that this is only the first step. Got lots of good things up our sleeves that the next few weeks will disclose. Admit they are good. Know you will agree. Nor do we feel a bit commercial in advising that you are missing something any of these weeks that your ad copy does not appear in Moving Picture World. Say that without the slightest strain on our modesty. Would like to take you in the Circulation Department to see the proof. Any day you say. We're stepping, boys—stepping fast.

There's an ad on Page 19 of this issue that only occupies a page but says so much in that space that you can spend half an hour talking about it and the thoughts it prompts.

Turn to it now and look it over. We don't care if you forget to come back to this page. You'll find it a blamed sight more interesting than anything we can say.

"Service" in this field is a word with a wealth of meanings. And some of its meanings don't mean anything. But there are some thousands of exhibitors in this country who won't need second glance to know what Vitagraph means in this ad when it says "Service: And twenty-eight 'reasons why' for Vitagraph service." Twenty-eight branch managers whose terms of service show that they are part and parcel of Vitagraph—not here today and gone tomorrow.

Three managers in continuous service over seven years, six over six years, five over five years—and so on.

One popular complaint with the average small town manager is that he never gets to know with whom he is dealing at many exchanges. "Just when the manager gets to know my desires, my territory and local conditions so that he can really help me," says the exhibitor, "he is moved on and some newcomer from the other end of the country hangs his hat in the office."

More than once we have been in exchanges where the average exhibitor's greeting was, "Well, who's the manager today?"

That doesn't make for service, nor efficiency.

And when we see a record that tells the opposite story we just naturally feel like standing up and cheering.

Got other reasons for feeling proud this week. Our daddy, the Chalmers Publishing Company, just issued the fourth edition of Richardson's Projection Handbook. One thousand pages of solid meat. A publishing monument that will stand for years in the technical field. Of interest to you if you never saw a projection machine, as a sign of the resources, strength, courage, experience and knowledge back of our plans for Moving Picture World. Even at the risk of being called shrinking violets we are going to repeat the thought in the bold face above: "Watch our smoke."

New York's weather had its first "break" in favor of the theatres last Sunday and the results showed what picture patrons are ready to do this Fall if they are tempted with real goods.

Our good old friend, the "turnaway," is back with us. And the funny part about his return to New York is the fact that he chose a week when "hold-overs" were on at every house except the Capitol, which presented Al Lichtman's "Rich Men's Wives."

"Blood and Sand," which had been achieving the miracle of beating some of the worst heat New York ever had, was opening for its third week at the Rivoli and its first at the Rialto, seven blocks south. But the early week crowds would have made you think it was the first opportunity on earth to see a long awaited production.

Joe Plunkett, of the Strand, held the First National special, "The Masquerader" over for the second week and recorded one of the biggest Sundays in the history of the house. The Capitol, we are told, showed "Rich Men's Wives" to something like 18,000 people at four full and one supper show.

The "long run" houses did their share. "The Prisoner of Zenda" recorded the best business done at the Astor at $1.50 top, with a line out afternoon and evening. "Monte Cristo" registered a sell-out at the Apollo and "Silver Wings," "Nero," and "Forget-Me-Not" all got a good play.

New York doesn't speak for the country. In this matter as well as many others. But the signs of the times were interesting. And unless all signs fail there is a hungry fan patronage just waiting the urge of cool weather and good pictures to flock back to the theatres.

Just seems as though we have to talk about ourselves in this week's boldface. Back to the Projection Handbook. The average New York film man may think a thousand page projection text book and a weekly projection department is just "one of those things." In the next breath he will probably tell you, "One of the big problems of this business is to devise more and more means of helping the small exhibitor." If he puts the two thoughts together he will probably understand the tight hold that Moving Picture World has had on thousands and thousands of small exhibitors since 1907. "Who had no other paper in their early days and need no other now." That same projection department—the only one in the field—is also doing its share to make money for the business in the big theatres by making the satisfied patrons that better projection creates.

Harry Rapf, writing from Los Angeles with a word of congratulation for our "September" campaign, adds these words:

"Let me say from where I sit that I am seeing a lot of productions made out here and intended for release during the coming season. And they are so far ahead of last year's product that you can't get too enthusiastic over what they are going to mean to the exhibitors' box offices.

"This is going to be a whale of a season because we have the pictures that will stimulate the public's interest again. You are right when you say that last year's slump was in large part due to the fact that the public got tired of the stamp and type of pictures producers were presenting. But add this thought—that the pictures being shown at pre-views out here now are certainly going to cause a revival of interest."

We can say that Harry and the Warner Brothers are doing their own share in the general good work. The latest bit of news we have is that Sidney Franklin has been engaged to direct "Brass."

That's a capture for the independent market made possible only by the Talmadges' trip to Europe and the intervening time it allowed Franklin to use his talents elsewhere.

California Theatre Owners and Exchangemen Join Hands

Plans for Betterment of Industry Are Drawn Up at Meeting

A CO-OPERATIVE convention attended by more than 150 exhibitors, exchange men, producers and supply men from the Northern California field was held at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, on August 15. Complete harmony prevailed between the various interests and definite plans were made for the immediate organization of a permanent body to embrace all branches of the business.

P. J. Hanlon, of Vallejo, called the convention to order, after the delegates had been filmed by a Pathe cameraman, and stated it had been called to bring all the elements of the business together for co-operative work. In speaking of the decrease of business he declared that the reasons had been charted by experts in the amusement field and that they had found that 35 per cent. was due to unwholesome publicty, 40 per cent. to the industrial situation, and 25 per cent. to poor productions.

A committee of three, consisting of W. W. Kofeldt, chairman, Robert McNeil and J. A. G. Schiller, was appointed to outline the order of business for the convention and while these members were absent from the room, Glen Harper, vice-president of the M. P. T. O. A. told of valuable concessions obtained for California exhibitors from the electric power companies, and advised that all theatre owners could now get a power rate for all current used in operating rooms.

The committee recommended the selection of a convention president, vice-president and secretary; the appointment of a publicity committee of two; the formation of a permanent organization to improve conditions, to combat un-American reforms, to coordinate the different branches of the business and fight adverse legislation, and the appointment of a committee to undertake campaign against widespread publicity for divorces and other sensations in the moving picture industry. It was suggested that a committee of nine be appointed to make arrangements for forming the new organization, to select a name, draw up a constitution and by-laws and plan its financing.

Frank R. Devlin, former chairman of the State Railroad Commission, and recently appointed general counsel and advisor for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Northern California, was chosen convention president; P. J. Hanlon was chosen vice-president, and Thomas D. Van Osten, secretary.

The chair at once appointed a publicity committee consisting of W. Harold Wilson and Thomas D. Van Osten, as well as a committee to call upon newspaper publishers in an effort to have them cease giving undue notoriety to picture stars. This committee consists of Charles Thall, of Associated First National; Wayland Taylor, of Famous Players, Thomas D. Van Osten and Harold Wilson.

A committee on permanent organization was appointed, as follows: W. W. Kofeldt, W. A. Crank, Morgan Walsh and E. H. Emmick, representing film exchange interests; Robert McNeil, M. L. Markowitz, H. L. Beach and T. C. Reavis, representing exhibitors, and Paul Gerson, representing producers. With the appointment of this committee the convention adjourned, but the committee at once organized by electing Morgan Walsh temporary chairman and held an open session for an hour.

Assemblyman Edgar S. Hurley, who introduced the censorship bill at the last Legislature, was called upon and explained that he had introduced the measure by request and that when he learned how widespread its effects would be he took the steps which resulted in its being tabled. Assemblyman Morris backed up the statement of his colleague, as did also Louis R. Greenfield, a prominent exhibitor of San Francisco, who had been a member of the committee sent to the State Capitol by the Allied Amusement Industries of California to secure the defeat of the censorship bill.

C. C. Griffin, of Oakland, spoke on the need of the small town exhibitor for affiliating with an effective organization and outlined some of the benefits enjoyed by members of the M. P. T. O. A.

A novelty was added in the presentation of a large cartoon by the manager of the Wigwam Theatre. This was entitled: "Watch Your Step," and represented the exhibitor, producer, director and stars, passing before the close scrutiny of a censor board.

The convention was brought to an end by a brilliant banquet in the evening at which Rupert Hughes, the author, was toastmaster. Frank R. Devlin was the guest of honor and the keynote of the speeches was harmony.

"Looks Good"

October breezes tempered the force of a warm sun last Sunday and crowds of people took advantage of the let-up in the stifling weather to attend the New York picture theatres. Packed houses were the rule Sunday evening in the neighborhood theatres as well as along Broadway. Picture men wore broad smiles. "Well," reflected one, "perhaps I have been a bit pessimistic about the future. Cool weather tonight, much business; gee it looks good!"

No More "Jazz Time"

Washington, D. C. Exhibitors Win Fight Against Daylight Saving.

The amusement interests of Washington, D. C., have won their fight against the "jazz" form of daylight saving which was inaugurated by Presidential order last June, and when the city returns to its old plan of doing business on September 5 it will be with the knowledge that the experiment will never be repeated.

Failing to secure legislation from Congress in the spring permitting the turning forward of the clocks, a conference of business men and Government officials was held as a result of which President Harding issued an order that the Government departments would open and close an hour earlier each day. The stores of the city tried the plan out at the same time, but the amusement places steadfastly refused to be a party to the agreement.

George Schmidt Dies

After an illness of several weeks, George Schmidt, manager of the Strand Theatre, Atlanta, died August 21. He was a native of New Castle, Ind., and following the funeral services his body was sent there for interment. For the past six years he had been a resident of Atlanta. He was prominent in motion picture circles and was a Shriner.

More Letters on "Show You" Month

I'LL say we agree with the editorial of your new editor," writes Milt Samis, of the California Imperial Granada and Portola Theatres, San Francisco. "We agree with him to such an extent that we are putting on the very same campaign that he is advocating for all exhibitors—and the only difference is in the wording of our slogan.

"We are letting this old town know that 'Greater Movie Season Starts on August 20.' We started out two weeks ago by teasing them a little bit on our screens, in our lobbies and with 300 three-sheets, with the words: 'It Starts August 20.' And now we are letting them in on it with automobile banners, our screens, our lobbies, our billboards and a dozen new and different ways. We are selling them the idea that they are going to see the greatest series of photoplays that have ever been released.

"Oh yes, I almost forgot two of the most important things we are doing. One of them is an edition of 30,000 de luxe booklets of sixteen pages, each designed to sell our entire organization and the first ten pictures we are to show. The other is a third of a page ad which we are running in every daily paper in San Francisco."

"In the Moving Picture World of August 12," writes C. A. McFarland, city manager of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Texas, "I read the page 'September' signed by Mr. Robert E. Welsh. I immediately tore this page from the magazine and read it again. I got several ideas from it for readers in papers as well as ads. I thought I would write you a short letter, telling you that this is one worthwhile article and you deserve a lot of credit for the idea. I only hope you will be able to help us often in the future. I am strong for such ideas as 'September.'"

Jimquin, who certainly needs no introduction, writes a short, snappy letter from California, as follows:

"If getting behind that idea doesn't prevent an encore of last September mourn, then we'd better flop on our knees and beseech everyone in the high heavens to drop their harps and come running to our rescue."

Theatre War Ended

Combination Puts End to Competition in Eastern Canada

An interesting development has taken place at Hamilton, Ontario, where announcement was made August 4 of the amalgamation of the Loew and Pantages theatres into one company, the Hamilton United Theatres, Limited, which will operate both houses jointly under one management. The move is significant in that it probably marks the end of the "war" in Eastern Canada between Marcus Loew and Alex. Pantages. The desirability of uniting the two theatres has been considered for some time, it was announced, and under the one control, it is stated, a very large saving will now be effected in operating costs. The theatres, both of which are practically new, are in the one block and there had been fierce competition. No word is yet divulged as to policies.

In the new company, Pantages interests will hold preferred and common stock amounting to $1,087,000. Loew's will hold stock to the value of $900,000. It is understood that N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation and of Regal Films, Limited, is also directly interested in the amalgamation.

Brinch Resigns

P. N. Brinch resigned from the position of manager of exchanges for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, effective August 21. Before making any new affiliations he will take a long vacation at his country home in Pelham, N. Y. Mr. Brinch has been associated with W. W. Hodkinson either directly or indirectly for thirteen years, beginning with the General Film Company.

Patterson to Marry

Miss Anna Eugene Aiken and Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta, Ga., have announced their engagement, the marriage to take place early in September.

Both are known nationally for their film work, Miss Aiken being the publisher of the Weekly Film Review, and Mr. Patterson being manager of the Metropolitan and Criterion Theatres in Atlanta.

Louisville Optimistic

Business Picking Up with Cooler Weather—Ten Cent Experiment by Savoy

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 21.—Things have been quiet of late as a result of hot weather and the vacation season, but it is reported that the business now is just a little better than it has been. Macauley's Theatre, which has been running stock all summer, closed last week and will be dark until the opening of its regular season. Incidentally, stock took well here for the first time in some years. The parks and outdoor amusement companies haven't much longer to run.

The old Buckingham Theatre, formerly a burlesque house, later the Jefferson as a picture and vaudeville house, after being dark for some months, has opened as the Savoy, with pictures and vaudeville, at 10 cents. C. B. Blake, the Blake Amusement Company, is operating the house. A musical comedy cast in minature, with eleven persons, and good music, was on the first week's bill.

New Theatre Opens

The Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., will open to the public Saturday evening, August 26. The house is under the direction of the Cataract Theatre Corporation, A. C. Hayman, president.

Less Films Censored

Year's Violations Net Pennsylvania Censors Just $370

According to the statement of the Pennsylvania Censorship Commission only twenty-six prosecutions for violations of the censorship law were recorded in the Quaker State during the year ending June 1. These violations netted the state only $370. This record compares remarkably with that of four years ago when 169 prosecutions were effected.

A material reduction in the number of subjects disapproved also was shown. Here are some of the figures embodied in the report: 4,402 original subjects and 11,282 original reels, physically examined; 10,670 subjects, including duplicates, and 17,742 reels, including duplicates, approved; 4,544 subjects and 18,336 reels modified; 29,868 eliminations, eighteen subjects, and seventy-one reels disapproved.

Total collections for the fiscal year ending June 1 were fixed at $95,638 for examination of original and duplicate reels, and $3,750 for the issue of substituted approval reels. The expenditures were itemized as follows: Contingent and travelling, $9,090.48; salaries of members, $10,200, and salaries of employes, $60,381.60.

Tax Free Music

The music department of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is sending a questionnaire to exhibitors as to the musical status of their theatres. The department says it is in a position to supply exhibitors with an excellent variety of tax free music.

On request to its offices at 132-136 W. Forty-third street, New York, it will supply exhibitors with lists, catalogues, professional copies and orchestrations.

West Coast Fire Chiefs Urge Use of a Slow-Burning Film by 1925

THE Pacific Coast Association of Fire Chiefs, which met in convention at San Francisco just before the gathering of the International Association of Fire Engineers, whose opening session was held on August 15, devoted a considerable portion of its time to a discussion of the fire menace arising from the use of the present type of moving picture film.

Resolutions were passed characterizing the film now in use as a menace to life and property and urging the adoption of a film of cellulose acetate. It called upon federal, state and municipal government to take proper steps to prohibit by law the use of nitrocellulose film on and after January 1, 1925, the date being the same as that set by Paris, France, for a similar prohibition.

The resolution included the following: "In view of the availability of a safe film, the present expensive burden of inspection, regulation and surveillance of moving picture displays placed by the moving picture industry upon public fire and safety departments is unwarranted and indefensible, and it is the moral duty of this industry to adopt at once in the production of all new pictures the exclusive use of the slow-burning film."

The Ontario Fire-Fighters Association adopted a resolution at its recent annual convention condemning the moving picture industry for not adopting slow-burning film for all picture prints.

The Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association replied that producers are anxious to use safety film but the latter is yet in its early stages of production. It was also argued that sufficient safeguards are already in use in theatres.

Frank Wentworth, of the National Fire Protection Association, was a prominent figure in the discussion and recited the history of the movement for safe film. He answered many questions as to the cause of film fires and explained the differences in degree of fire danger from various kinds of film.

"If we can get safe films into universal use," he said, "we need not worry about film fires, and every country that takes this step will help every other country to stamp out this danger."

He declared that producers would doubtless object to the adoption of the new type of film as it would cost three-quarters of a cent a foot more than the present style.

Country Becoming Aroused Against Blue Sunday Fanatics

THE fight against Blue Sunday advocates is well under way throughout the country. It is more than probable that before many days elapse the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will create a department which will make it its business to handle this campaign. In many instances the theatre men are getting the backing of the local authorities. Particularly is this true in Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Kentucky and Georgia. In fact, in many cases Ohio authorities in retaliation for the determined and repulsive insinuations made by the fanatics have put down the lid on choir singing and forced work of any sort to be stopped.

The action of the Ohio authorities in Ohio cities and towns in issuing orders making it illegal for professional choir singers to work on Sunday has aroused the fanatics. Nevertheless, this action is having the tendency of awakening some of these advocates to the absurdity of their own demands for an "absolutely quiet Sunday."

In Michigan and Minnesota the authorities, in many instances, have made it plain that if the public cannot enjoy picture entertainment at regular picture houses, the churches cannot hold entertainments of any sort on the Sabbath. This step, too, has aroused the Blue Sunday advocates there, who in a number of cases are prepared to offer compromises, but these offers are being flatly turned down by the exhibitors.

It is known that a new campaign to close every house in New Jersey will be started next month. The Governor has been served notice and replied that he will close everything, and, "of course, that means that there shall be no singing by professional choir singers, and no picture shows staged under the auspices of any church under any circumstances," he added.

In desperation the New Jersey fanatics, according to those in a position to know, will go to Trenton next winter with a resolution making it possible for churches to give motion picture entertainment for churchgoers on Sunday nights. This resolution will be vigorously opposed by the business men and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, according to President R. H. Woodhull, of Dover, N. J.

An amended answer has been filed with the Federal Trade Commission by the Northwest Theatres Company, of Missoula, Mont., named in a former complaint issued by the commission, in which it was charged with accepting mail-order catalogues for admission at the instigation of business men at Missoula and thereafter burning the same, a method of unfair competition against mail-order houses.

The Northwest Theatres Company denies that it conspired with the Chamber of Commerce, of Missoula, or with any other organization or person to hinder or prevent any person or corporation carrying on business outside Montana from selling goods upon mail orders.

If there has been any violation of Federal laws by the theatre company it has been the result of ignorance, inadvertence and mistake, the answer further states.

As Harry Brouse Sees It

Harry Brouse, First National Franchise Holder in Canada, owner of the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, herewith presents his view on the outlook for the coming season. His opinion is one of a series gathered by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Writing from the viewpoint of a Canadian. Mr. Brouse forsees an excellent season.

Read:

Present indications are that the coming season will be a great improvement over last year. All the trades unions have made long-term agreements in regard to wages and although the Civil Service bonus has been reduced, it is not thought that this will cause a difference in the average civil servant's expenditures on amusements.

I look forward with every confidence to the coming season for the above reasons and because there will be a shortage of legitimate attractions for 1923.

Conditions are gradually returning to normalcy in this territory. The better productions are attracting the public, particularly screen adaptations of widely read stories, which seems to prove that the public are displaying a greater discrimination in its selection of entertainment.

In regard to the reduction in admission prices as proposed in some Canadian territory as a stimulant to greater attendance, we find that this lowers the prestige of theatres showing the better attractions, with the resultant dropping off of their regular patronage.

Two local theatres, in which prices were reduced several months ago, are in no better position today and are contemplating a return to their usual scale. This would seem to justify our argument that the average photoplay follower will gladly pay the present scale of admission prices providing the quality of entertainment now provided is maintained or improved upon.

In our territory "The Child Thou Gavest Me" and "The Rosary" have been among our best attractions in the feature line. In comedies, Chaplin has led, with Buster Keaton and Mack Sennett also in the running. Comedies are showing an improvement. There is better production and more attention to detail.

Rescind Order

Foreign Actors Allowed to Make Films on John Bull's Soil

According to advices from London received at the New York office of Fox Film Corporation, English immigration officials have rescinded their order prohibiting Ann Forrest, the American actress, from participating in the production of the William Fox special, "If Winter Comes," exterior scenes of which are being taken near Canterbury.

Announcement of the bar placed by English authorities against the importation of foreign actors to play in pictures being made in England came in cable dispatches last week. Miss Forrest, who went to England to play "Lady Tybar" in the famous H. S. M. Hutchinson novel, fell under the ban which apparently resulted from a misconstruction of the embargo arising under a provision of the immigration act. This provision prevents the importation of any labor which Britishers are qualified to fill. Accordingly it was urged that film stars came under this prohibition and were likely to be smacked officially or placed under quarantine and then sent home.

To Sell Circuit

Arrangements Made to Dispose of Empire Chain for $650,000

Indications are now that deeds soon will pass, completing the sale of the thirteen New England moving picture theatres which were found to be among the assets of the closed Cosmopolitan Trust Company of Boston when that institution was taken over by the Bank Commissioner of Massachusetts.

The above statement officially confirms the exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World five weeks ago. Since that time every statement published exclusively by Moving Picture World relative to the situation has been confirmed.

Bank Commissioner Allen has just petitioned the Supreme Court for permission to dispose of these playhouses, known as the Empire Circuit, and is completing plans for their sale for $650,000.

The theatres, with their locations, are as follows: Strand, Portland, Me.; Strand and Premier, Newburyport, Mass.; Strand, Amesbury, Mass.; Central Square, Waltham, Mass.; Bijou, Empire, Nickelodeon, Rialto, Fall River, Mass.; Colonial, Bijou, Strand and Opera House, Newport,

The notes of the various corporations owning these theatres, the commissioner says, were among the assets of the Cosmopolitan Trust Company at the time its affairs were taken over by the State. Since that time the commissioner has acquired as collateral security all of the stock in most of the companies.

Praises Exhibitors

Australian Comes Here to Study U. S. Exhibitor Methods

A firm conviction that American exhibitor methods are the foremost in the world, attracted L. S. Snider, of Associated Theatres, Pty., Limited, to the United States and he is now on tour studying the methods which American exhibitors employ.

Besides the attractive way that pictures are "put on" here with elaborate prologues and the widespread exploitation that goes with them, Mr. Snider was profuse in his praise of the picture theatre.

Mr. Snider's organization controls thirty theatres in Melbourne and vicinity, and cooperates with the Union Theatres, Electric Theatres and J. C. Williamson Films, powerful organizations in the Antipodes. The New Malvern in Melbourne is the newest of the Associated Theatres' houses, having been built about a year ago. It has a seating capacity of 2,500, and is one of the finest moving picture theatres in Australia. J. Bryson, general manager of the Universal Exchange in Australia, is an ardent "booster" of the New Malvern, Mr. Snider says, and was so favorably impressed by the plans along which the house was built that he has a large picture of it in his office which he exhibits to visitors as Australia's most up-to-date show place.

Mr. Snider says that exhibitors never experience any trouble in Australia in locating their theatres in any neighborhood, no matter how exclusive it may be, but on the contrary the people welcome the movies with open arms and even offer special inducements for building in certain locations. The highest admission price for special run features is about 78 cents in United States money, Mr. Snider said, while the average admission price in neighborhood and suburban theatres runs from 18 to 36 to 54 cents.

Makes Counterclaim

Application to remove the trial of the suit brought by the United Artists Corporation against Malcolm D. Gibson, owner of the Mozart Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., from New York to Chemung county, where Elmira is located, was made to the New York Supreme court on behalf of Gibson.

The suit is the result of a contract made with the plaintiffs by Gibson for the exhibition of "Way Down East." Gibson alleges that the plaintiff sent him a broken, brittle and defective print which could not be used, and that the one sent in its place was no better. The result, he alleges, was that his business fell off fully one-third, wherefore he sets up a counterclaim for $3,000 damages.

Review of Tariff Bill Provisions

THE following is a review of the tariff bill as passed by the Senate on August 19, together with comparative rates as previously passed by the House, covering items of interest to the motion picture industry:

	Senate	House
Photographic cameras and parts thereof not specifically provided for	20%	30%
Photographic and moving picture films, sensitized but not exposed or developed	....	20%
Standard width of 1⅜ inches, per linear foot, other widths in proportion	4/10c.	....
Photographic film negatives, per linear foot—
Exposed but not developed	2c.	30%
Exposed and developed	3c.	30%
Positives, including prints or duplicates, per linear foot	1c.	30%
Films or negatives taken from U. S. and exposed in a foreign country by an American producer in making a picture of which 60% or more is made in U. S.	....	25%
Per linear foot	1c.	....
Electric light carbons	45%	35%
Incandescent electric lights, bulbs and lamps, with or without filaments	20%	....
Photographic and projection lenses	45%	....

All rates based on percentage are ad valorem and as provided by the Senate are to be based on foreign valuation of the commodity, while House bill provides for assessment on American valuation.

Hays' Advice Asked

Want Him to Say Which Films Are Indecent

Members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania have passed a resolution calling upon Will Hays to point out pictures that, in his opinion, are not fit to be shown, thus relieving them of the necessity of playing those pictures. The resolution, as adopted, follows:

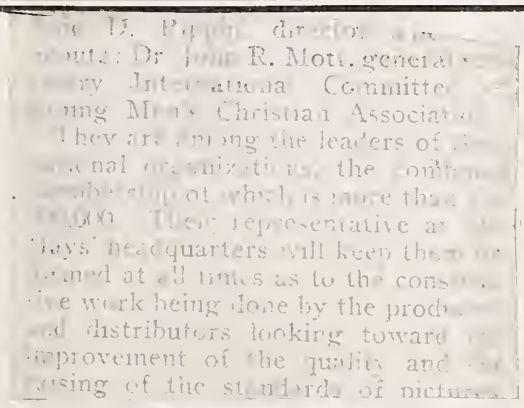
Whereas, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has in public speeches and newspaper interviews confessed that the companies represented in his association have produced and are now distributing photoplays of such a character as to be subversive of public morals, and

Whereas, Mr. Hays has stated that such pictures should not be patronized, and whereas, Mr. Hays has stated that improvement cannot be expected until next year, and whereas, the public has no means of determining which of the pictures can be patronized with propriety,

We, the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, voicing the sentiments of our membership as being unalterably opposed to the presentation of indecent pictures,

Be it Resolved, That we hereby solicit Mr. Hays, whom we appreciate as a competent judge of what is wholesome, moral and clean, to make public statements upon the pictures distributed by members of his organization, informing the public which of the pictures measure up to the standard set by him and which do not, and

Whereas, the motion picture exhibitor is compelled to buy his pictures before production and has no means of determining which of the pictures are fit to be shown, and whereas contracts contain what is known as the non-cancellable clause, be it further resolved that we hereby solicit Mr. Hays to secure for us cancellation of contracts for pictures which, in his opinion, should be condemned.



New Fuel Committee

Exhibitors Seeking to Secure Sufficient Coal for Winter

Exhibitors throughout the country are organizing local committees to cope with a possible shortage in fuel. The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, of New York and Northern New Jersey, has formed such a committee, including Billy Brandt, Louis Blumenthal, Lee Brecker and Bernard Edelherz, who during the past week were in conference with the New York Committee on Fuel, recently named by Mayor Hylan, to make an arrangement whereby the theatres would be guaranteed a reasonable quantity of fuel next season.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, through its national president, Sydney S. Cohen, is taking similar action. Through the national organization, the state units of the M. P. T. O. A. are sitting in with the fuel authorities throughout the country. While there is a threat that fuel will be scarce, the M. P. T. O. A. has been virtually assured that the theatres of the country will be properly taken care of.

Unfairness Charged

Says American Did Not Inform Public Films Were Reissues

The Federal Trade Commission has issued a formal complaint against the American Film Corporation, a Virginia corporation, with its principal office in Chicago, charging unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The complaint is very similar to that issued a few days ago in the case of the Fox Film Corporation, and deals with the re-issue of films. It refers specifically to a number of films released prior to 1919 which, during the years 1919 and 1920, were again re-issued under new titles.

The American Film Company has been given thirty days in which to file with the commission a written answer to these charges.

To Reduce Prices

A big reduction of the taxes on tickets to picture houses and "legitimate" theatres in Czechoslovakia is to be put in force beginning January 1, 1923. The present taxes are to be reduced one-half.

Establishes Branch

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who has been in Karlovy Vary, Carlsbad, recently visited Prague, Czechoslovakia, to establish a branch office of his company. Maximillian Stransky was put in charge.

Birchall Is Arrested

Charged With Conspiracy to Defraud in Chemical Stock Deal

A prominent theatre man, of Canada, was arrested at Toronto, Ontario, on August 16, when T. P. Birchall was taken into custody on a charge of alleged conspiracy to defraud, the amount involved being $60,000, it is said. Practically simultaneously with the arrest was the raid which Toronto and Montreal detectives made on Birchall's offices in Montreal when papers and documents that formed valuable evidence, it is alleged, were seized.

It is not in connection with the promotion of Loew interest that Birchall, president of Loew's Canadian Theatre, has been arrested, it is understood, but that he was wanted in connection with stock transactions for Chemical Products, Ltd., having branches in several Canadian and United States cities, including New York and Trenton, N. J. Birchall was later released on bail.

Grainger to Godsol

James R. Grainger, one of the best known men in the motion picture business, has been made personal representative of F. J. Godsol in the sales department of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, of which Mr. Godsol is president. On August 19 Mr. Grainger started on a tour which will take him to every important picture center in the country.

Mr. Grainger has been general representative for Marshall Neilan, who is now making pictures in association with Goldwyn. Also, he has represented the Hearst interests in their association with Famous Players and in addition has represented Charlie Chaplin.

To Hold Convention

The Theatre Owners' and Managers' Association of Oklahoma, will hold its annual convention at the Skirvin Hotel, Oklahoma City, September 7 and 8. A large attendance is expected. Ralph Talbot is president of the association.

Musicians Win

The wage scale of Chicago musicians for the coming year was settled last week at a conference between theatre owners and the representatives of the Chicago Federation of Musicians at the office of Jones, Linick and Schaefer. The musicians were successful in obtaining their demand for a continuation of the present wage scale.

Managers of picture theatres outside the loop district declare that the high wage scale keeps scores of theatres from installing orchestras, and assert that while the union cannot be successfully combatted, it is defeating its own purpose by keeping men out of work through the demand for excessive wages for some instead of reasonable wages for all.

To Open September 4

The Eastman Theatre, of the University of Rochester first University owned and University operated theatre in America, has officially announced its opening for Monday, September 4. The vast $5,000,000 educational experiment under the guise of a picture palace, will get under way on that day with no special formalities to mark the premiere.

Two days preceding the official opening, on Saturday, September 2, there will be a big gathering of celebrities of the motion picture world, musical and theatrical activities and the realm of higher education, to view the structure and its equipment.

The opening feature will be the Metro production, 'The Prisoner of Zenda." The Fox News Service will be used as an exclusive feature at this house.

Asks for Extension

Allen Theatres Wants More Time to Settle Claims

An application is at present before the judge in bankruptcy at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, Ontario, in behalf of Allen Theatres, Ltd., asking for an official extension over several years to enable the bankrupt company to attempt a recovery instead of selling to another picture corporation.

This announcement has been made at Toronto by G. T. Clarkson, official receiver and assignee of the Allen Theatres. He declared that there was some objection on the part of minority shareholders of the company to the proposed extension of time for the settling of claims against the Allen company.

The judge in bankruptcy has been called upon to decide whether the proposed extension should be granted or not, or whether the assets of the Allen Theatres should be sold to the other corporation for $850,000. The other corporation is presumably the Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

No Toronto Merger

There will be no merger of the Loew and Pantages theatres in Toronto, according to an announcement made in that city on August 10. The amalgamation of the two theatres in Hamilton, which is only forty-five miles from Toronto, does not affect any other houses on either the Pantages or Loew circuits in Canada, it was pointed out.

Separate companies are organized for each theatre in the respective cities, the Toronto Pantages Theatre being owned and operated by a company known as Eastern Theatres, Ltd. The Hamilton Pantages was operated by the Hamilton Theatres, Ltd., before it was merged with the Loew interests into the Hamilton United Theatres, Ltd.

Set Convention Date

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners, of Iowa and Nebraska, will hold their annual convention in Omaha, Neb., September 18, 19 and 20. The Ak-Sar-Ben pageant and festival will be held in that city on the same dates. Invitations to the convention have been sent to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A., and Will Hays.

Lester S. Tobias, formerly with Famous Players and Realart, has joined Universal in New Haven as special representative for Special Attractions.

Representatives of 11,000,000 Start Work With Film Industry.

As a result of a meeting held June 22 last at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria between Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and about 100 representatives of national civic, religious, educational and welfare organizations, a definite plan of co-operation has been effected between those who make the pictures and those who are interested in better pictures because of their effect upon the people of the nation. A resolution of confidence in the producers was adopted.

A body of men and women whose names are well known in welfare work of various sorts throughout the country have organized, have prepared to go to work, and have chosen as executive officer, at the invitation of the producers and distributors, whom they have assigned to duty in Mr. Hays' office. Colonel Jason S. Joy, formerly executive secretary of the American Red Cross, is the man selected, and he has already assumed his duties.

The plan of co-operation is:

The establishment of a channel of inter-communication between the agencies instrumental in forming and interpreting public opinion and the industry.

The increased use of motion pictures as a force for citizenship and a factor in social benefit.

The development of more intelligent co-operation between the public and the industry.

The aiding of the co-operative movement instituted between the National Education Association and the producers to direct the making of pedagogic films and their effective employment in the schools.

The encouragement of the effort to advance the usefulness of pictures as an instrument of international amity, by correctly portraying American life, ideals and opportunities in pictures sent abroad, and the proper portrayal of foreign scenes and persons in all productions. The furtherance, in general, of all constructive methods of bringing about a sympathetic interest in attaining and maintaining high standards of art, entertainment, education and morals in pictures.

The men and women who signed the resolutions and declaration of purposes are: Mrs. Oliver Harriman, president Camp Fire Girls; Mrs. George M. Minor, president-general Daughters of the American Revolution; Harold S. Braucher, secretary Community Service, Inc., and Playground & Recreation Assn. of America; Mrs. Woodallen Chapman, chairman committee on Motion Pictures, General Federation of Women's Clubs; Hugh Frayne, The American Federation of Labor; James West, chief scout executive, The Boy Scouts of Americt.

Lee F. Hanmer, director, Department of Recreation, Russell Sage Foundation; Charles A. McMahon, editor National Catholic Welfare Council Bulletin; Rev. F. Ernest Johnson, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; Harold Ross, editor American Legion Weekly; Mrs. Robert E. Spear, president Young Women's Christian Association; Mrs. Jane D. Rippin, director The Girl Scouts; Dr. John R. Mott, general secretary International Committee of Young Men's Christian Association.

They are among the leaders of their national organizations, the combined membership of which is more than 11,000,000. Their representative at Mr. Hays' headquarters will keep them informed at all times as to the constructive work being done by the producers and distributors looking toward the improvement of the quality and the raising of the standards of pictures. He will also keep Mr. Hays informed of the aims and activities of the organizations he represents and of the co-operative efforts.

Eddie Laemmle Ill

Production work on the part of the company sent to Europe by Universal for the production of "Castle Craneycrow," has been delayed by the illness of Edward Laemmle, the director. Harry Myers, the star, has been recalled to Universal City temporarily, and has just arrived in New York from Berlin. He is accompanied by Tenny Wright and David Stumar, Universal cameramen.

Young Laemmle is now undergoing hospital treatment in the German capital. It will be many weeks before he is ready to take up his production plans again. He is suffering from a blood affection brought on by overwork and nervous strain.

Two Men Killed

C. R. Freeland and H. J. Johnston Meet Violent Deaths

Two motion picture men widely known in the Southwest died violent deaths in the Dallas territory on Sunday, August 13.

Charles R. Freeland, well-known among the younger generation of Southwest picture men, was struck by a Southern Pacific train near Lordsburg, N. M., Saturday night and died of his injuries early Sunday morning.

Howard J. Johnston, 24 years old, widely known as theatre organist, and who until recently was on the musical staff of the Hope Theatre, was shot six times in the abdomen at noon Saturday in a room at the Southland Hotel, Dallas. He died early Sunday morning. Charges of murder were filed against C. T. Harp, cotton buyer, and J. E. Hamilton, druggist, of Waxahachie, Texas, following his death.

Mr. Freeland was until recently assistant manager of the Old Mill, Queen and Palace Theatres in Dallas, and was returning to Dallas after some time passed in California in search of health. He was driving an Overland and apparently failed to see or hear the train that hit his car. He was buried in Dallas, with a number of Southern Enterprise men acting as pallbearers.

Annual Outing Held

The first annual outing of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, was held Monday and Tuesday, August 20 and 21, at Atlantic City, N. J. The program for the two days included many enjoyable events, among which was a banquet at the Alamac Hotel, where Harry Latz, manager of the Alamac Hotels at Atlantic City and Lake Hopatcong, N. J., announced his engagement to a well-known theatrical star.

Maigne's Salary Held

Justice Lydon of the New York Supreme Court has signed an order restraining the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from paying Charles Maigne, a director of the company, all or any part of his $600 weekly salary.

The order was obtained by Michael Bell, of New York, whose infant daughter, it is alleged, was run over and killed by Maigne's automobile in November, 1919, and a jury in Justice Donnelly's part of the Supreme Court in April, 1921, awarded the father of the girl $2,500 damages, which he has been unable to collect owing to the absence of Maigne from this city.

Standing Stars

Wyndham Standing is the star of "The Isle of Doubt," a six-reel feature which Playgoers Pictures announces for release September 10. This picture, which was adapted from the well-known novel by Derek Bram, is said to combine the appeal of a high-class society drama with the adventure and lure of the tropics. Its story is characterized by a strong element of surprise throughout, and is made doubly interesting by unexpected twists and turns of the plot.

New Jack Pickford Film Finished

All the camera work has been completed on Jack Pickford's "Garrison's Finish," his first photoplay for early autumn release by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation. "Garrison's Finish" is Jack Pickford's first independent production, and he plays the role of Billy Garrison, the all-square jockey who is double-crossed by another rider, but who eventually wins out and comes under the wire a winner. The story is from W. B. M. Ferguson's novel of the same title. The scenario was prepared by Elmer Harris, with Mary Pickford supervising. Madge Bellamy plays the role of Sue Desha, daughter of a Kentucky breeder, whose intuition tells her Garrison is innocent of throwing an important race. There is action and thrills all through the picture. The race track scenes are said to rank high.

"Garrison's Finish" was directed by Arthur Rosson, with the photography by Garold Rosson. Others in the supporting cast are Charles A. Stevenson, Tom Guise, Frank Elliott, Clarence Burton, Ethel Grey Terry, Audrey Chapman, Dorothy Manners, Herbert Prior, Charles Ogle and Lydia Knott.

Terriss in England Making Film

Tom Terriss, who went to England after making "Find the Woman" for Cosmopolitan, is at work in London making "The Harbor Lights," a famous melodrama that ranks high among the many successes of similar name that have gone to make the fame of the old Drury Lane Theatre.

Arrangements for the release of this picture, which is the only one Terriss will make under that contract, will not be made until the picture is completed. Following "The Harbor Lights," Terriss has arranged for a series of pictures that will be released in this country through one of the recognized companies, according to a contract that was signed before Terriss sailed.

Fox Spends Large Sums for Stories

From the indications of last year and the announcements for the immediate future it is apparent that William Fox looms as one of the heaviest buyers of the motion picture fiction in the market, it is stated.

The Fox Corporation believes in the soundness of this policy. The expenses of production in these days are so heavy that to purchase a story or play that has already met with popular approval means a guaranteed success to the motion picture exhibitor, Fox says. One of the prominent officials of the Fox Film Corporation expressed it as follows:

"In the motion picture field the greatest economy for the purchaser of motion pictures and the motion picture theatre is for the original maker to offer his market the very best regardless of the momentary expense. What is the best, and what is it that will prove most successful? The answer to this will make a fortune for any showman just as it has made the success of the Fox Film Corporation—but by what test can we know what is going to be the best, most successful and most popular? One answer is, by avoiding useless experiments—for which the motion picture theatre owner must ultimately pay the bills.

"It is obvious that stories and plays that have already proven their success before audiences of hundreds of thousands of people are the best guarantees to the motion picture exhibitor that he is going to get a proven sure-fire success to offer his screen audiences — a certainty of success that remove as far as is possible the risks of the show business.

"Upon this theory the Fox Film Corporation has been one of the most extensive buyers of best sellers and most popular stories during the past year. The Fox preliminary announcements for the forthcoming year emphasize the fact that Fox is one of the most lavish spenders for successful fiction and dramatic rights for motion picture purposes that have so far developed in the motion picture field."

Striking Ads for "Nanook of North"

At the beginning of the second week of the run of the Pathe special, "Nanook of the North," at the Alhambra Theatre, Los Angeles, the double-column display advertising in local newspapers startlingly reflected the theatre management's sentiments regarding the great Eskimo epic. Pictures of the Eskimo baby actor's "Smile from the North," and of the hero, Nanook's, hand-to-hand-struggle with one of his half famished sledge-dog pack "huskies," were printed with such expressions as these:

"Flaherty did it! Gosh! What a picture! But wait till you see 'Nanook of the North,' held over for a second and unalterably final week at the Alhambra.

"Away up North, a thousand miles from civilization, where a heaved brick would hit the North Pole, where it is so cold and dismal that even the sun shivers, an Irishman by the name of Flaherty—Robert J. Flaherty, F. R. G. S.—made a picture with no studio or laboratory, not even one picture actor, under heart-breaking conditions, and still a picture raved over by the theatre's severest critics."

Four Comic Stars in Metro Picture

Comedy, which all producers of motion pictures strive so diligently to put into their productions, is not to be lacking in the Metro S-L special production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," which is being filmed for Metro under the direction of Clarence G. Badger.

There are four outstanding comedy characters in this famous Charles Fulton Pidgin story. Maintaining the standard of the rest of the cast selected for this picture, four male comedians, each a star in his own right, have been assembled by Arthur Sawyer. They are Hank Mann, Billy Franey, Harry Depp and Victor Potel.

These four comedy players add materially to the already notable cast signed, which includes Blanche Sweet, John Bowers, Barbara La Marr, Lon Chaney, Claire McDowell, Elmo Lincoln, Louise Fazenda, Joseph Dowling, Gale Henry, Edward Connelly, Kate Loster, Harry Davenport, June Elvidge and Millie Davenport. The scenario was written by Bernard McConville.

Film Honored

The new $5,000,000 Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., has chosen as the attraction for its opening some time in September, Rex Ingram's production for Metro of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

This booking amounts to testimony to the effect that this picture is the most excellent available. The Eastman Theatre, built for the city of Rochester by the Eastman family, has for its prime purpose the presentation of the best in pictures. The screen of this playhouse will reflect photoplays chosen on their artistic merits alone, irrespective of returns.

"One Clear Call" Is Drawing Crowds

"One Clear Call," Louis B. Mayer's latest John M. Stahl special, is not only proving a spectacular box-office success, but is being held over for two weeks in many one week run houses, according to reports on the production received by Associated First National Pictures.

It was the first picture this year to play two weeks in Jensen and Von Herberg's Columbia Theatre, Portland, Oregon; in San Francisco it held the same distinction with a two weeks' showing at Turner and Dahnken's Tivoli Theatre; and in the leading Jensen and Von Herberg Theatre in Seattle, "One Clear Call" was held over for a second week by popular demand.

All of these theatres did a big business, with the evening shows packed and a record-breaking matinee attendance in spite of the hot weather conditions.

"Monte Cristo" in Fox List

Heading the list of releases by Fox Film Corporation for the week of August 28 is "Monte Cristo," the special production which opened an indefinite run at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York City, Monday, August 14.

"Monte Cristo" was directed by Emmett J. Flynn, who also directed "A Fool There Was," of the 1922-23 season's schedule, and "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," of last year's Fox program of specials.

The Charles Jones release is "West of Chicago," a romantic story of the Western plains. It is from the pen of George Scarborough and was directed by Scott Dunlap and C. R. Wallace. Three comedies and a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon complete the program of the week.

"Rejuvenation" Now Being Cast

What is expected to be one of the most pretentious of the fall releases of American Releasing Corporation is an ambitious production by Lambert Hillyer of Cyrus Chapin's original story, "Rejuvenation," a story which parallels the rejuvenation of a man and a great city following the San Francisco fire of 1906.

It is a San Francisco and Oakland story which is to be photographed in those cities. The producer is Overland Productions, which has taken over the plant of the Stewart Motion Picture Company in Oakland. Mr. Hillyer is now casting the production and has, to date, definitely engaged Jack Mulhall, Bessie Love, Henry Walthall and Tully Marshall.

Aids Neilan

Hobart Bosworth, well-known stage and screen star, after considerable negotiations and purely through his friendship for Marshall Neilan, has held up his own productions in San Francisco and gone to Los Angeles to play the part of Shane Butler Keogh in "The Strangers' Banquet," Mr. Neilan's first production in association with Goldwyn, thereby completing and strengthening one of the most noteworthy picture casts of the year.

With Universal

Ralph Graves has been engaged by Universal to portray an important role in "The Jilt," an all-star picture which Irving Cummings is directing. "The Jilt" is a Saturday Evening Post Story scenarioized by Arthur Statter.

First Place Claimed for Cosmopolitan Production

What Cosmopolitan Productions claims is the most magnificent motion picture ever filmed, from the greatest love story ever told—"When Knighthood Was in Flower"—in which Marion Davies is starred, has just been completed.

The producing company says that not only is it the most beautiful of film productions, but that it cost more money than any other, the total expense being nearly $1,500,000.

It is said the set was the largest ever constructed, covering more than two city blocks. 3,000 actors, including 55 principals, appeared. In spite of the magnitude of the production it was filmed in the short space of 160 working days.

It is stated by Cosmopolitan that other producers have long had "When Knighthood Was in Flower" in mind for a motion picture, but that the large expense has held them back from attempting it. Mary Pickford had, however, according to Cosmopolitan, attempted to obtain the rights to film the picture, but had failed. There was a good deal to be accomplished before the rights were gained by Cosmopolitan, it is said, as they were claimed in part by Julia Marlowe, who presented the play on the speaking stage, and the widow of Charles Major also demanded recognition.

After long negotiations the claim of Mrs. Major was satisfied, and the actual rights were purchased from Miss Marlowe. Then Cosmopolitan began the big task of research and other details which were necessary in the production of this picture.

The story is staged in the time of Henry VIII., of England, when the English court was noted for its magnificence and picturesqueness. It was necessary to choose a director whose work had put him in the forefront of his profession, and Robert G. Vignola was obtained. Joseph Urban, who decorated palaces and built bridges in Europe before he became affiliated with Cosmopolitan Productions, was put in charge of the work of recreating the settings of the magnificient English court, and the Court of France, which at that time was also noted for its grandeur, as well as the scenes which surrounded the middle and poorer classes in the English metropolis.

Among the scenes is the famous tower of London, where the English knight, Brandon, with whom Princess Mary, daughter of the English king planned to elope, narrowly escaped being beheaded. Also is shown the tournament, in which many armed knights took part, in honor of the birthday fete of Princess Mary. The costuming of the noble ladies who were present at the tournament, as well as the men of the period, formed a difficult part in the production of the picture. It was also necessary to train a number of men in the art of swordsmanship so that they could adequately portray the gallants of the time in which the story is laid. Among those who took part, both as teachers and as actors, in the film were two German barons, and one French and one Italian count, all with records as duelists.

More than 3,000 costumes were in use at one time. One of particular magnificence was Princess Mary's wedding dress, which she wore to be married to the King of France. The dress was of silvercloth, ermine and pearls, and weighed 25 pounds.

"The Christian" Now Being Edited

The last scenes for Goldwyn's picturization of Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Christian," have been taken by Director Maurice Tourneur after several nights of work with mobs to supplement the big mob scenes taken in London last June.

The editing has already been begun under the direct supervision of Paul Bern, Goldwyn's editor-in-chief, and of the director. A complete print of the photoplay will be sent to Sir Hall Caine in London immediately after the assembling and editing is finished and the author will, himself, write the titles for it.

At the Capitol

Irene Castle's latest Hodkinson picture, "Slim Shoulders," will be given its premiere at the Capitol Theatre in New York during the week beginning September 3, with an Irene Castle Fashion Promenade prologue, in which thousands of dollars' worth of newly imported gowns from Paris will be featured.

F. B. O. Announces a Diversified Program

Ten pictures that have been christened the "box office ten" have been announced by the Film Booking Offices of America as their contribution to the campaign for a prosperous fall season. These pictures include the output of a majority of the stars who are now busy at the R-C studios in California, and will form the bulk of the F. B. O. early fall product.

The F. B. O. box office ten will start the newly-named organization on its first big season with an impetus which, it is said, is expected to place it among the leaders of the industry. These pictures will, it is stated, afford the exhibitor a variety of entertainment which will range from light comedy drama to tense drama. Each of them has been made with an eye to box office success, accordng to reports, and from the period of the conception of the story to the filming of the last scene, the exploitation possibilities of the production as a supplement to the entertainment values have been carefully kept in mind. And as a result the name "box office ten" has been applied to them.

Naming these in the order of release they are: "In the Name of the Law," an Emory Johnson production, which, it is said, has already made clean-ups in New York, Detroit, Los Angeles and many other cities. "The Kick-Back," a Harry Carey production, is the second. Following these are "The Snowshoe Trail," a Chester Bennett production, starring Jane Novak; "Wreckage," the working title of the first Robert Thornby production; "The Three Cornered Kingdom," starring Ethel Clayton; "When Love Comes of Age," Helen Jerome Eddy's first starring vehicle; "Captain Fly By Night," starring Johnnie Walker; "Good Men and True," the second Harry Carey production; "Thelma," another Jane Novak starring vehicle, from Marie Corelli's novel, and "The Remittance Woman," starring Ethel Clayton.

Cooley Engaged

Hal Cooley has been engaged by Myron Selznick for one of the principal parts in the support of Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle in "One Week of Love."

Carter Signs

Douglas Carter, the colored comedian, has signed a contract with the Selznick Company.

Finish "Tess"

After fourteen weeks of work, Mary Pickford has completed her new version of "Tess of the Storm Country," the Grace Miller White story. Present indications are that the film will be in not more than seven reels. It probably will be ready for United Artists release by October 1. The direction has been under the guidance of John S. Robertson, with Charles Rosher at the camera. In the cast are Lloyd Hughes, Gloria Hope, Forrest Robinson, David Torrence, Jean Hersholt, Danny Hoy and Mme. de Bodamere.

In filming the play twenty sets were built, thirteen of which were interiors. Only four locations were used.

Flynn Is Making New Fox Picture

Emmett J. Flynn, who directed "A Fool There Was" and "Monte Cristo," two Fox specials for the season of 1922-23, has begun work on "Without Compromise" the next William Farnum vehicle, with an exceptionally notable cast of artists, according to word from the West Coast Studios of Fox Film Corporation.

The picture, which will be a screen adaptation of the widely read story by George Hubbard and Lillian Bennett-Thompson, which was purchased by William Fox prior to his departure for Europe, will be the first Farnum has made at the Hollywood center in over a year and a half.

Before being transferred to the West Coast, Farnum completed "Moonshine Valley" at the New York studios under the direction of Herbert Brenon, who is now engaged in the production of "Penzie," another Fox special with Mary Carr. "Moonshine Valley," which is from the scenario by Mary Murillo will be released August 27, and marks the return of the virile movie hero to the open-shirted, rugged roles for which he has become famous.

In his latest picture, Mr. Farnum is afforded all the propitious situations and characters necessary for the best exhibition of his varied talents, it is said. Rights to another story by the authors of "Without Compromise" have been acquired by the Fox organization, but so far, the star has not been named.

"Day Dreams" Title of Keaton Film

"Day Dreams" is the title of Buster Keaton's latest two-reel comedy. The picture was produced by Joseph M. Schenck, and will be released through Associated First National. Eddie Cline directed, with Virginia Fox and Joe Roberts in the supporting cast.

"Adam and Eva" Is Under Way

Cosmopolitan Productions has commenced filming the outdoor scenes of "Adam and Eva," with Marion Davies as the star, at the picturesque Merrybrook Farm, belonging to Dr. Herbert T. Morris, near Stamford, Conn. T. Roy Barnes plays the modern Adam to the up-to-date Eva of Marion Davies.

Noah Beery Added to "Omar" Cast

Richard Walton Tully has added Noah Beery to the cast of "Omar the Tentmaker," a First National attraction, in which Guy Bates Post is the star. Mr. Beery will be seen in the role of the Shah.

His part in Post's support will, it is said, give him an opportunity for a new characterization.

Ad Campaign

Inspiration Pictures, Inc., which makes the Richard Barthelmess productions, distributed by Associated First National, through its president, Charles H. Duell, Jr., announces that within a few weeks it will begin a smashing national advertising campaign on Barthelmess, already one of the most popular male stars on the screen.

The campaign, which is being handled by Felix Feist, opens with a page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post. This will be devoted to the latest Barthelmess' picture, "The Bondboy." Then will follow a poster campaign to take in one-fourth of the billboards in the United States. Following that will come a magazine and newspaper advertising campaign.

WHAT 117 EXHIBITORS HAVE SAID OF

Ruth Roland

in

"The Timber Queen"

Produced by RUTH ROLAND SERIALS, Inc.
Supervised by HAL. E. ROACH

117 exhibitors, men who know serials, show them and make money with them, have taken the trouble to write us, through our various exchanges, with reference to "The Timber Queen"

They all say this: "'The Timber Queen' is the best serial I have ever seen!"

What 117 exhibitors have voluntarily and enthusiastically praised, is something for you to look at and seriously consider, Mr. Exhibitor.

A censor-proof serial, vivid, thrilling, brilliant, beautiful, with a real story, star and cast.

Better Than Good

According to Published Reports From Exhibitors Themselves

The Isle of Zorda

From Jules Verne's Celebrated Novel, "Mathias Sandorf"

IN the July 8th issue of the Motion Picture News there is published a chart of features with exhibitors' reports concerning these pictures, on a percentage valuation. 20% is Poor, 40% Fair, 50% Average, 70% Good and 100% Big on this chart, and the exhibitors' own rating is given each picture.

"The Isle of Zorda" receives on this chart 13 reports; the entertainment rating is given as 72% and the box office value as 72%.

There are 207 features listed. Only 41 average 70% or better.

"The Isle of Zorda," gentlemen, is better than Good by your own judgment. Better than 80% of the current features!

No wonder! It is so different as to be distinctive; so different that it is refreshing; so beautiful as to be a marvel. The public has tired of the sameness in features.

Give them "The Isle of Zorda."

Educationals Get Off to Big Start

Enthusiastic praise from critics and quick bookings from big first run houses in all parts of the country are greeting the earliest pictures in Educational's 1922-1923 program of short subjects as they become available for release or for pre-release private reviews.

A real sensation, it is said, is being created by the Earl Hurd Comedies, the single-reel novelties presented by C. C. Burr, in which Mr. Hurd is combining "shots" of real actors with animated cartoons in a manner than leaves the audience guessing as to how it is done. There are to be six pictures in this series.

While "One Ol' Cat" is running simultaneously at the Rivoli and Strand Theatres in New York the week of August 20, the second picture of the series, "Fresh Fish," is in its second week at the Strand. It is the third week for "One Ol' Cat" at the Rivoli.

The reception given "Look Out Below" speaks well for the success of the new series of Mermaid Comedies started by Jack White with this picture. "One of the most distinctive burlesque comedies in many months," writes James W. Dean, of Newspaper Enterprise Association. He also lauds "That Son of a Sheik," the first of the new Christie Comedy series.

"The First Barber" is the first of the Tony Sarg Almanacs to be released by Educational. Typical of the comments on this highly amusing one-reel picture is that in Moving Picture World, which says:

"The person who will not be moved to laughter by this first Tony Sarg's Almanac for Educational release ought to be psycho-analyzed. It is a one-reel gem of humor. The whole is a delightful conceit."

Another new series to be distributed by Educational is the Hamilton Comedy group, starring Lloyd Hamilton. This first picture, "The Speeder," has been completed and will soon be ready for preview and showing to exhibitors at the branches.

The photograph shows the departure of the seaplane voyagers now en route from New York to Rio de Janeiro. Public interest is enhanced a hundred fold by the fact that a motion picture record of the flight is being made for exclusive screening in the semi-weekly issues of Pathe News under the breezy and appropriate title of "The Log of the SC-1." J. Thomas Baltzell, of the Pathe News camera staff, is shown receiving "bon voyage" from his chief, Emmanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News.

Rex Ingram at Work Instead of Resting

Giving Rex Ingram, director of "The Prisoner of Zenda," a vacation is like giving a squirrel a nut, Metro says. He takes it and saves it for some other time.

Not since the completion of his first big Metro photoplay, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," has Mr. Ingram taken a rest. On the heels of "The Four Horsemen" came the direction of "The Conquering Power," "Turn to the Right," "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Trifling Women," his own story. After this his schedule called for the staging of a vacation.

But instead of this the young director came East, accompanied by Alice Terry, his wife, and Colonel Starrett Ford, production manager, and immediately set to working out scenario, plans for settings, arrangements for locations for his next screen play, "The Passion Vine," based on John Russell's vivid short-story of the South Seas. On the train he mapped out his script; and since arriving in New York his only relaxation has been a week-end visit to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Z. Leonard at their home in Great Neck. Mrs. Robert Z. Leonard is known on the screen as Mae Murray. Odd intervals of time Mr. Ingram has filled by reading stories, plays and scenarios for future pictures.

The two principal parts in "The Passion Vine," Mr. Ingram announced this week at the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation in New York, will be taken by Alice Terry and Ramon Navarro, who have roles of similar importance in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Harold Lloyd at New York's Strand

Declaring it to be "the film treat of the year," Joseph Plunkett, managing director, has selected the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors super-attraction, "Grandma's Boy," produced by Hal Roach, as the feature for Labor Day week at the Mark-Strand Theatre, New York City.

After booking this picture, following a preview several months ago, Mr. Plunkett tentatively selected either September 3 or 10 for the opening of the New York run. In his desire to secure the greatest possible drawing card for the holiday week he has now decided definitely on the earlier date, to the disappointment of sponsors of a number of other offerings, who hoped to enjoy the impetus of the Labor Day vacation.

Mr. Plunkett is arranging an elaborate prologue to introduce Lloyd's first five-part picture, whose phenomenal success already has stamped it as a photoplay sensation of the year. The exact nature of this he declines to reveal, but he promises that it will be thoroughly in keeping with the importance of the picture. Members of Mr. Plunkett's staff decorated the Strand lobby with stills and a huge portrait of the star more than a week ago.

Crandall Named

President Arthur S. Kane announces the appointment of Jean J. Crandall, of Washington, as field manager of Associated Exhibitors, and Mr. Crandall has entered upon his new duties at once.

"Hansel and Gretel" Sets Fine

Under the supervision of Julius and Abe Stern, Tom O'Neil, Century's technical director, has built some of the finest sets in his career for Century's third fairy tale, "Hansel and Gretel." Three large sets, consisting of the exterior of the witches' candy house, the interior of the candy house and the home of the children are especially worthy of notice.

The furniture in one set is entirely made of little pebbles and consumed two and a half weeks to make. Six men worked under O'Neil evolving these quaint and unique props. The candy house also was built from old illustrations and Century's research department took every pain to make it accurate.

Vignola Will Direct "Adam and Eva"

Having completed "When Knighthood Was in Flower," the twelve-reel special, starring Marion Davies, for Cosmopolitan, Robert G. Vignola will this week begin work on his next Cosmopolitan special, "Adam and Eva," from the stage success of the same name, by Guy Bolton and George Middleton. Miss Davies will be starred.

The settings will be designed by Joseph Urban. The players include Tom Lewis, Louella Gear, Leon Gordon, William Norris, T. Roy Barnes, Amy Ongley, William Davidson and Edward Douglas.

Florence Vidor in "Dusk to Dawn"

"Something absolutely new" is the promise Associated Exhibitors has been making in its preliminary announcements of "Dusk to Dawn," the current Florence Vidor release. The new feature is to be out August 27. Based on Katherine Hill's widely discussed novel, "The Shuttle Soul," with its stirring situations and its exotic touches, this photoplay has given the star fine opportunities.

Leah Baird Picture Now Booking

Torrid weather has had almost no effect on the bookings of "When Husbands Deceive," with Leah Baird, according to Associated Exhibitors, who released the feature August 20. Many first run exhibitors are now signing contracts for the picture in order to give it an early place on their fall programs.

One of the first of these was Edward Reed, who has just announced his intention to offer this as the feature attraction at his Strand, the largest picture theatre in Providence, R. I., the week of Sept. 4.

"Loves of Pharaoh" for August

Paramount announces as its release for August 28, "The Loves of Pharaoh." This picture is presented by the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation and features an all-star cast, among which are included the pick of European screen artists, it is stated. It was directed by Ernest Lubitsch, whose "Deception" and "Passion" are well-known.

Paramount is authority for the statement that an entire Egyptian city, containing more than fifty massive buildings, was constructed for the filming of this picture.

Many thousand people are seen in the spectacular battle scenes between the Egyptians and the invading Ethiopians. Emil Jannings, seen as the English king in "Deception," gives an even more remarkable performance, it is said, in the role of Pharaoh Amenes.

Has Selected Cast of "Merry Go Round"

Erich von Stroheim has completed the selection of a cast for "Merry Go Round," his next Universal-Jewel production, and expects to start "shooting" in a few days. The entire construction force at Universal City is working night and day, building the bizarre sets depicting Vienna's celebrated pleasure park, the Prator, and other Viennese scenes, to be used in this feature picture of Austrian romance and adventure.

The cast engaged by von Stroheim will not be heralded as "all star," but will be offered as an interesting group of players who are either possessed of unusual ability or are particularly adapted to their roles, Universal says.

Norman Kerry and Mary Philbin are to have the outstanding parts. Wallace Berry, a favorite "heavy," and Dale Fuller, who played in "Foolish Wives," will be seen as creatures of the Prater. Several others who contributed their best to "Foolish Wives" will again be seen in "Merry Go Round."

George Hackathorne, who did admirable work in Universal's "Human Hearts," and other productions, has been given the difficult role of a hunchback in "Merry Go Round." Fay Holderness, who was in "Blind Husbands," will also appear.

"Blood and Sand" Sets New Records

Paramount's Fred Niblo production, "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentino, continued its record-breaking performance at the New York Rivoli throughout the second week of its run. The first week it grossed both in attendance and receipts more than any other picture in the history of the house, 62,344 people paying $37,006.42 to see it.

Starting its second week on Sunday, August 14, when the picture grossed nearly $200 more than on its opening day a week previous, by closing Monday the total receipts had topped all previous records for the first two days of a second week of a run at that house by more than $3,600. The previous second-week record for that period was held by George Fitzmaurice's production, "Experience." Incidentally, the Monday receipts far exceeded those for any other picture on a second Monday at either the Rivoli or the Rialto.

The daily record for a second week was broken every day without interruption to the end of the week and when the figures were totalled it was found that "Blood and Sand" not only had beaten the second-week record, held by "Beyond the Rocks," by $6,244.32, but had also exceeded the best previous record at the Rialto.

Lavishly Praise "The Masquerader"

Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader," a First National attraction, was praised lavishly by newspaper critics when it opened there at the Chicago Theatre. "The Masquerader" is proving a powerful box-office attraction in Chicago, just as it did at the Strand Theatre, New York, where it was held over for a second week. Here is what the Chicago critics had to say:

Carl Sandburg in the Daily News —The acting of Guy Bates Post and his supporting cast in this picture, as well as the direction and swiftness of narrative, makes it an out-of-the-ordinary specimen of silver sheet thespics.

Rob Reel in the Evening American —"The Masquerader" at the Chicago marks Guy Bates Post's debut on the screen. His stage presentation of this play was wonderful; his film performance is beyond description.

Observer in the Herald and Examiner—"The Masquerader" is one of this year's screen classics. Merit and quality characterize it from beginning to end. Guy Bates Post's playing is masterful.

Caroline Fro in the Tribune—Here is a picture it is a pleasure to recommend. It is the best thing I have seen on the screen for a long time. It is pictures like "The Masquerader" that justify the motion picture industry.

Genevieve Harris in the Evening Post—"The Masquerader" is a thoroughbred among film plays. It has manner, distinction, that something which we may sum up in the language of the day as "class." Acting of the finest quality is to be found in this picture.

Pathe Releases for September 3

"His Own Law," of "The Range Rider Series," with Leo Maloney, leads the schedule of short subjects which Pathe announces for release on September 3. Episode No. 8 of "The Timber Queen," called "The Smugglers' Cave," is included. "Wet Weather," with Paul Parrott, is the Hal Roach comedy release.

The Aesop's Film Fable is "Fearless Fido," the moral being "You can't keep a good man down." The Harold Lloyd re-issue is called, "Off the Trolley." Pathe Review No. 171 shows a picturesque storm in "Photographic Gems" and has other features.

Pathe Preparedness With Product Equals Season's Bright Promise

By ELMER PEARSON
General Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Sir Isaac Newton established the principle that the forces of action and reaction are equal. This is a law of physics that has remained uncontested. Otherwise referred to as the law of compensation it applies to human conditions and affairs as well as to the orderly movements of the planets in their orbits.

Business in general, and the motion picture business in particular, enjoyed tremendous prosperity from 1918 to the middle of 1920 and suffered an equally violent reaction that has only recently spent itself. Thus we are again due for an era of prosperity.

General business unhampered by summer slumps has already shown remarkable increases, which would have been reflected in increases in motion picture attendance except for the seasonal drawback. Therefore, action is only temporarily delayed, and is accumulating greater force; thus we can expect fall to begin an era of business activity limited only by the preparations made to take care of it.

Every business with ordinary vision at its disposal saw the coming of slack times during 1920 and 1921 and trimmed sails, but now sees big business just ahead. Accordingly Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been bending its every energy and that of its producers toward lining up a program of short subjects that will fill the tremendous demand that is certain to develop with the new theatre season.

The nature of the exhibitor's business makes him very acute to these actions and reactions, and the moment he starts getting results from the business stimulus of better pictures he necessarily becomes very exacting of his program requirements. Thus it is that on the Pathe program of releases is found only the best of its kind in every department.

While cheap and poor film may (?) have its uses and find a market during dull times, Pathe's policy has always been to cater to requirements of the good periods, which practice is emphatically exemplified in its imposing array of weekly releases starting September 1. These are described in accompanying Pathe announcements. Other acquisitions will be made and announced as rapidly as we find the market responding to these efforts.

Pathe has always been zealous for entertainment quality in the wide range of subjects which it distributes. We may ascribe most of the attacks upon ethical shortcomings of the motion picture to those persons who are never happy unless they are crusading against something, but attacks upon the intelligibility or entertainment value of pictures demand serious consideration for they reflect a condition which might well become serious and if not rectified mean a loss of patronage that the business cannot afford to lose.

I consider that a more liberal use by exhibitors of short subject programs, selected with a view to diversity, novelty and freshness of subject, and of course all-around quality, to be the best possible antidote to such a condition.

Short subject programs are by no means confined to the smaller houses. The largest and most successful houses in the country are beginning to see and utilize the value of them. The Symphony Theatre of Los Angeles ran a short subject program for forty-four days, using Harold Lloyd's comedy, "Never Weaken," as the star attraction.

Rothafel has run short subject programs with great success, and I have heard that he is planning another at the Capitol. Joe Plunkett is another well-known showman who has done it with good success. It is not an innovation. It is being done, and where the programs are picked with proper care the results are always most satisfactory.

We have, in this business, come to give the feature an importance out of all reason. Not that the feature is not valuable or not needed, but many exhibitors pick their feature and throw in some short subjects as "fillers." The same attention should be given to the short subject that is given to the feature, and the most successful exhibitors in the country recognize that fact.

It frequently happens that the short subjects on a program are the true "draw" for a show, and that the feature gets by because

"Film Fables" Make Hit Everywhere

Picture patrons through their local exhibitors in every section of the United States have given the practical support—meaning money paid into the box office—that elevates "Aesop's Film Fables" to the summit of animated cartoon art and entertainment. Reviewers in newspapers and magazines, upon the occasion of each weekly release by Pathe of these highly original comics produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., have made slogans of lines like this: "The animation is well up to the standard of this series."

It is this quality of Cartoonist Paul Terry's work in translating the ancient fabulist's brain-throbs that when an example is seen on the screen the audience enjoys the illusion of irresistibly funny portrayals by human actors and trained animals.

Pathe Product

of them. How many times during the past three years has not a short length Harold Lloyd comedy been responsible for the success of a show both at the box office and in the house, while the feature has been an "also ran"?

Here at Pathe we have some features, and "Nanook of the North" illustrates their quality, but our first and most important consideration is to assure to exhibitors an ample supply of short subjects second to none in the comedy, dramatic, educational and news reel field. It is our purpose to release them so good and in such quantity that any exhibitor, no matter what his patronage and the size of his house, may run short subject programs that will thoroughly please his people and build good will for his house.

In this connection the Pathe serial episode is of constantly increasing consequence. The fully and successfully tested New Era Fifteen-episode Pathe serial, clean, wholesome, yet more dramatically forceful and thrilling than ever, is now represented before the picture-loving public by four significant examples—referred to elsewhere in Pathe's fall announcement.

"Scoops" Feature Pathe News Reel

Pathe News, in the eleventh year of its world-wide record, has the voluntary support of exhibitors for its claim to having brought the people of the United States into "quicker and closer, almost personal, touch with leading events in every corner of the globe than has ever before been accomplished by any news-gathering organization." To quote its editor, Emmanuel Cohen:

"Pathe News does not rest on its past laurels, but strives week in and week out to surpass its previous records, and to always live up to its motto—the first news reel—the real news first. Since the first of the present year Pathe News has scored an unusually large number of scoops on really important news events. Our competitors have made just as much effort to cover these stories as we have, and it is only through the splendid organization of the Pathe News staff, enabling us quickly to locate cameramen in territories where, in our judgment, events are impending and to utilize more expeditious methods of shipment, that we are successful in getting these stories either exclusively or ahead of any other company.

"Another item which I am sure that exhibitors and their patrons will appreciate is that Pathe News now can claim that it is really an international news reel, covering all corners of the globe. Never in the history of any news reel has the world been so thoroughly covered. We are beginning to reap the fruits of several years of very patient effort. As it is physically impossible to have staff cameramen everywhere all of the time, by diplomatic and constructive comment on negatives submitted by free lance men their good will has been gained; they have responded by bringing their services up to the Pathe News standard, and thus we have gradually built up a staff of correspondents which completes the field organization and makes Pathe News a truly international medium."

Fun Films Tax Roach Studios

Reports from the Hal Roach Studios at Culver City describe extensive new building on the lot and additions to equipment made necessary in living up to Pathe comedy preparedness for the coming year's bright business outlook. As all exhibitors are aware, Pathe distributes the entire Hal Roach comedy output. Under the new contract made at the beginning of this year, this includes a series of multiple-reel productions starring Harold Lloyd.

The advancement of "Snub" Pollard as the star of two-reel laugh sensations, with the added exactions of the longer form, imposes a fresh demand on the resources of the Roach Studios. Pathe announces a first series of six Pollard two-reelers, directed by Charles Parrott with Marie Mosquini, "Sunshine Sammy" and a picked supporting cast, for release one every four weeks beginning in September.

The one-reel comedies bearing the Hal Roach trademark, which will continue to be released one every week, include productions featuring Paul Parrott.

In the meantime Hal Roach has added to his producing equipment a "zoo" of highly trained domestic animals which, together with a group of talented and unterrified kiddies constitute a new producing unit engaged in making the two-reeler series for Pathe distribution under the general title of "Our Gang" Comedies. There are thirteen in the series, to be released one every four weeks beginning September 10 with "One Terrible Day."

Pathe's Features Few But Good

For the coming year Pathe announces no definite extended schedule of feature releases, as it does not specialize in this type of productions. From time to time, as they are acquired, a limited number of special features marked by requisite distinction and human appeal will be announced for release.

The qualities required in features seeking Pathe distribution are well illustrated in a general way by two current examples generally acknowledged to be in the front rank of this season's outstanding successes. They are "Nanook of the North," which has captivated exhibitors and their patrons everywhere as a motion picture masterpiece, and "The Isle of Zorda," the celebrated European picturization of Jules Verne's novel of ideal heroism called "Mathias Sandorf."

The new Harold Lloyd multiple-reel comedies are, of course, "features," but are announced in a classification by themselves. After nearly two years, the lyrically beautiful and faithfully produced Rudyard Kipling special, "Without Benefit of Clergy," retains all over the country the vitality that is characteristic of a true classic.

Range Rider Series Inaugurated

Acting upon the recommendations of shrewd showmen who have found that their patrons demand bang-up action and fast-riding thrills, Pathe has contracted to release the "Range Rider" series of two-reel Western dramas, featuring Leo D. Maloney. There will be twenty-six in the series which has been scheduled for release one every two weeks, starting with "His Own Law," to be released September 3, followed by "Come and Get Me," to be released September 17.

Leo D. Maloney, the star of the series, is declared to add a new personality to similar presentations of realistic Western life—a youthful and electric personality and daredevil horsemanship that is irresistible. He is a native of California and his career was confined to ranch life until he felt the lure of the silver sheet. Maloney has already appeared in Pathe short reels and has also been seen in big Western productions of other companies.

Neighbors

Striking is the promptness of exhibitor response to the screen magazine progress demonstrated by Pathe Review during the past year. Theatre owners and managers in renewing their contracts, and in making many hundreds of new ones, refer to their patrons' expressions of delight over the beauty and the variety of entertainment contained in this reel, which greets them, fresh and new, every week in the year.

Audible comments are quoted which fully justify the Pathe Review slogan—"Makes all the world your neighbor."

"Not only have we tried to improve the quality of the individual subjects that enter into the reel," says Editor Emmanuel Cohen, "but also to vary the nature of the subjects so as to give each a more general interest and universal appeal."

Laughter Series Is Generally Liked

A cock-sure laughter series that stands the test of the widest weekly distribution year after year, briefly stated is the present record of "Topics of the Day," produced by Timely Films, Inc., and released by Pathe. This "joy-reel," now in its fourth year, literally "makes millions merry" throughout the whole nation.

These half-dozen minutes each week of screened wit and current comic human philosophy culled from the brightest publications printed here and abroad are praised by thousands of exhibitors, for whom Manager Paul of the Majestic Theatre, Ontario, Oregon, virtually speaks, as well as for himself, as follows in a recent letter to the producer.

"I firmly believe that there is no other reel on the market that can add the little touch of tone to the program, or put the audience in the frame of mine where it can relax and enjoy the rest of the show, like "Topics of the Day." When it is flashed on the screen it seems to give the people in the house a sort of 'at home' feeling. They know that it is going to say something funny about a barber, a butcher, or somebody locally that the joke can be applied to, and patrons immediately set themselves to appreciate it. And when your audience has put themselves in that frame of mind, you have got to have a pretty rotten picture following before you will hear any complaints."

Reviewers and editors go on record along the same line—for example, W. L. Wood, city editor of the Evening World, Durango, Colo., who prints: "Durango people greatly enjoy 'Topics of the Day.' It has become an institution here, and people are deeply disappointed if they do not see it."

Pathe Policy One of Square Dealing

By E. A. ESCHMANN
General Sales Manager

The motion picture business, like all other branches of American commercial activity, is on the eve of a most productive era. Every student of sound merchandising realizes that we have pulled through a mighty difficult period. The ultimate arrival at prosperity will be governed solely by the route taken. If we se ect the straight line as being the shortest distance between two points, our progress will be the more rapid and positive.

In the case of business we may liken this geometrical theorem regarding a straight line to fair and square dealing between seller and buyer. If ever confidence were required between these two factors in merchandizing, now is the time when it is absolutely essential.

It is the recognition of these requirements that makes possible the continuation of our sales policy for 1923. The expression "Pathe Policy" has come to mean something very definite to exhibitors nationally and internationally. It is synonymous with straight-forward business practice, square dealing agreements based on eminently equitable premises.

Concretely, Pathe policy holds that "unless it is fair to the exhibitor it is not worthy of Pathe."

We, dealing in such a variety of product, automatically possess an opportunity to force the booking of fair subjects by tying them up with subjects of extreme merit. That kind of practice, however, mitigates against a constructive exhibitor-distributor understanding and would immediately admit of a shortsighted policy.

Each and every subject and series of subjects distributed by us is sold on its individual merit. In other words, Pathe never attempts to "club" an exhibitor with "leader product." If a prospective customer wants the best that we have, he knows he may rent it without having anything tied to it. Our contracts being instruments of equitable expression secure commitments made to us by our customers and commitments made by our customers to us.

Rich, Varied List of Pathe Shorts

By MILES GIBBONS
Short Subjects Sales Manager

The growing importance of short subjects is due, in a great measure, to the realization on the part of the exhibitor of the absolute necessity for building up programs which will appeal, not only to 50 or 60 per cent. of his possible clientele but to the full 100 per cent.

In order to draw 100 per cent. audiences regularly, the various groups which go to make up an audience must be given the particular type of picture which has the strongest appeal. Hence the necessity for the variety which can only be supplied by the short subject. In many cases, the five-reel picture, even though it may show a famous star, may not appeal strongly to more than 50 per cent. of the audience, leaving it to the news reel, comedy and other short subjects to pull the program through and send the audience away with that satisfied feeling.

The short subject also has a direct effect on the box office, especially so in these days when the patron is very much given to "shopping." The announcement of "Pathe News Today" frequently is the straw which turns, say 10 or 15 per cent. of the "shoppers" towards the box office A sign reading, "Lloyd Re-issue with 'Snub' Pollard and Bebe Daniels" has a still stronger effect on the box office. The announcement of Leo Maloney in one of the "Range Rider Series" would certainly deflect a great percentage of the vast multitude who are particularly keen for westerns and send them along towards the cashier.

As each well-built program must include at least three short subjects, each one of which should be of an entirely different type, the necessity for a large and varied line of short subjects is clearly seen. Pathe, in its desire to supply the demands of all exhibitors, announces for the coming season one of the largest lines of short subjects ever offered.

Each Serial Star Distinctive

Pearl White, Ruth Roland and Charles Hutchison, the three stars of Pathe serials, each typify a different and distinctive personality in the chapter play, and therefore each has met with particular favor with the exhibitor and his audience.

Pearl White has always been known as the "Queen of Mystery, Intrigue and Romance." Ruth Roland has always been called the "Outdoor Girl," a name that has fastened itself to her because of her daring exploits amid outdoor settings. The "thrill-a-minute stunt king" is the title which has stuck to Charles Hutchison since his venture into Pathe serials in "The Wolves of Kultur."

Grow in Favor

The fact that the Pathe Playlets continue to grow in favor with exhibitors proves that Pathe officials had their fingers on the public's pulse when they inaugurated the idea of cutting down and re-editing their former feature successes into three-reel features.

Many showmen have used the offerings as the backbone of their programs, cashing in on the wonderful exploitation possibilities which gave them a big star, a big director and a story by a well-known author. And even among the players of the different Playlets are found names of those who have reached stardom recently.

More Johnny Jones Comedies

Of the new product contained in Pathe's comprehensive list of short subjects the "Johnny Jones Comedies" are in a highly attractive class by themselves. Opposite him is dainty and talented little Gertrude Messinger.

Pathe announces a series of six "Johnny Jones Comedies" for release, one every four weeks, beginning on July 30 with the two-reeler called "Supply and Demand." The second release of the series bears the self-explanatory title of "Makin' Movies."

Intimate Views

There is only one "Screen Snapshots" reel, and Pathe is its distributor—releasing one every two weeks. Its originators and producers, Jack Cohn and Lewis Lewyn, in warning exhibitors not to confuse this widely popular "fan magazine of the screen" with imitations bearing a similar title, give notice that "Screen Snapshots" is fully protected by copyright, and the new and better series released by Pathe only.

How to Make Success of Exploitation

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Exploitation Manager

Exploitation is a combination of art, science, brains, ingenuity and originality applied to the showing of motion pictures. To achieve an effect, to draw patrons, to deliver dollars at the box office, exploitation must be daring, distinctive, and sparkling with brilliance. New wells of interest must constantly be tapped. New ideas must be created, novelties pregnant with power, must be woven from an airy thought to concrete ballyhoo.

Whether the theatre owner builds his exploitation around his feature, whether he concentrates on short subjects, or whether he emphasizes courtesy, atmosphere and charm, his exploitation labels him either as an exhibitor or a showman.

If he is smug, if he is satisfied with his house, if he believes that he has hit the heights of achievement with his lobby display, his projection, his courtesy, his music, his advertising and publicity, he is a mere exhibitor. His mind is shut to ideas. There are cobwebs in his clock.

If, however, in his makeup there is that something which is constantly stirring him to do the different, to devise new ideas, to apply his personality to his theatre, to keep his patrons alive and alert to his endeavors, whether it be by posters, prologues, music, unique lobby, or careful advertising, then he is a showman.

Exploitation is merely the lengthened shadow of the man whose human touch dominates his theatre. To exploit something that everyone has exploited, is easy; but to make a success along a virgin path and blazing a trail which others follow, that is a showman.

Evolution of the Noted Pathe Serial

By EDGAR O. BROOKS
Serial Sales Manager

The continued motion picture dramas released under the copyrighted trade-name of "Pathe Serial," of which the latest example is "The Timber Queen," featuring Ruth Roland, are very different indeed from what is generally understood by the word "serial."

Over two years ago we realized that the "hokum" serial, replete with gunplay, murder and anachronism, was headed for the same destination as the dime novel of similar construction. It was up to us as the House of Serials to make another forward move, for no one can gainsay the fact that Pathe has ever been in the forefront of progress on chapter plays.

Therefore our producing units were given very definite instructions regarding the types of stories which were to be constructed for future "Pathe Serials." They were to be written and built in the standard length of fifteen weekly episodes or chapters, but in no case were crime or criminals to be represented as other than despicable, there was to be an utter absence of gunplay or murderous attack with other weapons, and above all they were to be positively clean and wholesome in every particular with plausible stories.

The first real step toward censorproof "Pathe Serials" was taken when we selected Robert W. Chambers' thrilling novel, "In Secret," as the vehicle for Miss Pearl White's starring appearance in "The Black Secret" and this proved to be one of our "best sellers." Its success was instantaneous. Shortly after this we featured Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack," which also had a wonderfully successful sale both here and abroad. Then followed Ruth Roland in what was at that time the most popular "Pathe Serial" she had ever starred in, "Ruth of the Rockies."

Coming down to more recent times, "The Timber Queen" is the fourth of a series of really phenomenally popular censorproof "Pathe Serials." We had gotten into our real stride when producing "Hurricane Hutch," with that daredevil stunt king, Charles Hutchinson, in the title role, and this was really the first positively censorproof "Pathe Serial"—so much so, in fact, that it has been played by churches, schools, Y. M. C. A.'s and educational institutions all over the country as an example of American prowess of the most perfect type.

Pathe Is Greeted Cordially Abroad

By A. E. ROUSSEAU
Foreign Manager

The Pathe Company enjoys a most enviable position in the foreign market, due particularly to the variety of the films on its program. First of all, there are the Pathe serials which have contributed in no small measure towards the maintenance of the Pathe prestige throughout the world; then, the strong array of comedies, headed by the Lloyd feature series, re-enforced by the Lloyd one-reel comedies which are now being re-issued practically everywhere.

"Snub" Pollard and Sunshine Sammy, who each head a series of two-reel comedies, are better liked abroad than many prominent feature stars, and the humor in the Johnny Jones comedies is bound to appeal especially to foreign audiences. The unlimited possibilities of the characters in Aesop's Fables have created for these cartoons an unusually strong demand, and under the Pathe banner, the Screen Snapshots are being introduced into territories where they have never been before.

The high class of the Pathe western dramas has revived the market for this product in many countries, and to supply the demand for a good news film in Latin America, a special edition of the Pathe News, with Spanish-English titles, is being published weekly.

The feature end is made up of the Associated features, which during the past season, included some of the greatest independent successes such as "The Devil," "The Riddle Woman," "What Women Will Do" and a series with such popular stars as Florence Vidor and Leah Baird. To these Associated features are added the big Pathe specials, such as "Nanook of the North," which has been given an even better reception abroad than the picture has received here.

The new Pearl White serial, on which production has commenced, promises to break all records, judging from the most alluring offers which have been received from foreign territories.

The Pathe foreign distribution system has been organized with the object of obtaining the largest possible distribution throughout the world, and wherever the company has been unable to make satisfactory arrangements for the sale of its product, it maintains its own distribution.

Exhibitors Realize Lloyd's Worth

In many respects the most important item in Pathe's release schedule for the season of 1922-3 will be the Harold Lloyd feature comedies made under the new contract which was announced the early part of last winter. Since that announcement was made, Pathe has received abundant evidence that the time has gone by when exhibitors needed to be reminded that the name of Harold Lloyd as the star of multiple-reel comedies is not exceeded in drawing power.

Lloyd has now completed the first of his new Pathe multiple-feel comedy features. It is called "Doctor Jack" and will be announced for release some time this fall. It presents Mildred Davis in the role opposite the star, and in the supporting cast are several of the popular favorites whose work is especially appreciated in the Hal Roach unit which produces Lloyd comedies.

Other of the new Lloyd comedy features will be announced as they are completed and become ready for release. Under the terms of the new Pathe-Lloyd contract, neither the frequency nor any exactly specified length of these releases is stipulated. Beyond the understanding that they shall be multiple-reelers, Lloyd and his producer, within reasonable limits, exercise their own judgment in these matters.

The enormous success of "Grandma's Boy" made for Associated Exhibitors, at leading West Coast theatres, has deferred the general release of that Lloyd production until early in September —which naturally defers until a later date the release of "Doctor Jack." In this connection, exhibitors will see significance in the fact that on July 27, on the fourth day of the eleventh week of the continuous run of "Grandma's Boy" at the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, the management had to telegraph for a new print, as theirs was completely worn out.

Newsy Bits

Supreme Pictures Corporation of Omaha report that they are doing their greatest business on "School Days."

Greater Productions, Inc., of Omaha reported this week the signing of two important contracts for Al Lichtman and Warner Brothers' product.

Bill Haggerty has rejoined the De Luxe Film Exchange of Philadelphia and started this week on the exploitation of the many pictures that firm is handling.

Fontennelle Feature Film Company of Des Moines, Ia., this week reported the purchase of the following product for 1922-23: Eight Jack Hoxies. Pete Morrison features, four Peggy O'Day race track pictures, Tweedy Dan comedies, "Cap'n Kidd" with Eddie Polo, "Man From Hell's River" and "The Sage Brush Trail" and six two-reel Mounted Police pictures.

Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Omaha this week in its annual announcement made it known that it will handle all the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., product, including "I Am the Law" and "Sure Fire Flint," Franklyn Farnum Westerns, the Roy Stewart series, and others.

Liberty Films, Inc., of Omaha announce that they will release "Hearts of the World" as a road attraction in Iowa and Nebraska.

Phil Monsky of the Liberty Films Company of Omaha is spending a hard-earned vacation in Colorado.

David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia has acquired a franchise in the Amalgamated Productions, Inc., which is now being formed. This company intends to release 26 pictures annually and will distribute them to exchanges on a co-operative basis.

George Fecke of Motion Picture Distributors, Inc., of Boston reported this week that in all probability he will stage the premier showing of "Yankee Doodle Jr." at the Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I., late next month.

Virtually all of the Philadelphia independent exchangemen wandered to Atlantic City, N. J., on August 20 and 21, attending the first annual outing of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania. Of course, a good time was had by all.

Sam Werner of Werner Exchange, St. Louis, returned to his home in Missouri late this week following a busy visit to New York. Sam is the oldest film man now in business in St. Louis, but he is still very much on the map and his exchange is doing a wonderful business.

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Cornoration of New York is looking forward to an unusually big season and consequently has contracted for the biggest pictures in the market. Sam smilingly informed this department this week that the Al Litchman feature, "Rich Men's Wives," had played to something like 16,000 people at the Capitol last Sunday.

Sarah Rappaport bas resigned from the office staff of Filkins & Murphy in Buffalo to accept a nosition with Manager Howard F. Brink at the Educational Exchange.

The Week in Review

MONEY talks. That's an old adage. But it's good enough for the picture business. And if money really rules supreme in any business, then here is one industry that is in for its greatest year. This statement is made because of the presence of considerable money in this branch of the business. Glance through the following pages and you will be convinced that there has been a wholesale exchange of money in the trade. And where there must be money there must be considerable doing. And where there is considerable doing there is bound to develop an era of prosperity. And if there is prosperity and money—and money really talks, there is only one thing to be done and that is for every independent to get his full share. How? By giving the trade what it wants, doing business in a straightforward progressive manner.

WE received a newsy letter this week from Harry Rapf, one of the best money-making producers to be found anywhere. Harry is on the Coast turning out pictures for Warner release. Already he has completed two, "Little Heroes of The Street" and "Rags To Riches," both with Wesley Barry starred. But that is incidental in this particular instance. Harry doesn't waste words. But he has observed a whole lot on the Coast. He looks forward to a big independent year and postscripted the information that he had seen ten big productions that, in his opinion, should jam the theatres. And these pictures are to be distributed in the independent market.

OUR sincere congratulations to Al Lichtman and Ben Schulberg for the splendid production they have given the independent market in Gasnier's "Rich Men's Wives," which we saw draw thousands on Broadway and in Paterson, N. J. If "Rich Men's Wives" is a sample of what the trade can expect from the Al Lichtman Corporation, there need be no worry among exhibitors, for it will mean the very best. Let's have more like "Rich Men's Wives," just as rich, entertaining and colorful.

THIS is the cleanup period for some of the distributors. Many of them finished the 1921-22 season with deficits that almost drove them out of business. A majority of these deficits were brought about because of the inability of exchangemen to pay. Those who were honorable and made known their inability to meet obligations must, of necessity, be classified as victims of "bad times." But there were some who did turn in bad notes and made idle promises—promises they never intended to keep. And this is the breed that is being cleaned up and cleared out of the business. Several well-known film attorneys have taken steps to force these persons to either pay up or get out. Satisfaction, however, may be found in the fact that most of these had to toss in the sponge some time ago.

WARNER Brothers opened their New York exchange, located on the ninth floor of 1600 Broadway. There on Monday virtually anyone who was anybody in the film business came to congratulate Harry M. and Abe Warner and Charley Goetz, that livewire who has been elected to guide the destinies of the exchange, which will release all the Warner product.

HAVE you noticed the press books independent distributors are publishing? We have. And we'll say that they are gems. Some, of course, are worthless, but the leaders in the business are getting out books replete with helpful information, attractive and business-getting accessories, practical exploitation suggestions and newsy publicity. And for this progressive change the trade has Nat Rothstein, Charley Davis, Eddie Bonns, Weshner-Davidson, Al Lichtman, Lyn Bonner, Esther Linder, Conlon & Howe, and a number of others whose names we can not recall right now to thank.

SEPTEMBER is "show you month." And a month that gives independent men a golden opportunity to show the industry in general that we mean business. Let September open your season with a bang. Arrow already has started the ball rolling. How about you, and you and you. Get busy now.

ROGER FERRI.

Trade Notes

Fred H. Kirby, who formerly covered the Charlotte, N. C., territory for Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions of Atlanta, has beeu assigned to the exchange located in the latter city.

Capt. Kinder, who is handling "The Parish Priest" through the Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh, reports big business on that picture, which had a somewhat interesting career, but which when allowed to show on its merit went along like a house afire.

Ivan Abramson, Mary Anderson and others went to Asbury Park, N. J., last Sunday where a special showing of "Wildness of Youth," for the benefit of the orphans there at the Main Street Theatre.

Frank Hard is doing splendid work for the various Harry Charnas enterprises in Ohio, Michigan and westeru Pennsylvania, reports from exhibitors in those territories being a true testimonial to that nice publicity man.

Bobby North of the Weber-North Exchange of New York City is looking forward to the greatest season in the history of the film business and remember Bobby is not one of those film men who is inclined to kid himself.

Prospective franchise holders of the Amalgamated Exchanges, which are in process of formation, held a meeting in New York this week. Nothing of any definite nature was given out for publication, however.

J. Fred Cubberly, who is now devoting all his time to the F. & R. Exchanges in Minneapolis, informed this department that he has perfected a new booking arrangement with exhibitors in his territory. The plan is practical and mutually benefitting and at the proper time will be disclosed in this department exclusively.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, is developing into quite a globe trotter. Recently he hurried to the Coast and back, closed a number of deals, rushed to Boston and back, and this week we find him commuting between Washington and New York.

Charles Seelye of the New York Arrow Exchange is having no trouble aunexing product for next season, for the Arrow program seems to include features and short subjects of every description.

Ralph Mau, formerly assistant booker at Buffalo's Paramount office, has resigned to join Ralph Myerson of Macmy Pictures, a new Buffalo organization getting out a local topics reel.

Fred M. Zimmerman, president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures, has appointed F. F. Kimmerly in charge of the company's Albany office. Mr. Kimmerly succeeds Robert Bertchey, resigned. Ben Levine is now a special representative for Nu-Art. Mr. Zimmerman is now enjoying a fishing trip at Chippewa Bay in the Thousand Island country.

Sydney Samson, manager of the Grand & North Exchange in Buffalo has signed up for "The Curse of Drink" for Western New York State. Syd also has taken on a new Haynes business coupe. The Grand & North staff is now installed in its new exchange building in Franklin street.

New Syndicate Assures Break for Independents

From the leading Broadway legitimate theatre booking offices this week came a proposition of particular interest to independent producers who have been kept out of the White Way houses because of the prohibitive terms sought by those who operate those motion picture pavilions. The theatre map of Broadway is to undergo several important changes during the next few months and the independent distributors will profit by this step.

A certain independent distributor last week approached the managing director of one of the Broadway theatres for a special run of a big State rights picture. However, the terms sought by the theatre man was so prohibitive that the deal fell through. Only this week Weiss Brothers made the Metropolitan Opera House a flat offer of $14,000 a week for use of that house and $8,000 for the same period for the Astor Theatre.

Reports from virtually every section of the country indicate a rise in business. The bigger State rights pictures are going big, particularly in the smaller cities and towns, this omen prompting keen observers to look forward to a good season.

For detailed information and a concrete idea of how State rights pictures are going in every territory the reader will find it to his advantage to consult every week our energetic Van Powell's "Straight From the Shoulder Reports." This department is the only dependable one of its kind and almost entirely contributed to by shrewd showmen, who speak from their experience on pictures on which they report. You can't go wrong by keeping tabs on the pictures through Van's growing department.

Joe Rock's comedies are going over like a house afire in Nebraska, judging from reports coming from here. This week Eddie Monoghan of the Hamilton Theatre in Omaha sent in a report that those comedies constitute his best short subject bet.

Here's one that will make C. C. Burr smile and echo "I told you so." Says A. E. Fair, director of theatres of Southern Enterprises, Dallas, Tex.: "'I Am the Law' is a knockout. When I signed a contract booking this picture I was told by the exchangeman that a generous profit was in store. I replied that the salesman was 'all wet.' But now that I've shown the picture, I don't mind telling you that we topped every mark and did the biggest business in the history of our theatres—and in the hot spell, too."

"Ten Nights in a Barroom," starring John Lowell, is still cleaning up in the Middle West, despite the heat and other adverse conditions. Irwin Beck of the Moon Theatre, Wilbur, Neb., said he jammed his house for two nights, the length of the engagement.

"Shepherd of the Hills," which is being road showed through Minnesota, has been doing good business, but showmen out there are skeptical. Jerru Wertin of the Winter in Albany, Minn., booked the show, which was to be elaborately exploited, but he charges that the owners of the picture flopped on this promise, although he claims having done a satisfactory business.

"Ashamed of Parents," the Warner feature, dropped in Princeton, Minn., but Manager Mrs. M. C. Kruschke of the Strand said the lack of attendance could not be attributed to the picture, for those who saw it, she says, were satisfied. The weather, she adds, was against theatre patronage.

"Any Night" is having quite a stormy sail in Maryland, despite the fact that the picture is being well exploited.

William Fairbanks, who has signed to produce Westerns for Arrow Film Corporation, is popularizing himself considerably, if exhibitors' reports are to be accepted as any criterion.

Though played out in most territories, C. C. Burr's "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," starring Johnny Hines, is doing big business in New England, where that picture is being cleverly exploited by Sam Moscow of Moscow Film Corporation of Boston.

WILLIAM FAIRBANKS
Ben Wilson star who will make series of Westerns for Arrow Film Corporation

Warner Brothers Become Members of Hays' Body

Official announcement was made this week that the Warner Brothers had been elected members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will Hays is President. An intimation that the Warners were planning joining the organization was exclusively published in Moving Picture World four weeks ago. Warner Brothers constitute the first independent distributing and producing firm to join the Hays organization, but it is known that three others are contemplating similar action. In fact, the application of these independents already is in the hands of Will Hays.

Charnas Planning Exchange Boosting

Harry Charnas, President of Standard Film Service, with exchanges in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit, is apparently looking forward to the greatest season in the history of the business, for he is making elaborate plans to open the coming season with a bang. Mr. Charnas has tied up some of the best product in the independent field, but in order to give the exhibitors in his territory an idea of just what he will have to offer in 1922-23, he has arranged a special ceremony, which will be in the nature of a tour of all four exchange centers. The exhibitors, prominent national film executives, and national and regional press editors will be the guests of Mr. Charnas and his organization.

The tour, which is an annual affair, will this year be even greater than that of previous years. No expense will be spared in giving the guests the time of their lives as well as convince exhibitors that they can expect only the best in the independent market and maximum service from Standard Film Service this year. The trip will be made in special trains. The itinerary follows: Pittsburgh, Sept. 10; Cincinnati, Sept. 11; Detroit, Sept. 12, and Cleveland, Sept. 13.

Ernest Van Pelt, traveling representative of Sacred Films, Inc., producers and distributors of the Bible series of one-reelers, is in the West, meeting distributors and locally exploiting those pictures.

F. S. Mattison, sales representative for Tweedy Dan comedies and of Sanford Productions, is coming East, stopping off at all exchanges en route.

Manager Al Rosenberg of the De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle has purchased "Flesh and Blood," with Lon Chaney, from Western Pictures Exploitation. This exchange will also handle the Al Lichtman pictures.

Charles R. Gilmore of the Arrow Exchange in Seattle, has recovered from his recent illness and is now very much on the job. He left this week for Los Angeles for a limited stay there.

Judging from reports from exhibitors and exchangemen in the South, the situation there is clearing rapidly. Business at the bigger houses there during the past week took a decided jump upward.

Exchangemen handling Al Lichtman productions can hope for a clean-up, if the business done on the initial Lichtman special, "Rich Men's Wives," at the Capitol Theatre in New York and U. S. Theatre in Paterson, N. J., is any criterion. At both places records were set up.

Hart Series Sold

Export & Import Film Company, Inc., who controls the foreign rights on a series of Neal Hart five-reel features this week announced the sale for Cuba and Venezuela of six subjects, namely, "Hell's Oasis," "Danger Valley," "God's Gold," "Black Sheep," "Kingfisher's Roost," and "Skyfire." Other sales are now pending.

"Mme. Sans Gene" Almost Ready

Another independent is slated for early distribution in the form of "Madame Sans Gene," which Producers Security Corporation will State right when completed. Aubrey Kennedy is making the production through special arrangements made with the Admiration Film Company.

Many Buyers Come East for S. R. Features

Buyers from as far west as California besieged New York last week in anticipation of the greatest independent year in the history of motion pictures to acquire territorial rights to state rights productions. While about two months ago money was as scarce as gold coins in Russia, the buyers who came to New York last week all were prepared to pay cash for big pictures, for which the demand right now is at fever heat.

Among those who came to New York are the following: Gene Marcus for Twentieth Century Exchange, Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation, David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., David Starkman of Starkman Film Exchange, Bob Lynch of Metro Pictures Exchange, Tony Luchese of De Luxe Pictures Corporation, and H. A. Sherman of Graphic Exchange, all of Philadelphia; Harry Segal of Pioneer Exchange, Herman Rifkin of Eastern Pictures Exchange, and George Fecke of Motion Picture Distributing Corporation, all of Boston; Sam Werner of Werner Exchange, St. Louis; Frank Zambrini of Unity Photoplays and Graphic Exchange, Chicago; J. F. Cubberly of F. & R. Film Exchange, Minneapolis; Gene Pearce of Pearce Film Exchange, New Orleans; E. H. Emmick, Frank Fay, E. E. Richards of Kansas City; Harry A. Lande, Sydney Lust of Washington, D. C.; Bill Steiner and many others.

A new co-operative exchange system, made up of independent exchanges in this country, is in the process of formation. Definite announcement of this chain will be made in this section exclusively next week.

Tom Moore, the well-known Washington, D. C., exhibitor, has entered the State rights distributing field in that city. He has formed the Federal Film Exchange and will distribute films in the District of Columbia, Virginia, Maryland and Delaware.

Last week was a record-breaker in so far as visits from out of town buyers was concerned. Twenty one buyers from every section in the country came to New York to line up product for next season.

There seems to be a general cry for short subjects among exchangemen, who say they are finding a dearth of such material. Exhibitors seem to be clamoring for such subjects.

C. C. Burr's "Sure Fire Flint" Completed; Hines to Go on Tour

With the completion this week of production on the second big Johnny Hines' feature, "Sure Fire Flint," which Affiliated Distributors, Inc., of which C. C. Burr is the head, that popular star will start on an extensive personal appearance tour that will take him as far as the Coast, appearing in every big house en route. His appearances will be preceded with extensive advertising and exploitation campaign supervised by trained showmen, who will blaze the way with considerable paper, special stunts and tieups.

Del Henderson directed the final shots for "Sure Fire Flint" at the Glendale studio this week. Those who have watched the progress made on this picture characterize it as one of the best of its kind, laying particular stress on the splendid work of the all-star cast and the scenic settings. Not until he has completed his personal appearance tour will Johnny Hines start work on the second of the series of four specials that will be distributed on the State rights market by Mr. Burr, who has developed into one of the foremost distributors in the business.

Exchangemen throughout the country who have contracted to distribute "Sure Fire Flint" in their respective territories received heartening news this week, when Burr announced that in order to meet the edmands of distributors on this production for early distribution he has arranged with the Lyman H. Howe Film Laboratories of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, to give special day and night service in the developing of enough prints on "Sure Fire Flint" to route them to all exchanges with all possible speed.

This arrangement was decided upon by Mr. Burr because of the general exchange demand for this second Hines' feature, which is reported to be bigger in story and production than "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," the first successful starring vehicle of Hines, which went over to big box office receipts wherever it played. Practically all of the exchangemen who bought in on "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" have again contracted for this second Hines feature, which they intend exploiting widely.

The Affiliated Distributors include Dave Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia; Roy Seery, Associated First National Pictures of Chicago; M. A. Klausner, Mountain States Film Attractions of Denver; Louis Hyman, All-Star Features Distributing Corp., of San Francisco; Sam Moscow, Moscow Films, Inc., of Boston; Davis & Alexander, Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh; Floyd Brown, The H. Lieber Company of Indianapolis; A. H. Blank Enterprises of Des Moines; William Skirboll, Skirboll Brothers Gold Seal Productions of Cleveland; J. F. Cubberley, F. & R. Film Company of Minneapolis; M. H. Klausner, Mountain States Film Attractions of Seattle; Sam Zierler, Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, 729 7th Avenue, New York City, and William M. Vogel, foreign distributors, 126 West 46th Street, New York City.

What is singularly important is the fact that Dave Segal of Philadelphia, Fred Cubberley of Indianapolis, Bill Skirboll of Cleveland, Roy Seery of Chicago, M. A. Klausner of Denver and Seattle, and, in fact, all of the exchangemen, have already obtained first-run showings of "Sure Fire Flint" in the leading theatres of their respective territories. It is for this reason, primarily, that Burr is leaving no stone unturned to get the completed prints of "Sure Fire Flint" to the exchanges as quickly as he possibly can.

Grand Buys

The five-star state-right feature, "The Curse of Drink" was sold by L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, American distributors of the picture to Sam Grand, leading exchangeman of the New England territory. The block of states is one of the most important in the country and includes Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Saxe With C. B. C.

Sam Saxe, formerly associated in an executive and sales capacity with Selznick, has joined the sales forces of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

Warners Finish Two; Start on Two Others

With the completion of the second Wesley Barry picture, "Heroes of the Street," a Harry Rapf production made for the Warner Brothers, preparations were immediately started by Rapf, Sam and Jack Warner, for the filming of two novels, it is announced.

Rapf has begun assembling the full cast for Charles G. Norris' novel, "Brass," which will be directed by Sidney Franklin. Marie Prevost will play the leading feminine role. Monte M. Katterjohn adapted the story for the screen.

The Warner boys are also assembling a cast of prominent players to interpret F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned." In this production Marie Prevost will share honors with Kenneth Harlan. Olga Printzlau, who is confining her entire efforts to the Warner Brothers organization, picturized the story.

Julien Josephson, who wrote and adapted many of the Charles Ray pictures, is completing the adaptation of Sinclair Lewis' novel, "Main Street," which will be produced by S. L. and Jack Warner.

"Skyfire" is the title of the latest Lester Cuneo picture that Doubleday Productions, Inc., is turning out. Henry McCarty is directing the feature, in which a cast of 22 appears.

Perfect Pictures Corporation is planning production on a South Sea island feature, starring Barbara Bedford. Nat Deverich, it is reported, will in all probability direct.

Ben Wilson has three units working at the Bertwilla studio on Santa Monica Boulevard. These units are headed by Eddie Barry, Monty Banks and William Fairbanks. The first two are making two-reel comedies for Federated release and the latter Westerns for Arrow release.

Five companies are working out at the Fine Arts studio. They are Halperin Pictures, making "Tea With a Kick"; Perfect Pictures, Cosmopolitan Film Company, Crescent Productions, Inc., making two-reel comedies, starring Bonner and Daightery, with C. French Burns directing, and Doubleday Productions.

Production on the next Peggy O'Day feature, "The Four From Nowhere," being made by Francis Ford at his studio, is rapidly nearing completion. Ford is directing and Jack White cranking.

Work has just been started at the Long Beach studio on a new feature with an all-star cast. C. W. Stater is directing.

Max Graf is applying the finishing touch to the Milton Sills feature, "The Modern Madonna," which is being made at the San Mateo studio, near Frisco.

Lawson Butt is making "The Flying Dutchman" at San Carlos, where a Dutch street has been built. Butt is directing.

Robert Bradbury is to direct Jack Hoxie in the next series of Westerns. The company is at Keen's Camp working on the first of this new series.

"Peaceful Peters" is the title of the first William Fairbanks feature, made by Ben Wilson and to be State righted by Arrow Film Corporation.

There is a persistent report afloat here that Eddie Polo, who is now in Vienna making a serial which will be distributed on the independent market by him, will more than likely sign with Universal again when he returns to this country.

Bruce Mitchell, who is directing the Monte Banks comedies for Ben Wilson, is in New York on important business. He will not return to Hollywood until early in September.

Reports received here from Eastern State rights distributors by independent producers are very encouraging. Feeling here is that the independent market is in for a boom next season.

Ernest Van Pelt, traveling agent of Sacred Films, Inc., is in town, after having covered virtually every exchange centre in the country. Larry Weingarden will in all probability shoot East to do some exploitation on the Bible series which this company is making at Burbank, Cal.

Railway Strike Holds Up Edward Sloman

A veil of mystery surrounds the name of the story that Edward Sloman is said to have selected for his next effort as a producer. Since completing the filming of Frank R. Adams' popular magazine story, "Blind Justice," Sloman has been besieged with inquiries from friends, admirers and others as to the story he would next produce. To some he has whispered the type of play he has selected, but to none has he divulged the name of the story.

It is understood from those in intimate touch with Mr. Sloman that his forthcoming subject is one that has been appearing in serial form through one of the largest newspaper syndicates of the country. The story is said to have been read by more than one million people and is one of the most gripping and appealing stories that has ever appeared in printed form.

Owing to the railroad strike situation Mr. Sloman has been unable to leave his studios in Hollywood, Cal., for New York where he plans to stage an official trade showing of his first personally produced picture,

Patersonians Set Record Seeing "Rich Men's Wives"

By ROGER FERRI

PATERSON, N. J.—(Special)—That the picture is the thing with moving picture fans was again demonstrated here on Monday, August 21, when more than 6,000 persons paid their way into Peter Adams' United States Theatre to get a glimpse at the initial release of Preferred Pictures Corporation, "Rich Men's Wives," which was being given a premier showing in this city. Despite the fact that Paterson is industrially paralyzed, factories here having been shut down for many months and strikes galore adding to the general disorder of things locally, the theatre, which is located in the extreme end of the main thoroughfare, was jammed to its doors at every show.

"Rich Men's Wives," cleverly exploited and substantiating every claim made by its distributors and exhibitors, proved the greatest draw this house has had in many, many months. That it was the picture that attracted them, that that same picture satisfied and that people raved about that picture was evidenced by the fact that on Tuesday and Wednesday the patrons continued coming into the house in as large numbers as they came on Monday.

Foster Moore, exploitation manager for Jans Pictures, Inc., which is distributing the Al Lichtman features—and "Rich Men's Wives," is a sample of what that genial showman's firm has to offer, promises great things for those who hold franchises and exhibitors who have signed for that product—in Northern New Jersey, did some splendid work in Paterson, for the initial turnout exceeded all expectations. To Manager Peter Adams this reception recalled fonder memories of more prosperous days of yesteryear, but when the crowd continued to come on Tuesday and Wednesday, he knew that he had something that had satisfied the public, for it was word-of-mouth advertising more than anything else that brought the large attendances on those two days.

Little newspaper space was used. The theatre ballyhooed the picture to the sky on the Saturday and Sunday previous to the opening, and then left the picture to put itself over, satisfying themselves with running only a three-inch ad. on Monday and Tuesday. The picture did the trick. On the opening night, the picture was enthusiastically applauded by the audience. The more gripping scenes in the production had the desired effect, for we will venture to say, judging from the sniffing that was heard everywhere, there was not a dry handkerchief in the house. The picture went over with a bang, the work of Claire Windsor, House Peters and the little babe all scoring.

But it is the financial possibilities of "Rich Men's Wives," as evidenced at the Capitol in New York on Sunday, when it played to about 20,000 people, and at the U. S. Theatre here on Monday, that makes this picture stand out as a sure-thing insofar as exhibitor investment is concerned.

Sid Franklin Will Direct Warner Film

Sidney Franklin, one of the best known directors, has been engaged by Harry Rapf to direct the forthcoming Warner Brothers attraction, "Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce, according to report.

Mr. Franklin, who has been directing Norma Talmadge, is responsible for "Smilin' Through," "East Is West," and many other screen plays.

"Secrets of Paris" Is Almost Completed

The Charles C. Burr-Whitman Bennett production of the "Secrets of Paris," taken from Eugene Sue's romance, "The Mysteries of Paris" is about half finished. Kenneth Webb, who is directing the picture is more than pleased with the manner in which the big scenes have come out. With the assistance of John MacKnight, the two have staged three big scenes that is sure to meet with the approval of all motion picture lovers. The biggest scene is the fight between the Prince (Lew Cody) and The Strangler (Montague Love). This battle takes place in the famous Rat Hole, a cafe so well known to all readers of both Sue and Victor Hugo. It was the hang-out of all the thugs, cut-throats, street women and the dreaded apache in Paris.

In this scene Cody and Love give an exhibition of a fight that will certainly bring an audience to its feet. The role of the Prince is one said to appeal to Mr. Cody. He claims it to be the best part he ever had and he is making the most of it. Another big scene is that of the cabaret and dance of the apache. In this Dolores Cassinelli as a true adventuress is shown in a part that gives her every opportunity to bring out all her Latin temperament. The scene in the dungeon showing the rising of the waters of the Seine, coming in this cellar in which the Prince and Mayflower (Gladys Huelette) are held prisoners, has been most cleverly carried out. Mr. Bennett has taken special care that this scene is realistic in every detail.

George Proctor, one of the best known publicity men and writers in the business, is now associated with Harry Reichenbacker in an exploitation enterprise. The firm's offices are in the Loew State Theatre Building, Broadway and Forty-sixth street, Room 1101. Mr. Proctor is open to consider the exploitation of independent pictures.

Al Feinman, formerly an independent publicity man, is now connected with the short subject department of Fox Film Corporation.

Bill Haggerty has again joined the exploitation force of De Luxe Film Corporation of Philadelphia. He is starting several big campaigns on De Luxe pictures.

J. Charles Davis will personally conduct the exploitation on Arrow Film Corporation's big fall release, "Night Life in Hollywood," during the engagement at the Woods Theatre in Atlantic City, N. J.

Frank Hard is now in charge of the publicity for all four branches of Harry Charnas' Standard Film Service in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland.

Eddie Bonns has an augmented staff with which to exploit the Warner Brothers productions next season. Last year he and Lou Marangella did the trick, and did it well, too.

The Weshner-Davidson exploitation and publicity forces are doing wonders with the various accounts that service bureau is handling. They are handling the C. C. Burr accounts to the satisfaction of that popular producer and distributor.

Tom Bible, exploitation manager for Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia, has ideas of his own on Affiliated Distributors' "Sure Fire Flint," and the Lee-Bradford picture, "Determination,' both of which will be exploited on an elaborate basis next season.

Frank Walters is now exploitation manager of the Independent Film Corporations exchanges in Philadelphia and Washington.

Howe & Conlin are handling the publicity and exploitation on "Why Do Men Marry?" which Unity Pictures Inc., is State righting. This firm is also exploiting the enterprises of Franklyn Backer, head of East Coast Productions, Inc.

C. C. Burr Billboard Deal Boosts Independent Films

Exhibitor and exchange congratulations are daily pouring into C. C. Burr's office on the intensive nation-wide out-door billboard campaign Burr has instituted in behalf of "Sure-Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines. In New York City alone, the Thomas Cusack Company has erected two huge signs, one 40x60 feet at the corner of Broadway and Forty-eighth street, directly opposite the Strand Theatre, the other at Broadway and Seventh avenue. Both of these mammoth painted signs have direct illumination and represent two of the big high-lights of Broadway's White Way. In addition to these special signs, the Cusack Company has posted approximately one thousand bold type lettered twenty-four sheets on "Sure-Fire Flint" and its cast in every important spot in the city. These will be augmented next week by the addition of another thousand beautifully illustrated twenty-four sheets, bearing production portraits of Johnny Hines, Doris Kenyon, Edmund Breese, Effie Shannon, Robert Edeson and J. Barney Sherry. These posters have been executed by Ritchey under the advice of C. C. Burr himself and are said to be among the most striking creations made by them in many years.

Coincident with the outdoor campaign in New York, Burr also contracted for campaigns of like immensity in every principal city throughout the country, with the result that exhibitors have received hundreds of requests from patrons who were desirous of knowing just when "Sure-Fire Flint" was to be played at their local theatres.

In "Sure-Fire Flint" it is reported that Burr is making an even larger advertising expenditure than he did in "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "I Am the Law."

Producing in San Francisco

Word comes from San Francisco that Edward Belasco and Victor B. Fisher of the Belasco Productions, Inc., of that city, have signed their company, which will produce Anna Blake Mezquida's "Dancing Feet."

Papal Film Here

Jaxon Films, Inc., has acquired the American distribution rights to "The Chair of Peter," a feature which is said to have met with the endorsement of Pope Pius XI. H. C. McCourt took the pictures abroad.

To All Exhibitors

Equity Pictures Corporation suggests, advises, welcomes and urges comparison of "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN" with any and all the big outstanding productions of the season.

That does not mean comparison with independent pictures only, but means comparison with ALL the biggest pictures on the market this Fall.

In other words, Equity urges that you book and play "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN" strictly on the basis of the merit and box office power of the production itself.

That's the "show you" demonstration of just how remarkable is—

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION
723 SEVENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

Equity Going Limit on D. C. Goodman's Feature

Greatest preparations are under way in behalf of "What's Wrong with the Women?" which Equity Pictures will release in the independent market. Daniel Carson Goodman's production, which was produced in New York without any great advance publicity campaign, has already been shown to trade paper critics and was greeted as the most faithful picturization of the present-day spirit of restlessness and craze for excitement which has ever been put on the screen.

Fully cognizant of the interest which this picture will create, Equity is now completing plans for a publicity campaign which will make this picture one of the most talked-of screen offerings of the season. Because of the tremendous interest which is awakened by the title alone a large amount of unsolicited publicity has been given the production by the daily papers, and by means of the campaign arranged by Equity the question and its answer will be widely discussed throughout the nation by the time the picture is released.

"It is not our intention," stated Mr. Goodman, "to capitalize a title. We have a story behind all this, which fully justifies our selecting such a name, and because of this we feel that we have the right to create advance interest in the picture by means of the title. There need be no fear that our advance publicity, which will be as great as any ever given a motion picture, will react to disadvantage. We want people to come into the theatre prepared to see an intelligent and fair-minded discussion of the feminist question because we know that 'What's Wrong with the Women' will afford just that. I need only point to the reviews in the trade papers under date of August 12 to prove that we have sincerely and faithfully depicted the current unrest among women and just as sincerely proposed an answer. Speaking editorially, the Motion Picture News of August 12 says: 'Mr. Goodman's picture is the truest document on the subject that has ever been shown for entertainment. It strikes a far deeper note than Manners' play, "The National Anthem." The subject matter has occupied the attention of authors for some few seasons, but most of them have just skimmed the surface. . . . "What's Wrong with the Women?" sticks to its theme without a false variation. . . . The picture is wonderfully well interpreted.'

"In the Moving Picture World Mr. Roger Ferri succinctly phrased it thus: 'An Equity state right offering that will make box offices jingle with recordbreaking grosses,' and editorially he wrote that he could not recall a more entertaining and better independent picture than 'What's Wrong with the Women?' In the opinion of the writer it is the biggest state right possibility of the year.

"Surely these men, speaking editorially in their magazines, are able to differentiate between simply a title and a picture plus a title. And certainly such buyers as Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Film; Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece, and Sam Grand, of Boston, and Joe Friedman, of Chicago, are sufficieutly keen showmen to know that no picture can ride along on simply a title, unless it is able to give perfect entertainment and live up to that title. Aud it is because 'What's Wrong with the Women' does fill the bill perfectly that Equity will produce with the biggest advance publicity campaign that has ever been afforded au independent production.

"'What's Wroug with the Women' is from a story by Mr. Goodman, and is interpreted by an all star cast, iucluding Wilton Lackaye, Barbara Castleton, Constance Bennett, Rod La Rocque, Hedda Hopper, Julia Swayne Gordon, Huntley Gordon, Paul McAllister, and Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein."

Nigh Finishes "Notoriety"; East Coast Studio News

The director of "Why Girls Leave Home" and "Schooldays" played true to form when he made his entry into the offices of L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North this week flanked by a corps of assistants carrying cases totaling 100,000 feet of film. The huge load represented the scenes shot on "Notoriety." Will Nigh's latest production. Nigh is noted for the excess footage he takes. It generally amounts to ten times the length used in the finished film, and always guarantees him against missing any of the high lights of the picture.

It took Will Nigh two months to make "Notoriety," the longest he ever took on any of his output. He finished "Why Girls Leave Home" and "School Days" in half the time that "Notoriety" took. The reason lies in the magnitude of the production. In "Notoriety" he has taken the star of "Why Girls Leave Home," Maurine Powers, and added performers like Mary Alden, Rod La Rocque, George Hackathorne, J. Barney Sherry, Richard Travers and four others.

In all probability Bruce Mitchell, the well-known Coast director, who for some time has been making the Monty Banks comedies, will settle in the East, turning out comedies. Some sort of definite announcement concerning Mitchell's new affiliations is expected to be made next week.

All is hustle and bustle at the Glendale, L. I., studio, where Dell Henderson is turning out "Sure Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines for Charles C. Burr. Rapid progress is being made on this production, which will be completed within a few days.

Dr. Carson Goodman, who produced "What's Wrong with the Women?", is working on the story for his next production which, according to present arrangements, Equity Pictures Corporation also will release.

Virtually all the Fort Lee studios are busy these days on independent productions. Several Independent pictures are expected to be completed before the first of September.

J. Barney Sherry is in big demand by independent producers. During the past month he has been working on two productions, C. C. Burr's "Sure Fire Flint" and Billy Nigh's "Notoriety."

Work on the next Betty Blythe picture is expected to be started early in September at the Whitman Bennett studio in Yonkers, N. Y. Bennett is now applying the finishing touches to "Secrets of Paris," which will be released by Charles C. Burr.

Judging from what progress is being made up at the Gloversville, N. Y., studio, "Lost in a Big City," which George Irving is directing for Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., for Arrow distribution, will be ready for the buyers the latter part of October. John Lowell, star of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," is being featured along with Baby Ivy Ward.

Harry Clay Blaney announced this week that the picture rights to all melodramas he and his brother, Charles, produced years ago, have been disposed of. Six of these productions have been sold to C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

Harry Hoyt, who produced "The Curse of Drink," is working on "That Woman," starring Catherine Calvert. This production which, according to all reports, will be an elaborate one scenically, may be offered to the independent market.

The Florida production boom seems to have died out in-so-far as the business men of cities in that State are concerned. Many companies experimented there, but the results obtained were anything but satisfactory.

STATE RIGHT NEWS

James Minter of the Minter-United Exchange of Detroit has secured an injunction restraining interference with his business by David Mundstuk. Last year Mundstuk sold the exchange and Strand Features, Inc., to Mr. Minter for a consideration of $47,000. Up to two weeks ago Mr. Minter is alleged to have paid Mundstuk about $14,000. Mundstuk, it is claimed, threatened suit on the ground that he was not securing payments as regularly as he should. The suit will be heard next week in the Circuit Court in Detroit.

Harry Charnas of Standard Film Service of Detroit and Cleveland announced this week that he has contracted for something like 600 billboards in those territories in exploiting his products for release next season.

The following changes in Harry Charnas' Standard Film Service of Detroit were announced by him this week: Robert Rowan in charge of short subjects; Jim Allen in charge of Al Lichtman and Federated productions; A. M. Goodman, formerly an exhibitor, salesman covering Eastern Michigan; George Malone covering Western Michigan and Bill Flemion in Toledo.

Premier Film Company, a new independent exchange recently opened in Minneapolis, has acquired 48 feature productions and 25 short subjects. This firm is going after exhibitor patronage in tooth-and-nail fashion.

Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufield, who constitute the De Luxe Film Corporation of Philadelphia, are determined on doing big things next season. They have contracted for some of the best product in the independent market.

The Graphic convention last week was considerably upset as a result of the railroad disturbance throughout the country. Many of the exchangemen had to leave before the others arrived in New York, with the result that the confab was postponed, although arrangements for distribution of product in 1922-23 were completed.

"Is a Mother to Blame?" is a new photo-drama that has been acquired by Edward L. Klein, Inc., international distributors.

Charles C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, overlooks no bets when it comes to properly exploiting his pictures. He promised exchangemen who bought "Sure-Fire Flint" that he would exploit that production to the sky—and he is keeping that promise. C. C. Burr's billboards are everywhere in New York. These twenty-sheeters hold the attention of the eye and certainly are a credit to the picture and to the enterprise of this popular independent distributor.

Jans Pictures, Inc., is handling the Al Lichtman productions in Northern New York, and judging from the business that the initial release of this company "Rich Men's Wives," at the U. S. Theatre in Paterson, N. J., did this week, it is in for much patronage from exhibitors, many of whom already are clamoring for bookings on this feature.

Arrow in Big Foreign Deal; News of the Export Field

D. J. Mountain, manager of the foreign department of Arrow Film Corporation, reports a tremendous activity in the foreign market, which has resulted in a great volume of new business for Arrow, Among the most important of the recently signed contracts are the following:

Liberty Film of Havana has purchased 26 features, a series of comedies and "Nan of the North" for Cuba. Camus and Co. of Mexico City has purchased 12 two reel Eddie Lyons comedies for Mexico. The Aktieholaget-Skandinavisk Filmcentral of Stockholm has hought 12 Speed Comedies, 14 Broadway comedies, "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," "The Splendid Lie," "The Innocent Cheat," "The Golden Trail," "Before the White Man Came," "The Girl from Porcupine," "God's Country and the Law," "Luxury" and "Hills of Hate" for Sweden. The deal was closed when Erik Lundherg, president of the company, was here. Five Ostriche comedies, "Luxury" and "The Way Women Love" have heen sold to Bert Parker for Mexico. Interocean has secured 18 Spotlight comedies, 26 two reel Hank Mann comedies and 12 Speed comedies for Great Britain. "Nan of the North," "The Blue Fox" and "Thunderbolt Jack," three serials, have been hought hy J. Pearson and Co. for Egypt. "Bitter Fruit" has been sold to La Cinematographic Francaise for France and to Artistic Films for Switzerland. The latter company has also purchased "Devil Dog Dawson."

Eddie Polo, whose initial State Rights serial, "Cap'n Kidd" is now being generally distrihuted in this country, is in Vienna making a new serial, which he expects to conclude late next month when he will return to this country.

Sig Schlager is in Paris promoting the interests of Affiliated International Productions.

Reports from England and the continent agree that cinematographically conditions there are improving.

Oscar Apfel, Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell who filmed "Bulldog Drummond" in Haarlem, Holland, have returned to this country.

Foreign buyers have been numerous in New York during the past few months. Judging from the sales reports from the various foreign managers there seems to be a dearth of productions in South American countries.

Business at Canadian theatres is picking up steadily, according to reports from exchanges in Toronto and Winnipeg. Business in Quebec is still poor.

William A. Brady, who recently returned to this country with the rights to many foreign pictures and productions in his pocket, expects to return to the movie field on a large hasis. Brady helieves he has several good hets, which he wants to exploit himself.

Several new Italian films made their appearance in the local market this week, but after heing shown hoth were relegated to the scrap heap as were also six German pictures that were hrought here with the reputation of having scored big on the other side.

Pola Negri, the international star, who is to make pictures for Paramount exclusively in this country, was due to arrive in New York this week.

While no announcement has been made officially, it is said in New York film circles that David P. Howell's office is soon to announce the release of several hig foreign pictures.

George H. Hamilton, who has a number of crackerjack foreign pictures made in Sweden hy the Swedish Biograph Company. is planning releasing the first of these features early in the Fall. Leslie Mason is editing and titling the pictures.

"Rags to Riches" Scores at First Coast Showing

The premier presentation of the Wesley Barry picture, "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production made for the Warner Brothers, was recently given at the Strand Theatre, Pasadena. According to Rapf, the production was received with enthusiasm by a large audience, and the response exceeded his wildest expectations.

In a telegram to Harry M. Warner, Rapf said: "Showed 'Rags to Riches' at Strand, Pasadena. Picture went over way beyond expectations. Turned out great audience picture. It has class and a big story full of laughs."

Harry Houdini is determined to make 1922-23 a hanner season and consequently is organizing a numher of special acts that will he headlined in conjunction with the showing of his feature, "The Man From Beyond."

C. C. Burr, of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., is being hesieged with propositions from exchanges that are anxious to tie up with him. However, these are in ill luck for the reason that with the exception of Michigan and District of Columbia, Burr's product is sold out.

Tom Moore, one of the hest known exhihitors in the country, has joined the independent distrihution field in Washington, and has opened a new exchange there known as the Federal Pictures Corporation.

Frank Zambrino, of Unity Photoplays, Inc., of Chicago, following a busy huying week in New York, returned to the Windy City on Sunday night. While in New York Frank closed a numher of important deals with Arrow Film Corporation.

More Americans Will Go Abroad

Wyndham Standing and Marguerite Marsh have contracted to star in several feature pictures in Holland for the Hollandia Film Company and will sail for that country Saturday, August 26th, on the s.s. Rotterdam. Wyndham Standing played opposite Norma Talmadge in many productions and more recently starred in "The Isle of Doubt" and "The Jellyfish" for the Syracuse Motion Picture Company. Marguerite Marsh has appeared as co-star with Dustin Farnum and Herbert Rawlinson. She also appeared with Lionel Barrymore in a super production.

Mr. Standing and Miss Marsh will start work immediately upon their arrival in Holland on "The Lion's Mouse," the famous book by C. & N. Williams. The American rights for "The Lion's Mouse" will be handled by Producers Security Corporation.

Pisano to Film

General Pisano, the international rifle champion, and the big time vaudeville artist, will shortly appear in a series of short reels.

"Jungle Goddess" Gets Good Buyers' Prices

Sam Grand, the enterprising Federated member for New England, made a trip to New York this week to close negotiations with the Export & Import Film Company on the latter's Selig serial, "The Jungle Goddess."

Grand had been dickering for this wild animal serial ever since its completion. No figures are mentioned in the announcement of the sale by Export & Import, but it is understood to have been a big price. Grand will release the chapter picture September 1 and intends to start an extensive exploitation campaign.

Louis Auerbach also announced that following the signing of the contracts on this deal, Sam Grand got in touch with Bobby North, whose Apollo Exchange bought the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey rights on the serial some time ago, and who has reported unusual heavy bookings thereon, and together the two film men closed for the Upper New York State rights on "The Jungle Goddess."

It is said that within the next thirty days several of the country's biggest independent exchangemen will close on the Selig serial for September first release.

Weiss Brothers Astor Theatre

Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation are negotiating for either the Astor Theatre or Metropolitan Opera House in New York, for a special engagement of their big Old Testament feature, as announced exclusively in this department several weeks ago. They have offered $8,000 a week for the Astor, where the picture will in all probability be shown, following Metro's "The Prisoner of Zenda."

William Fox is spending several weeks of his European trip in Karlovy Vary, Carlsbad.

Monte Katterjohn has returned to the Lasky studio in Hollywood after a somewhat protracted absence.

"It's a stirring world we are living in," said Owen Moore, starting for his cellar.

Harry M. Berman has returned from a tour of F. B. O. exchanges.

Will Hays has gone to Minneapolis to attend the convention of the M. P. T. O. of Minnesota.

Ned Hay, formerly an assistant director at Paramount's Long Island studio, has been appointed casting director. His predecessor, Arthur Cozine, becomes location manager.

Harry Gibbs, who has been a member of the Fox field forces, is to remain permanently in the New York office.

Bruce Mitchell, of the T. R. Coffin Productions, arrived in New York from the coast with the prints of the first four of a series of twelve comedies, which he directed and starring Jack Richardson and Helen Darling.

Evelyn Greeley has returned from London, after finishing her work as star in the Hollandia Films' production of the New York stage success, "Bull Dog Drummond."

Hi Speed says that "Saturday Night" is not a bathing girl picture.

"Forget Me Not," the photoplay now being shown at the Criterion Theatre, was successfully presented to six hundred blind people recently, under the auspices of the New York Institute for the Blind, at the New York Theatre Roof. The photoplay was described in detail, scene by scene, and sub-titles were read in order that the audience might fully understand the picture. A varied entertainment preceded it, consisting of musical and comedy acts. Hope Hampton, who was hostess for the afternoon, also offered a vocal number. The "showing" was so successful that it will be repeated throughout the country. This is believed to be the first time a photoplay was projected for a blind audience.

Jules Mastbaum has gone to Maine for a vacation.

Max Graf arrived in town this week from San Francisco.

J. Irving Greene, director of advertising and publicity for Associated Exhibitors, packed up his golfing outfit last week and left for a fortnight's outing at Stamford, N. Y. Mrs. Greene, who is also an enthusiastic and accomplished golfist, is with him, and the trip is really in the nature of a honeymoon, as the couple were married only two months ago.

S. Y. Freeman, vice-president of Southern Enterprises, is in New York on a trip to close contracts for the distribution of productions in eleven Southern States.

John S. Robertson, director of Paramount, who has just completed Mary Pickford's new production, "Tess," is due to arrive in New York shortly. Robertson's contract with Famous Players-Lasky has expired and he is not considering signing up with this company again just at this time. His plans include several big propositions which will be boiled down to one when he arrives in the city to give them his personal attention.

Jack Holt has gone back to the Coast.

Three Song Tie-ups for Paramounts

Three important song tie-ups for forthcoming Paramount pictures have just been effected by the Paramount publicity department. The first of the pictures to be thus popularized is the Fred Niblo production, "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentino. The well-known music publishing firm of Watterson, Berlin & Snyder has published the song, "You Gave Me Your Heart (So I Give You Mine)" and has dedicated it to the Paramount picture.

Another song recently issued is "The Old Homestead," which, according to the cover, is based on the Paramount picture, with Theodore Roberts, George Fawcett, T. Roy Barnes, Harrison Ford and Fritzi Ridgway. This is published by the Philip Ponce firm.

Out in Los Angeles, Aubrey Stauffer, well-known as a Paramount scenario writer, has composed a song for the exploitation of "The Young Rajah," another picture in which Rodolph Valentino is starred and which is adapted from the play by Alethea Luce and the novel, "Amos Judd," by John Ames Mitchell.

"The Masquerader" Big Attraction

Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader," a First National attraction, opened to big crowds in Chicago and proved a sensation, according to a telegram received by J. D. Williams, general manager of First National, from Balaban & Katz. The message is as follows:

"Masquerader opened to biggest Monday in history of Chicago Theatre, with thermometer registering ninety-four and terrific heat all day. Crowds lined up one hour before opening of box office. When we started to sell tickets we had at least one thousand people waiting in line. First time this happened in history of any of our theatres in Chicago."

Lon Chaney Engaged

Lon Chaney has been engaged by Universal to star in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," that company's forthcoming Jewel production of "Notre Dame de Paris," Victor Hugo's immortal novel.

Well Welcomed

Following up its representative first run bookings in New York, Los Angeles and Detroit, "In the Name of the Law," the Emory Johnson police drama now being distributed by the Film Booking Offices of America, will soon be seen in many of the largest first run houses in the country. A flood of contracts proves that its exploitation possibilities have been fully appreciated. In every theatre booked there will be an effective tie-up with the police departments.

Among the first run houses to show it in the near future are the Apollo in Indianapolis, the Walnut in Cincinnati, the Strand in Buffalo; Loew's State in Cleveland, Fay's Theatre in Rochester, the State in Pittsburg, the Columbia in Dayton, the Colonial in Richmond, the Strand in San Francisco, the Pantheon in Toledo, the Walnut in Louisville and the Columbia in Erie, Pa.

Mary Pickford Wins

Another chapter has been added to the story of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." The picture rights had been secured for Madge Kennedy, but Mary Pickford and others who wanted to picturize the Charles Major story continued to raise their offers in the hope of landing the plum.

In the end, Mary Pickford has won. The Kenma Corporation, the Madge Kennedy company, has sold the rights to Miss Pickford for a figure said to be the largest paid for a film story this year.

Much Company

Katherine MacDonald is finding "The Lonely Road," the newest Preferred Pictures' production, in which she is starred, anything but lonely. The famous Associated First National beauty has the company, on this celluloid journey, of such pleasant and accomplished companions as Orville Caldwell, Kathleen Kirkham, William Conklin, James Neill, Frank Leigh, Charles French, Eugenie Besserer, Vera Lewis and others, with Victor L. Schertzinger as their directorial chaperon.

Goldwyn's List Pleases Showmen

Hardly had last week's trade papers got off the presses when Goldwyn began receiving letters and telegrams from prominent exhibitors congratulating the producing firm on the line-up of eight super-features for release between October 8 and December 31. And a few days later the twenty-two Goldwyn branch exchanges began sending in the messages received by them.

Judging from the tenor of exhibitor comment so far received, Goldwyn has struck a responsive chord with its new policy of fewer pictures, but big pictures, and also with its first releases. Many of the messages received state that the writers expect to show every picture that Goldwyn puts out for the entire new season even though they are to be sold individually.

There has been special satisfaction expressed that the first of the releases is to be a new Rupert Hughes picture, "Remembrance"—one that can be classed right along with his "The Old Nest." Frequent mention is made of the John Barrymore picture, "Sherlock Holmes." The combination of Barrymore and Conan Doyle's immortal detective arouse the utmost confidence before the film is seen.

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Fred Hathaway's Newspaper Matinees Gain Space and Publicity for House

NOT content with hooking the largest local paper to his classified advertising stunt, recently described in these columns, Fred Hathaway, of the Alhambra Theatre, Utica, has revived an old idea for a new angle in his newspaper matinee.

Mr. Hathaway knows the publicity and moral value of the children's matinees, and has used the kid matinee in a number of forms, but purely as a house issue.

During the white paper shortage during the war he offered admissions to all children bringing copies of any newspaper. Now he has reformed the scheme into a circulation stunt, to which he has tied the News-Observer.

Simply Worked

All children under twelve are admitted to special performances on Mondays and Thursdays until school opens on presentation of ten complete copies of the News-Observer of any date. The papers must be flat and clean, and folded only once, to permit them to be inspected with ease.

Between three and four hundred children attend these bi-weekly performances, and they scour the neighborhood for copies of the one paper which is required, which advertises the paper to everyone, and helps the circulation.

It brings at least a half column story twice a week on the announcement of the performance and smaller stories on the day following.

Pays Expenses

The matinee last given before Mr. Hathaway wrote brought in 3,200 pounds of paper, which is baled and sold at 65 cents a hundred pounds, or $20.80. It brought in a column of smartly written publicity and it brought in a lot of parents for later performances, who had been sold on the show by the children.

There is also advertising value in the queue formed by the kiddies well in advance of the opening hour.

The shows are started at eleven o'clock and the house is cleared and cleaned in time for the opening for the regular matinee.

Used Flowers, Too

Mr. Hathaway adds that for a long time he made a clean-up with flower matinees. Free admission was given all who brought flowers and a prize was awarded the largest bonquet.

After taking what he wanted for the lobby, Mr. Hathaway had the rest made into small bouquets which were distributed to the hospitals with cards reading: "With best wishes for a speedy recovery from the Alhambra Theatre and its juvenile friends."

Naturally the recipients were pleased with this thoughtful attention and they and their friends were favorably inclined to the Alhambra at no greater cost than printing up the cards, since the bouquets were made up by the ushers.

Both schemes are good. Try them out. They will make business for you just as they did for Mr. Hathaway.

A Two-Way Stunt

A. C. Cowles, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., made a deal with a florist, whereby the latter decorated the lobby for "The Wonderful Thing" in return for a credit card and slide. On the second, and closing, day of the run the lobby display was presented to the women patrons, one flower to each visitor.

Yashmaks for Pola

Telling the town with a street worker is not new, but the Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice Neb., was not too small a house to give a new kick to the idea when it put out a woman in Oriental dress for Pola Negri in "One Arabian Night."

A First National Release

THE YASHMAK

The Yashmak, or face veil, which usually hides the face below the eyes, was carried straight up to the forehead, wholly concealing the features, and the title of the production was painted in big black letters across this most prominent feature of the costume.

That's the idea, and it is a useful one in these days of desert stories.

"Pinched into a Job" has been delayed in the mails. Next week.

Fountain of Pearls Got All the Public

J. B. Robertson, of the Palace theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., worked a good one on The Man Unconquerable, using an old, but seldom used idea.

The exploitation department of Southern Enterprises suggested that the managers keep away from the South Sea angle and use the pearls, instead. Robertson got some small artificial pearls and put them into a jar of carbonated water. As the gas separated from the water it would attach itself in small bubbles to the pearls until the buoyancy of the gas offset the weight of the pearl and it would float to the top of the fluid, where the gas bubbles would break, permitting the pearl to sink again and repeat.

If you have never seen the trick worked, the effect is uncanny, and while the water will need frequent renewal, its use about starting times will well repay the cost of a tank of soda water. It caught the crowd and people who came just to see the mysterious pearls remained to see the picture. Be careful not to get pearls too large, or the gas may not be able to raise it.

It is a simple stunt, but you can tear a small town loose from its foundations if you work it right. We used to carry a small jet cross in pre-prohibition times which, when introduced into a glass of beer and properly entreated, would rise to the surface to the bewilderment of more than one superstitious barkeep.

A First National Release

THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK MUST BE UP-STATE

This window show for the California Theatre, San Francisco, surely does not show Broadway at Forty-second Street. Still it put the picture over, and you can see the crossroads with the near auto smash just as in the Sennett Comedy.

Made Fan Interest Sell His Paramount

In many sections Rodolph Valentino is so popular that he is featured above the star he supports.

Ross Rogers, of the Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Tex., capitalized this feeling by working it into a contest. He advertised heavily that he wanted to know which was which, and he phrased the talk so as to arouse the fan interest.

Each purchaser of a ticket was given a slip stating that "I have come to see" and the name of the favored player was checked off.

The result was that "Beyond the Rocks" was played to about one-third more business than was logically to be expected at very slight expense for extra advertising and the voting slips.

Rogers' lobby showed an urn on either side of the opening. In the centre were pictures of the two players, framed with a kewpie reading in a book bearing the title of the picture. This, too, was inexpensive and yet effective.

Car Not a Jaunter But It Helped Film

Coney Island is a place where exploitation is particularly needed to put a picture over against the myriad attractions of Surf avenue and the Bowery, and when Henderson's Theatre gets a film it can exploit, it goes to it as strongly as possible.

For the Vitagraph production of "My Wild Irish Rose" they started in a week ahead with a 24-sheet on the drop, which was used several times during each performance, for in spite of the fact that this is a beach resort theatre, they play to considerable of a permanent clientele. The poster was nicely framed in gilt and was used for the olio drop.

For the showing they dressed the lobby in green lights and drapes, with a cutout three sheet. Outside American and Irish flags were dropped from the cornice to the marquise, and a cafeteria next door was hitched to a painting with a surrounding of green pickles and red beets and cherries in bottles, with green and red wax paper, shredded, in between. It was gaudy as well as neat.

For street work an odd looking cart was rechristened a jaunting car and dressed as shown in the cut. This was kept up and down the street. As there is only one traffic street, it was a simple matter to keep the few blocks well stirred up.

A MISGUIDED PRESS AGENT'S JAUNTING CAR

That's what the Vitagraph man says they used to put over "My Wild Irish Rose" at Henderson's Theatre, Coney Island. It is most distinctly not a jaunting car, but it got attention.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF THE OVERSIZE AUTO CUTOUT

The Hope Theatre worked this for Jackie Coogan in "Trouble," and tied all of Dallas to the old clothes stunt, getting a pick of choice municipal locations as well as columns of free newspaper work on this capital publicity idea.

Nice Language

Jimquin is back in Los Angeles and writes that the West Coast theatres are using his "Park Your Cares" with his permission, but adds that any exhibitor is welcome to adapt it.

This is relative to a story sent out by First National publicity recently, in which Harry Arthur was given credit for the line. This department was the only one, apparently, which knew that it was Quinn's line, though all of the papers mentioned the stunt at the time.

Then Jimquin adds that we should not refer people to the dictionary for definitions as we did in the case of "replica" lately. He went to his Webster the other night, and this is what he pulled out:

"ARISTOPHANIC: A logaœdic tripody acatalectic beginning with a dactyl; called also the first Pherecratic."

Jim thinks the board of censors should get after the dictionary and leave the pictures alone for a time. What we want to know is what got Jim interested in Aristophanic?

Free Heralds

Because a shoe store in Marysville, Tenn., was staging a mark down sale, J. H. Everett, of the Palace Theatre, got three thousand heralds free. He persuaded the merchant that people are interested in pictures and would be more interested in heralds which made connection with a picture attraction. The copy was changed to read:

"Help your good provider by taking advantage of this sale, then see 'The Good Provider' at the Palace Theatre."

Even that did not satisfy Everett, so he put out a thousand stock heralds on his own account. It all helped to hoist business about twenty per cent.

Timely

It cost Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., just eleven dollars to elect Tom Meighan "Leading Citizen" of his town.

It was primary election and he put the money into propaganda cards which were distributed at the polls and around town generally. Autos, with banners, were shot around town and the lobby of the theatre was turned into a headquarters. All through the South the primary elections have helped the Paramount production.

A First National Release

A SIMPLE DERRICK STUNT FOR WORK ON "GAS, OIL, WATER"

This simple profile was planned by the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta. It does not make the flash of erected derricks, but it provides a means of getting some effect where the cost of built-up structures would take too much off the profits on this Charles Ray offering.

"All Wet"

Hugo Plath, of the Queen Theatre, Abilene, Tex., is one of the very few managers who did not erect a school room in his lobby for "School Days." He figured that it was vacation time and the school would not interest the kids, so he built a swimming pool with real water for a Wes Barry cutout to swim around in. It cost only two dollars.

He also organized a parade of freckled kids, giving each a dunce cap and a free admission, and getting a hundred dollars' worth of publicity out of it.

Convinced

Most persons like to have their worst suspicions confirmed. The Allen Theatre, Stratford, Ont., landed a hook-up page. Their contribution was: "'Is Matrimony a Failure?' Go to the Allen Theatre and find out."

The house was crowded with married folks. Leon J. Bamberger did it. The Paramounteer knows.

Summer Gives a Kick to "Silent Call" Lobby

During the winter the pictures of Strongheart were made the chief appeal on "The Silent Call," but with the hot weather here Abe Levy, of the Strand Theatre, Waco, Texas, figured that "made in the land of ice and snow" would be a better appeal. So he frosted his lobby and used that line twice. The lobby was not very elaborate, but it was cool and inviting, and it drew them in out of the Texas sun.

He used a flat painting which covered half the front of the lobby and provided a shade which fans augmented, while cool blue illumination inside the enclosure heightened the mental suggestion. In this case the flat worked better than would an open lobby with the usual foliage. The patrons wanted real shade.

Broken Ladders: "Watch Your Step"

There was a particularly apt adaptation of stunt to title for "Watch Your Step" when the Goldwyn played the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

Manager Ray Beall built a ladder out of lath stock and spaced the steps to fit a cutout of Cullen Landis from the three sheet, getting the spacing so that Landis, who is looking over his shoulder, seems about to step upon a broken rung.

A Goldwyn Release

THE BEALL BALLYHOO

The ladder reached up to a disc on which the title had been painted, and at the bottom was a watchful dog. Beall could not find a pup in the proper attitude on any paper, so he painted his own.

Economical Eddie

It cost Eddie Collins, of the Rialto Theatre, Dennison, Tex., most all of five dollars to put over "Across the Continent." He spent this for two mounted twenty-four sheets which the local Ford dealer carried all over town. The same agency also advertised a contest, did newspaper advertising and window work, and receipts went up forty per cent.—which is some shoot.

COOLING OFF STRONGHEART GETS BUSINESS IN TEXAS

Abe Levy, of the Strand Theatre, Waco, took the show angle for a summer approach on "The Silent Call" and got a shaded lobby that reached out and pulled his patrons inside because it looked so cool.

This Lindlar Lobby Cost Seven Dollars

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., is developing into a lobby expert. He gets more lobby for less money than any man in Southern Enterprises, and he gets some peaches, in spite of small costs.

He adapted the Lindlar suggestion, with the changes suggested by this department, for "Over the Border," and obtained a very sightly effect for seven dollars. The lobby frames for the feature are held in the cold storage section, but the comedy is put over with the potted plants which are used to suggest the United States.

The arrangement suggests an entire front, but if you will analyze the effect you will find that comparatively little work has been done to gain the result, though you have to look closely to realize that Mr. White did not spend the better part of a day building his effect.

That's how he keeps costs down and results up.

He had a heavy rain the two days this picture ran, but in spite of that he managed to get better business by a third than the average records for the house.

A Paramount Release

IT COST OSCAR WHITE SEVEN DOLLARS TO BUILD THIS LOBBY

He followed the Lindlary lobby on Over the Border, using the changes suggested in this department, and in spite of heavy rain it put business at the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., some thirty per cent over the usual "book."

Thirteen in Family Paid One Admission

Jazzing up summer business, F. L. Koppelberger, of the Rialto and Majestic Theatres, La Crosse, Wis., foregathered with his press agent and decided to have family nights when entire families could enter the Rialto for 55 cents and the Majestic for 28 cents. There was no limit placed on the number to be admitted.

It's old stuff, but it was new in La Crosse and it got out the entire family, with the result that the house was packed on those nights and some of the family dropped in at other times when a "per each" price prevailed.

Koppelberger, who is a First National franchise holder, started off the stunt for "My Boy," and the first crack out of the box he drew thirteen people, the parents and eleven children. They all went in on a single ticket, but they came around and posed for a photograph which brought the house more publicity than the best straight advertising could have given.

If you want to get a lot of excitement in your neighborhood, put on a family night, and have a photographer on the job.

Make 'Em Big

Down at Coney Island, the other evening, we ran into Clive Hartt, one of the most adroit ballyhoo men who ever rubed the streets. He was working straight for one of the Luna Park concessions, but told us that he had been stunting for Harold Lloyd at a Bowery house, and showed us the glasses he wore with the sailor suit.

They had been made by a blacksmith from 3/16 iron rod and weighed about a pound, but Hartt explained that the regular tortoise shell rims did not give a sufficiently pronounced effect. It did not catch the crowd.

He absentmindedly left the glasses on while he chatted, and though he was making no effort to collect a crowd at the time, he had them lined up inside of five minutes, waiting around to see what he was going to do. There is a suggestion here for exhibitors. Have big rims made up.

AND THEY PAID FIFTY-FIVE CENTS TO SEE MY BOY

F. L. Koppelberger, of the La Crosse, (Wis.), Theatres, offered to let the entire family in one night a week for a flat payment of 55 cents. This shows what he got one night. He lost money but he gained a lot of advertising.

Real Glass Windows Help McAvoy Title

Real, for-sure glass in the window was the big angle of Ollie Brownlee's advertising for May McAvoy in "Through a Glass Window" at the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla.

He copied the stunt from another house, but he had real glass set into a flat and back of this set a three sheet for the feature instead of setting up a real restaurant interior, as did the original. The window took up but a small part of the flat, the rest having the star and title lettered on the attention-getting red brick wall.

Off to one side was an awning, in profile, and a sign stating that this was "Jennie's Place."

It cost only $15 to build and brought a fifth more business than usual.

Paid in Space

Joe Cahill, of the Strand Theatre, Brockton, Mass., used a girl raffles for First National's "Sonny." You had to tell her that she was "Sonny's" girl, and if she was, she led you down to the newspaper office, where you received fifty dollars.

The stunt ran for about three days and brought in 290 inches of space—which is the interesting part of the story.

Phone Numbers

Just to be a little different, when the Regent Theatre, Galt, Ont., got a hook-up page for "Beyond the Rocks," instead of printing in the co-operatives spaces the names of those entitled to tickets, they used telephone numbers instead. Not much different, but sufficiently so to make new interest in an old stunt.

A Universal Release

GETTING THOUSANDS FOR AN INVESTMENT OF TWO HUNDRED

Universal tied the Evening Mail to a contest on The Storm when that played the Central Theatre and not only got the publicity in the paper but commanded the fleet of delivery automobiles which covered the entire greater city each day.

Newspaper Contest Brought Publicity

During the run of "The Storm" at the Central Theatre, New York, the Universal hooked the Evening Mail to a contest with $200 worth of prizes and for that small investment obtained nearly three pages of publicity, and the sides of all of the delivery fleet which covered the greater city daily.

In addition the Mail plastered the town with 11 by 14 cards with announcement of the contest and pictures of the two men, the contest hinging on the best 300 word letter on a choice of the two men.

There were 24 cash prizes and for the small sum Universal obtained publicity worth thousands of dollars.

The beauty of the scheme is that it puts over the idea of the story and makes for interest in the play. It is adaptable to all towns playing this super-Jewel and will make for interest wherever it is used.

Blowing Its Horn

There is a good suggestion in the stunt worked by the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, on "One Clear Call." It was announced that the champion bugler of the army would give the regulation calls from the marquise of the Rialto just prior to each presentation, and large crowds gathered for each showing.

You may not be able to get army champions, but there are always the Boy Scouts, and if there is more than one troop you can stage a contest for the buglers, and substitute local interest for championship honors.

Cruelty

It was plain lowdown mean of Earl Haas, of the Midland Theatre, Hutchinson, Kans., to revive long dead memories by sending a sprig of mint in his mailing pieces. The text read: "In Lotus Land they eat leaves like this to win soothing peace and dreamy delight. John Barrymore inspires that in 'The Lotus Eater,' coming to the Midland."

The strong odor of the mint penetrated the envelope and led the recipient to open and read, and he went to see the show because it sounded so interesting in these days when they use mint only in chewing gum.

It was clever, but cruel.

Hooked to Drive

Down in Tacoma they think that the reason people hustle back to Seattle is because they lack hotel facilities there; in spite of the fine Tacoma Hotel, so there is a drive on for $2,000,000 for a new hotel.

When Norma Talmadge played there in "Smilin' Through," the Ad Club was permitted to string a banner across the street reading: "Come 'Smilin' Through' on the new hotel."

Then they put sashes on the ushers and enjoyed quite a comfortable week.

At 'Em Again

Now that the Navy is again recruiting in the inland towns, the First National is tying "Hurricane's Gal" to the scenes in that production made with the aid of the Navy.

The Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, was the first to use the idea and got posters in all sorts of prohibited places which read: "See the Navy in action, all this week, in 'Hurricane's Gal,' at the Des Moines Theatre."

This gave the Navy a chance to jazz up the recruiting campaign, and helped both sides to the contract.

Coals of Fire

Pomeroy, Ohio, is a closed Sunday town, largely through the efforts of the clergymen.

Lately the churches had to close because the coal strike had cut down the electric current available.

A. W. and R. T. Kasper conduct the Electric Theatre, the First National franchise holder, and they have their own gas generator set and are independent of local conditions.

They offered the house for a joint service Sunday nights, and the offer was gladly accepted. It probably will not open the town on Sundays after the strike, but it is going to create a feeling of good will that will last for a long time.

Added a Lantern

There is nothing new in a street walker who is looking for the subject of a photoplay, but Litchfield, Conn., added to the stunt. The Unique Theatre used an old man in tattered clothes and a long beard to perambulate the streets with a sign on his back announcing: "I am looking for 'My Boy.'"

The kicker lies in the fact that at night, when the man can do the most good, a lantern carried on a stick over his shoulder, illuminated the sign.

SPELLING THE TITLE IN BUILDING BLOCKS HELPS

Barry Burke, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, borrowed a set of building blocks and worked out the title in conjunction with the cutout from the six sheet. With a few other toys this made an effective and selling display.

Finds a New Idea for "School Days"

We supposed that all of the ideas had been worked out on "School Days," but A. H. Cobb, Jr., of the Alamo Theatre, Griffin, Ga., found a new kink for putting over Wesley Barry.

He made a slate about the size of a six sheet and used this for his chief lobby display. Across the top was the offer of $5 for the best comment on the play in ten words or less. A cutout of the back view of the youngster was placed as though looking at the comment.

A Warner Bros. Release

The Cobb Blackboard

The comment was to be written on the board, and the name signed to the line. So many used the board that Mr. Cobb had to blacken the rear of the board to get them all on. Each time anyone stopped to write, a crowd would gather.

At first only the children used the board, but after Mr. Cobb had persuaded a couple of well-known persons to add their comment, the others came in and all of the leading citizens were finally represented.

The stunt cost $8.50, including the prize, and can be adapted to a large number of titles.

THIS MUSIC STORE BROADCASTED ZORDA SONG

Grubb's Music Store, Toledo, not only made a fine display of the sheet music, but it painted up the window and broadcasted the song through a magnavox, feeling that what was worth while doing was best done as thoroughly as possible.

Beat Speed Laws

T. B. Noble was substituting for Charles Sasseen, of the Queen Theatre, Galveston, while the latter took his vacation, and he felt that it was up to him to do something real.

Most of the crowd was going to the beaches, so he sent a Ford car down to ballyhoo for "Across the Continent" and got the authorities to permit the chauffeur to exceed the speed limit. The car shooting up and down the street got twice the attention a slower motion would have commanded.

Horseshoes and Jockeys

Besides tying the book-store to Wildfire, the novel from which "When Romance Rides" was developed, A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., used a little boy and girl, each dressed as a jockey, riding in pony carts. When not on the streets, they hitched in front of the house.

The lobby was simply, but effectively dressed with three horseshoes of compoboard, one for each entrance and one in front of the box-office, along the lines of the original sketch shown in this department.

It was not a heavy drive, but it sufficed to get a good business for the Goldwyn.

Shoeing Them In

Hugo Plath, of the Queen Theatre, Abilene, Tex., seems to have figured that getting fitted with shoes was an ordeal. At any rate he tied a shoe company, which was having its annual sale, to Agnes Ayres in "The Ordeal."

They gave a pair of shoes of the size worn by Miss Ayres to the woman who could wear them, and in return, Plath gave each customer a ticket to the show, getting painted signs and cutouts in the window and store.

The cash outlay was one dollar and the business gain was ten per cent.

On His Job

Manager Johnson, of the Isis Theatre, Augusta, Kans., does not doze at his desk while Opportunity knocks vainly at his door. He is out on the street, looking for her.

So it happened that Johnson noticed a ballyhoo for a shoe polish working on Main street and getting a crowd with daredevil stunts. It got a larger crowd than Johnson could pull, because it was a free show, so Johnson interviewed the manager.

Next time they stunted, the display banner read: "Use Blank's shoe polish and you'll go 'Smilin' Through' 1922." At the same time heralds were released to the crowd.

It cost Johnson the banner, the heralds and passes for the stunters.

COOLING THE PHILADELPHIA PEDESTRIANS

The Palace Theatre made a display of suggestively cooling scenes from "Nanook of the North," and the appeal was so strong that it pulled a lot of business right off the hot sidewalks. The box office was framed to suggest a snow hut.

Gordon Agent Sends Some Good Displays

Dann Finn, of the Gordon theatres, in Lynn, Mass., sends along a couple of displays to show that while Boston may be slipping in its advertising quality, the surrounding towns are holding to the traditions created when Boston was doing well. The best of the lot is for "One Clear Call," which is displayed in a 125 by 5. This is a comparatively large space and gives room for a clear title in so large a letter that reverse helps instead of hurting as is too often the case. In only one point does Mr. Finn fail to put it over. He does not avail himself of the star cast and his only reference is: "Six great stars with 'the little Colonel' in his greatest role since his contribution to the fame of 'The Birth of a Nation.'" This scarcely identifies Walthall to a large body of theatregoers who connect his fine work with more recent successes. "Henry Walthall, the 'Little Colonel' of The Birth of a Nation" might have been better, but we believe that naming all six stars would have constituted a stronger appeal. Doubtless this was carried over in the text of the reading notices, but the appeal is too good not to be used in all printed matter, on the principle that too much use cannot be made of a strong selling point. On the other hand, there is some strikingly good sales talk near the bottom of the space, where the sumptuous mounting is claimed merely as the background for the stirring story. Evidently Mr. Finn knows that the play is the thing, and that a story will sell better than a costly production. Anyone can hire a corps of extras, but patrons want plot rather than processions, and Mr. Finn makes it patent that he has this to offer. The second display is only 120 by three, calling for a nicer handling to achieve the same effect. The shorter title makes possible the same reverse display for the offering, but here the star is made clear, both in letter and portrait, and you know just what you are being offered. Here, too, the idea of story is put forward over the star or the title. It is "Dedicated to every mother's son and every son's mother," which sounds as though it might have come from the press book, and it is also "a rare film flower; more striking than Flanders poppies." Even better, in a way, is his handling of "Nanook of the North," which starts off with a heavy "For heaven's sake," and runs into a smaller: "Don't you tire of seeing the same old characters?" Nine tenths of the readers are sold right there and read the rest merely for the information they seek as to the play. There is a good cut layout and this title is not displayed in reverse because there is too much of it to go well on a black ribbon. Mr. Finn sends his stuff in without comment, but we think he knows that he is decidedly better than the average; particularly in the writing of sales copy. Mr. Finn sends in a sample of his layout, with a portrait taken from some advertisement. Many engravers will argue that a good line cut cannot be made from a half tone, though we never could understand why they should cherish such a belief. In any event, Mr. Finn's layout for "Sonny" is done with a minimum of art work. The signature is clipped from an old advertisement, the portrait is made from a printed half tone, slightly, but very skillfully touched up by his artist, the tableau sketch is another paste-up, and the date, the title ribbon and the two lines just below are all the art work required outside of the border. The saving in cost is probably considerable, and the result speaks for itself.

SMALLER, BUT AS GOOD

Providence Splash Is Mostly in Type

Providence used to run to hand lettering and obscure lines, but the Strand and Modern theatres have set a good example the others seem to be following. These houses realize that type is better than the best work their studios can put out, so their artist is confined to the frames and attractors and the idea seems to be to get as much room as possible for the type and then to give this room for display. The reproduction on this page is a half page space, running at the top of the page, which partly explains the reverse strip across the bottom, which not only gives the underline, but which also serves to cut this off from the advertisements appearing below. This rather heavy space not only dominates the amusement page, but it gives the impression that there are two classes of picture theatres, these and the others, since none of the other houses uses a proportionate space. This is the only reason for taking the space, since the house could make as good a display in fewer lines were it not for the moral advantage a dominant space always gives. The sketches and layouts are better than the copy writing, for the description is rather cold. It is not easy to enthuse over pictures you have not seen, but it is possible to convey the suggestion that the pictures are worth while. Jazz writing would help a lot. For example, the Hitchcock copy might have read: "You know Hitchcock—Raymond Hichcock—'Hitchy.' If you don't it's time you do, but of course you do know him. And you remember his success in 'The Beauty Shop.' The part was written to fit him like a glove, and when it was brought to the screen it was felt that he alone could play it as it deserved to be played. And, of course, 'Hitchy' would be only half complete without a bevy of pretty girls and more girls and some more yet. You'll see some of the prettiest girls you ever met off a magazine cover, you'll see one of the funniest men on the American stage in one of his most lasting successes, and you'll see a better production than you saw in the musical comedy, for the camera can tell what the play could only hint at. You can't tell a story like 'The Beauty Shop' in three acts. You have to jump all over America and Europe to tell it right, and this is just what the producers have done. If you like good comedy, come. If you like pretty girls, come early. If you like a really jazzy sort of play, come and you'll come again. Once won't enough." That takes a little more space, but it will get the idea over.

Ohio Theatre Sells Right to the Limit

One of the best displays we have come across since the hot weather began to get in its work comes from the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, on "The Wall Flower." You are not sold on the title first off. You are caught by the gawky girl and the eloquently empty chairs. You know that she is a wall flower before you get the half buried title. The top sketches get half your attention next. They are funny, but they are also explanatory. The girl down below has three chairs to herself because she cannot dance. From there you finally arrive at the title, but that is merely so you can know what it is you are going to see. The chances are that you have already decided to see it. You are only mildly interested in the title. In this case it is merely a handle. But if you have the slightest fear that the picture will not live up to the sketches, there are eight lines of sales talk that alone could sell you, even though you had not already begun to wonder how Colleen Moore could be a wall flower. Even the placement of the figure in the bottom sketches calls for comment. If the girl sat in the middle chair, it would only break into the text space, but the drawing would be too formal to catch the eye. It would look too patently an appeal to curiosity, and also you would get less the impression of a long row of chairs from one on either side than you do from the two empty chairs side by side. The artist may not have figured it all as closely as this. He may have done his work instinctively, without stopping to reason it out, as a good artist will. The space comes closer to being a good selling advertisement than anything we have shown on this page for a number of weeks. At the same time it is a distinctly attractive space.

Artistic Lettering Does Not Sell Seats

This 105 lines by three from the Circle, Indianapolis, is rather ineffective because there is nothing strong in the entire display and so it does not suggest a strong program. The program itself is attractive, but the mental suggestion is lacking, and the space falls. In the first place the cut is too small; not the space occupied by the cut, but the cut itself. It is beautifully done, but it is not striking, and it is further overshadowed by the figure of "Justice" in the background. The picture of Miss MacDonald alone might have gotten over, but here each detracts fom the other and the display looks dwarfed. Even alone, the cut would be too small for the space. A large head, forcefully drawn, with a mysterious arm holding the scales would have carried the same idea and would have heightened the display value. But the lettering and the handling of the program is the real failure of the space. It is very pretty lettering; as good as the work we get from Eddie Hyman, but there is no color to back things up. The title in an eighteen point bold could have run in the same space and would have been more pronounced. The display value of bold type as compared to this fancy letter would have been in the same proportion as the relative value of a three and a 24-sheet. The smaller features should have been displayed in about a fourteen point with a few lines of selling talk. Here it is all announcement. The Overture is that to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," there is a "roaring comedy," there is an organ solo and a natural color picture, but there is nothing to get you interested in any one of these items, because they are all merely announced and not sold. It all suggests something rather less than nothing, where the same bill, played up in type and talked about could have been put over. The general effect is to tell you that there is a show at the Circle, but you are not given the slightest desire to see it. If you are determined to go, that is what you will see, but no one seems to care whether you come or not, and you include yourself in that category, if you are an amusement seeker and are not thoroughly sold on the Circle idea. Make a noise about your show whether you have a first run or a year-old subject. At least act as though you were proud of it, and the newspaper column is not the place to be artistic.

TOO WEAK TO ATTRACT

"Nanook" Advertising Suggests the Snows

Most exhibitors who have played "Nanook of the North" have been quick to use the snow angle for the appeal. Loew's Columbia theatre, Washington, uses the snow-clad lettering for the title, but makes the animals the cut appeal, the layout suggesting the advertising for 'Strongheart.' It is simple and effective, but puts all of the real selling over to the type, since the cut serves only as an attractor to the space. It performs this office very well, but it does not do more. However, the frozen letters and the well-written text complete the sale to most persons; a sale which might have been made more directly through the use of the Eskimo figure instead of the dog. As a rule, this head would have been capital—it is for that matter—but where there is available a stronger appeal, that bid should be used to make selling the more complete. Doubtless this sold as well but it took a longer time, since the patron had to be argued with, and it leaves a better effect when you can get him in without a struggle. This seems to be the case where a good idea has been represented, because it was a good idea originally and without reference to other angles. The use of Strongheart for "The Silent Call,, was indicated because the dog was more than half the show and because that was the chief thing to make the sale with. Here the attractor is as strong, but not as strong as other angles, for which reason it is not the best possible means of getting attention to the play. The most interesting thing about this advertisement is the exceedingly neat layout; which is even better than the average

The more stress given the Arctic Circle, the better the sales.

A Hyman Novelty

One of the recent productions by Eddie Hyman at the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, is a drop painted in a neutral color with a large circular opening. This opening occupies about two-fifths the width of the drop.

In the circle stands a singer against a brightly lighted painted ground, while in front dancers in white robes interpret the song being sung. This makes a production of a simple song number and greatly increases the appeal. With a change in the backings, the set can be used repeatedly. An iris effect can be worked with wings to slide across the opening, each half being cut to match the radius of the circle, or the opening can be covered with scrim and the lights dimmed out, if desired. Played straight it made a decided hit with the Strand audiences.

BELLE OF ALASKA. Picture is very good. No exhibitor need be ashamed to run it. I did not do very well, but it was due to warm weather and dull times. No fault of the picture. Benj. William Fey, Madison Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TONIGHT? This picture made box office history for us. Seven reels of showmen's hokum, but it pleases and gets the business. Ran two days; big second day. Advertising; everything, cards, heralds, posters all over town, lobby display and slide campaign. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; extra good. Alfred N. Sack, New Dreamland Theatre, San Antonio, Texas.

F. B. O.

GLORY OF CLEMENTINA. Just gets by. Pauline Frederick's admirers, and they are legion, will be satisfied, but not enthusiastic. Pleased 60 per cent. Patronage; high class. Attendance, fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

First National

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. Excellent entertainment from beginning to end. For four and a half reels the audience applauded and laughed heartily; then, wow! —one and a half reels of thrills and real melodrama that caused one to hold to the seat, and a climax that sent them out chattering and praising the show. All seemed well pleased and if they had not been I would have felt like calling the coroner. I ran a Buster Keaton, "My Wife's Relations" with the feature. This class of features will put the motion picture back on the map. Characterization good; photography good. In all, a dandy show. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

GOLDEN SNARE. Average Curwood picture to very poor business. No fault of picture as Curwoods always pull fine. Advertising, usual. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

MY BOY. Personally I thought this much better than "Peck's Bad Boy," but several of my patrons told me that they did not think so. Advertising, twenty-four sheet, ones, photos, etc. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

MY LADY FRIENDS. Nothing to it for me. Patrons walked out before it was finished. All reported it the nearest to nothing they had ever seen. Advertising, ones and photos. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

ONE CLEAR CALL. Good in many respects. A picture worth while booking. Scenario good, acting superb. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. One that will make you forget your worries. Pleased 100 per cent. Advertising, photos, ones and dodgers. Patronage, general. Attendance, extra good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

R. S. V. P. Rather slow. Not up to the Ray standard, but it's much better than the ordinary picture. Advertising, newspaper, twenty-four sheet, photos. Patronage, first class. Attendance, good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

SEVENTH DAY. Not exactly up to patrons' expectations. They expect more from Barthelmess. Not bad, however. Advertising, extra. Patronage, better class. Attendance, fair. K. H Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. Great! A perfect picture. One of the best we ever played. One hundred per cent. Advertising, extra campaign. Patronage, high class. Attendance, good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TWO MINUTES TO GO. Best Ray picture we have had, and our people seemed to like it. Has a college football spirit that is most pleasing all the way. Patrons seemed to like it and came out good for it. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE. This is a wonderful picture. Lots of truth. The baby is a wonder. Advertising, three sheet, posters. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. D. D. Purcell, Muse U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

THE WOMAN'S SIDE. Good beginning; bad ending. Seemed as though it was chopped off. Too abrupt. Advertising, papers and posters. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

Fox

ARABIAN LOVE. If Fox will send you a good print on this, you can step on this one harder than you did on "Sheik." My patrons told me they liked this one better than "The Sheik," although Gilbert doesn't wear any patent leather hair. Advertising, did not advertise this half enough. Patronage, small town. Attendance, very good. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

BAR NOTHING. The best Jones we have had. Advertising, ones, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. E. S. French & Son, Memorial Hall, Pine River, Minnesota.

JACKIE. This pleased the majority. Touches of humor overcomes weak tendencies. Fourth spoiled the crowd. Advertising, ones, slide, cards. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

LAST TRAIL. Extra good picture; also good star. Well directed. Book it; it's a money getter. Advertising, paper and posters. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

ONE MAN TRAIL. A very good Buck Jones' Western, but the film was in such terrible shape that there was not much left but a few grease spots. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. From looks of the press book I imagined it would be mainly an excuse to show some beautiful women with as few clothes on as possible; but I find that it has a real plot. The chariot race is exciting. Advertising, ones, threes, twenty-fours, slide and program. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, fair. H. L. Fox, Tokio Theatre, Morehouse, Missouri.

ROAD DEMON. Excellent attraction; plenty of speed and action. Our first Mix. They are asking for more. Advertising, three and ones and lobby cards. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre, Thornton, Arkansas.

SHAME. Overdrawn. Pretty colors in the film. It was a "shame" to call it a special. Advertising, posters, etc. Patronage, best rural. Attendance, fair. R. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewiston, Ohio.

SKY HIGH. Pronounced by Mix fans to be poor but contains beautiful scenery of Grand Canyon. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

STAGE ROMANCE. Not the kind of a picture fans like to see Farnum in. Result, after hard plugging to get them in, your audience is disgusted with it. Why don't Fox get next to himself and give us Farnum in some more like the old-time "Spoilers" and leave "If I Were King" and so on over in the old country? Advertising, billboards, heralds, newspapers and windows. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. J. S. Kallet, Strand Theatre, Rome, New York.

Goldwyn

BRANDING IRON. I thought the morals of the picture were a little hazy in places, but for a town that is not too critical it will go over nicely. The heat was something awful on the night that I played it but they came out just the same. Advertising, used special card with mailing list, also usual ones and slide. Patronage, small manufacturing town. Attendance, good, considering hot weather. M. V. Cousins, People's Theatre, Pineland, Texas.

COME ON OVER. You tell the world that this picture will please as nearly all of them as anything ever made. It certainly is a peach of a picture. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

GODLESS MEN. It had a moral but that did not pay my expenses. I could not get them out on this. Advertising, lobby, slide, one sheet. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

JUST OUT OF COLLEGE. Absolutely fine. A little old; but it will please any audience. Advertising, nothing special. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

NORTH WIND'S MALICE. Another good Rex Beach story that pleased. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

POVERTY OF RICHES. A 100 per cent. picture; pleased everyone who saw it. Awful hot. Advertising, lobby, newspaper and billboards. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, poor. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

WATCH YOUR STEP. Cullen Landis, star—for this picture, says it all for us. One of the very best comedy dramas of the year. Pleased just about all of them. It has class written all over it. If this fails to please, you had better shut up your show shop and do something else. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

GIRL FROM GOD'S COUNTRY. Plenty of outdoor action and thrills. Advertising, usual. Patronage, better class. Attendance, fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Hodkinson

KING SPRUCE. A good north wood picture, good story. Pleased. Advertising, ones, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. E. S. French & Son, Memorial Hall, Pine River, Minnesota.

DON'T WRITE LETTERS. Our people go to our competitor's theatre whenever we show a Gareth Hughes' picture. Somehow or other he does not take with the masses who patronize the movies. Picture a program offering, nothing more. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

FOUR HORSEMEN. As every exhibitor knows it's a wonderful picture, but didn't make money for me. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

I CAN EXPLAIN. Not much to this one. Many walked out on it, saying it was stupid, silly, etc. Advertising, usual. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, poor. J. A. Emery, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

This incomplete film "crime" has a lot to it. Dave Seymour leaves his Pontiac Theatre Beautiful auditorium long enough to dash in a note about it, admitting it's too big to handle hastily, but giving some straight stuff just the same.

"It has many interlocking angles," he says, "'Bum' equipment in the cheaper houses, and all that stuff, which tends to put a comparatively new film on the fritz. The little theatres have an alibi; the producer or distributor has an alibi; and it looks to me like when they send the film to the very small towns that they don't care whether their product is in good shape or not—it's the last drop out of the lemon and they should worry, and the rentals are not sufficiently large to keep the film in shape."

Truth, sure enough! But the exhibitor owes it to his fellows to see that the picture is treated white. As for the distributor, does he SELL THE PICTURE AS DAMAGED GOODS?

VAN.

THEY LIKE 'EM ROUGH. Step on it, boys. It's a corking good one, and will please 100 per cent. Different from usual run of Dana's and will please all classes. Price was right on this one, but they want a 50 per cent. advance on the next. Don't we small town exhibitors catch the old Nick? Advertising, heralds, mailing list, threes and ones. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. Contains all the charm and humor that made the play so successful. Did not draw well, but would call it a thoroughly pleasing picture. Advertising, rather heavy campaign. Patronage, high class. Attendance, poor. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

WITHOUT LIMIT. Good picture. A trifle too heavy for our people. Laboring men here for season walked out on this. No favorable comments from patrons. Advertising, newspaper and lobby display. Patronage, general. Attendance, poor. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

Paramount

BEYOND THE ROCKS. A good picture of its kind, photography is splendid, but the story is of the calibre that our patrons do not care for, except the women; they like it. The pictures which they rave over in the cities many times fall flat in the small towns. Advertising; two columns, twelve inch, two papers. Patronage; country town. Attendance poor. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. This pleased 100 per cent. If you have a town that likes Gloria Swanson and Valentino be sure and grab this one; it will get you the money and please them mostly all. Patronage; small town, all classes. Attendance; good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

CALL OF THE NORTH. Plain, ordinary "pitcher." Couldn't call it bad, yet it's not good enough to recommend to your patrons. Advertising; newspapers, photos, posters. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

FOREVER. Too intricate; dream pictures don't go. Star's work, as usual, very good. Advertising; posters and papers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Juan Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

GREAT MOMENT. Very good picture. Swanson at her best. Pleased the patrons. Advertising; extra. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HEART SPECIALIST. Mary Miles Minter was well liked by our patrons. Advertising; lobby, newspaper and photos. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Thomas Clark, Electric Theatre, Maryville, Missouri.

HELD BY THE ENEMY. If you don't know the Civil War is over, play this. Nearly everyone else in the picture wore whiskers except the hero, and he looked as if he had a massage just before rushing into the conflict and saving the day. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

HELIOTROPE. Very good program picture. It pleased my audience. Advertising; heralds, one sheet, photos. Patronage; town. Attendance; fair. Harry C. Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, South Dakota.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE? Very, very rotten; for me, no better than junk. Advertising; six, three, ones, slide, photos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very poor. R. Marsden, Jr., Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE? Fair. Not much of a story. Good comedy and cast. Not the picture I thought it was. Advertising; posters, programs, newspaper, window display. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

LAW AND THE WOMAN. A pleasing picture, well acted and produced. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LOVE'S BOOMERANG. Very clever little picture. Pleased all who saw it, but weather was bad. Mrs. W. E. Arthur, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

LOVE SPECIAL. A good picture that is sure to please. Advertising; small town advertising. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

MORAN OF LADY LETTY. Everything a real picture should have. Good box office attraction and one that will please. A real melodrama. Book it, advertise it, and make some money. Advertising; street banner, lobby, newspaper. Patronage; mixed on this one. Attendance; good. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. Good Western picture. Pleased everyone. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. F. S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

TOO MUCH SPEED. Very good Reid picture; went over big in my town. Good story and plenty of action. This is the kind we want in this bum season. Advertising; six sheets, threes, ones, heralds, slide, newspaper. Patronage; small towns. Attendance; good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

Pathe

Playgoers

ACROSS THE DIVIDE. This is a good clean Western, good enough for any house. Did very good business for a two day showing. But the night scenes are too dark; give us more light. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

BUTTERFLY GIRL. Must have been asleep when they booked us this one. Marjorie Daw, King Baggott, and Fritzi Brunette in five reels of misery. No laughs, no action, no story—nothing. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, regular. Alfred N. Sack, New Dreamland Theatre, San Antonio, Texas.

HILLS OF MISSING MEN. Very good Western and will please all. And they don't try to rob you. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Selznick

AFTER MIDNIGHT. Nothing to it. Reels very short. I can do nothing with Select pictures, although some of them are very good. Advertising, sixes, threes, ones, slide. Patronage, usual. Attendance, poor. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

EVIDENCE. A very fine picture, at the right price. Had more favorable comments on this picture than on some we paid ten times as much for. Advertising, newspapers and billboards. Patronage, high class. Attendance, good. John A. Schwalin, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

REPORTED MISSING. Made them laugh plenty, and they came in goodly numbers. Play this; if properly exploited you'll do well—I did. Advertising, mailing list, heralds, ones and threes. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

REPORTED MISSING. Very good comedy and drew good houses. Well bolstered with short stuff. Advertise as comedy and you'll do good business. Advertising, newspaper, lobby, slide. Patronage, city. Attendance, good. L. O. Hoover (viewing as spectator while on trip), at Princess Theatre, Denver, Colorado.

United Artists

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. Mary Pickford playing both parts was wonderful and it will suit admirers of Mary Pickford, but is more suitable for churches or schools than the average audiences; there is not enough action. It isn't worth a boost in price, but you have to at price they ask. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

THREE MUSKETEERS. Very good. Fairbanks' best yet. Did not draw as well as "Way Down East." Did not make any money on it. They ask too much for it. Audience was well pleased. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

WAY DOWN EAST. One of the finest we have had this season to show. Rental too high for us and we lost money. Attendance, fair. H. R. Walker, Classic Theatre, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, Canada.

WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY. Picture fine. Star very popular; business good. Advertising, regular paper order. Patronage, everybody. Attendance, very good. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

In the Corner

Down yonder in the corner of this page is a report blank. Fill it in—tear it out—send it on. MORE REPORTS MEAN BETTER BOOKINGS.

Universal

THE BEAR CAT. A good picture from any angle. Advertising, newspaper and posters. Patronage, family. Attendance, good. Arthur G. Pearson, Melrose Auditorium, Melrose, Massachusetts.

CONFLICT. Good action picture. Story not connected as it should be. Part missing. Too big a price for rental. Advertising; special. Attendance; fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

FALSE KISSES. A very good program picture. Photography very poor in close up scenes and in interior of lighthouse. Advertising; one sheets. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FOOLISH WIVES. It's a money getter and pleased 100%. Don't fail to book it. It's great medicine for the box office. Patronage; small town. Attendance; extra good. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

THE FREEZE OUT. Harry Carey in a pleasing role and we did fairly good. We are well pleased with Harry's pictures. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; fairly good. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

HEADIN' WEST. A knockout western drama. Hoot Gibson running a close race with Tom Mix. Great paper. Advertising; sixes, threes, ones, slide. Patronage; usual. Attendance; good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HER NIGHT OF NIGHTS. Not up to expectations on account of title misleading, otherwise the picture was good. Advertising; slides and posters. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

KISSED. Cracker-jack society comedy. This little star is gaining favor fast, and this picture knocked them for the count. Many situations that had a punch worth while. Pleased the folks. We say it did. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

MAN UNDER COVER. A bum picture; no good. Advertising; ones and threes. Patronage; regular. Attendance; fair. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

OUTSIDE THE LAW. Bucked chautauqua in neighboring town and played to a fair sized, well pleased audience. Dean and Chaney are a good combination. Advertising; ones, window cards, photos, stickers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

STEP ON IT. My first Hoot Gibson and one of the best westerns I have had at any price. Full of action and comedy. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

STEP ON IT. Good as all of Hoot's, but this one didn't please as much as some of his others. Business only fair on a two-day showing. Wm. Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

THE TRAP. Only a fair picture which did not seem to go over here. It's better to leave it alone. There is, however, some very fine character acting, especially on the part of Chaney. Patronage; fair. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

TRIMMED. A breezy Western comedy drama which never lacks for pep and action. Measures up to the usual Hoot Gibson pictures. Hoot sure is well liked. He has a pleasing smile. Will more than please a real human audience. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood; Minnesota.

PRODIGAL JUDGE. Put it on as a big special and got by pretty good. People liked it. Advertising; lobby, slide, newspapers. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fine. Thomas Clark, Electric Theatre, Maryville, Missouri.

SILENT VOW. A dandy picture, as all of Duncan's are. This pleased 100%. Acting, scenery and story good. You can't go wrong on Duncan's, all good action in them. Patronage; middle class. Wm. Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Comedies

CARTER DE HAVEN COMEDIES (Paramount). "Teasing the Soil," "Never Again," "Spirits." Two reels of good clean fun, much better than the average. Best Paramount comedies we have shown. Patronage; rural. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

CIRCUS CLOWNS (Universal). Very good. Features Baby Peggy and Brownie. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

DOGGONE TORCHY (Educational). A comedy that is a comedy. Made them laugh. You can't go wrong on a "Torchy" comedy. Advertising; slide and poster. Patronage; better class. Attendance; poor. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

CURED BY RADIO (Universal). Few laughs in this one. The timeliness of the subject matter, however, puts it over. Advertising; one sheet, newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

Tell About It!

Jack W. Ogilvie, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma, says: "I think every exhibitor, when he gets a bad one or a good one, should tell the other boys about it. It means a greater and better industry."

MR. OGILVIE DOES IT. DO YOU?

COPS (First Nat'l).—Here's a great Buster Keaton comedy. The rental is high, but it's worth it if you compare it with other comedies. Not good for us, because it didn't get the crowd for certain reasons. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

HARD LUCK (Metro). Have run four of Metro Buster Keatons and they are all good. "Hard Luck" is a knockout. They laughed so hard, that it brought them in off the street. You can advertise this one big. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; good, for two days. Wm Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

LADIES PETS (Educational). All kinds of animals used in this one, and it makes one of the best comedies that could be asked for. Advertising; regular. Attendance; fair. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

Short Subjects

THE GETAWAY (Universal). Started out wrong and finished wrong; not completed. Wm. Thatcher, Salina, Kansas.

SELZNICK NEWS NO. 1054 (Selznick). This issue is crammed with most interesting events and offers plenty of variety. There are two or three items which can be featured in advertising and figured on drawing some business. Advertising; paper, newspapers. Harold Wendt, Opera House, Defiance, Ohio.

State Rights

THE HELL HOUND OF THE WEST (Western Pictures Exploitation). This is an action picture, but nothing else. Plot shallow, but thrilling situations and good acting pleased the followers of this type of play. The title and lobby display undoubtedly accounted for the big business. An old time Indian play goes well occasionally. Advertising; one sheets, 11x14s, newspapers, electric sign. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli, Defiance, Ohio.

LONE HAND WILSON (Federated). Cuneo good. The company very bad and the story suffered from a poor producer. Advertising; newspaper and poster. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. Arthur G. Pearson, Melrose Auditorium, Melrose, Massachusetts.

LOTUS BLOSSOM (James B. Loeng). Wonderful spectacular production, in fact, the best Chinese picture I ever booked. Had good comments on this one. Give me more pictures of that calibre, with a modern story. Advertising; lobby and six sheets. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. R. Covella, Cine Mexicali, Mexicali, Mexico.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM (Arrow). A wonderful production, much better than the play or book. I lost money on it on account of having the first tent show of the season for competition. Advertising; lobby, heralds, banners, one sheets. Patronage; best. Attendance; poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma,

TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM (Arrow). This would be a class A for melodramas, if a little more care and money had been put into production of interior scenes, and a few more prominent players had been used. Went over O. K. No complaint on attendance. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Hurricane's Gal

(Dorothy Phillips—First National—7,944 feet)

M. P. W.—One of the most picturesque sea subjects that has been provided.

F. D.—One of the few current releases that are well worth seeing and anyone who appreciates a good picture will surely want to see "Hurricane's Gal."

T. R.—A picture that is sure to win well deserved popularity among the myriad admirers of melodramatic "punch" and sizzling action.

N.—It's a stirring and graphic picture.

Married People

(Mabel Ballin—Hodkinson—5,200 feet)

M. P. W.—Mabel Ballin's beauty, personality and acting are the chief assets.

F. D.—Splendid production makes story more interesting than it would be ordinarily.

N.—Hugo Ballin has done pretty well by this story—a story which might have been easily ruined had he not embellished it with deft touches here and there.

T. R.—The play concerns itself with incident that is fundamentally undramatic and presents its episodes in a loose and disorderly fashion.

The Ladder Jinx

(Featured Cast—Vitagraph—5,068 feet)

M. P. W.—High-class comedy that will make 'em laugh heartily.

T. R.—Guaranteed to charm away the blues and keep an audience on the broad grin from beginning to end.

N.—The story is a wild one, somewhat drawn out and at times ludicrous, but, withal that, it's entertaining, and inasmuch as it has been made for fun purposes only, one can overlook the impossible parts.

E. H.—Quite good entertainment.

The Worldly Madonna

(Clara Kimball Young—Equity—6 reels)

M. P. W.—Clara Kimball Young has furnished exhibitors with many box-office pictures this season, but "The Worldly Madonna" represents her best work.

E. H.—While story is not particularly strong, nor convincing, the work of Miss Young and other members of cast is pleasing.

N.—The appeal of the picture is problematical.

F. D.—Lots of good acting, strong drama, contrast and all the other elements that go to make an appealing production, but the story fails to convince and the star gains little sympathy for herself.

Up in the Air About Mary

(Louise Lorraine—Associated Exhibitors—5 reels)

M. P. W.—As a whole it will serve as a good, light entertainment if too much is not expected.

E. H.—A light and pleasing program entertainment.

N.—For those who like to go to the "movies" to laugh and not to use their brains, this production will do very nicely.

T. R.—A light and breezy comedy which provides fairly good entertainment for sultry weather.

(Jane Novak—Film Booking Offices—4,738 feet)

M. P. W.—However familiar the plot material may be, it is produced interestingly and there is a twist toward the end that gives the story a fresher appearance just before the climax.

F. D.—A good picture, but the same old mounted police slogan story.

N.—In territories where melodrama is popular, this picture should meet with favor.

T. R.—The entertainment values of this picture are very much above the average.

"Rich Men's Wives"

Al Lichtman Hands Exhibitors Tornado in This Great Picture

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Al Lichtman made certain promises to the exhibitors of the country that he would strive to give them pictures that would fatten box office receipts. And he has wasted no time fulfilling that promise for in the first release of the Al Lichtman Corporation, "Rich Men's Wives," he has a picture that will compare favorably with the best in the business. It's sure-fire material that he has given the theatre owners in this production, which is luxurious in settings, and valuable in cast and story. Whatever superlative claims you make for this feature will be substantiated by the picture itself for it has everything, pathos, humor, thrills and romance. There are sighs and smiles and tears and laughs. It is a picture built on what can be rightly advertised as "the story of the greatest kiss the world has ever known," a broken-hearted baby's kiss for a wronged mother. And if you can utilize your imagination right here you can get a fairly comprehensive idea of what this story is all about; it has possibilities and Gasnier overlooked nothing. This picture can be shown at the "blue blood" houses and the so-called small town theatres, and go over like a tornado. And this the writer says after seeing that picture applauded at the Capitol in New York and in the U. S. Theatre in Paterson, N. J. This writer saw it twice in two nights and it's that good that one can enjoy seeing it a dozen times. It's worth that much.

As a production it looms up like a million dollars, elaborate, pretentious and extensive in every way. The story, gripping with heart interest that will bring tears to your patrons as it did to those who saw it in New York and Paterson, is powerful and inspires exploitation. The cast is consistent with the bigness of settings and story, for in "Rich Men's Wives," Claire Windsor and House Peters do their best work. Particularly splendid is Miss Windsor in the role of the wronged woman; is charmingly sympathetic and knows what she is doing all the time. Her scene with clever little Richard Headrick, as Jackie, where both struggle on either side of a window pane, both making desperate efforts to kiss the other, is the one of the most soul-stirring episodes ever incorporated into any picture. Gaston Glass is another player who is deserving of mention for his meritorious work as the "heavy." The cast as a whole is good and convincingly strong, individually and collectively.

The lighting adds to the superlative entertainment value of this feature, while the direction is flawless and a credit to Gasnier and Ben Shulberg, who produced the picture.

Go after this one tooth and nail.

The Story

Gay Davenport, child of wealthy, but neglectful parents, is wooed by John Masters, who marries her. They have a child, Jackie. Piqued by her husband's neglect of her Gay flirts outrageously but innocently. Juan Camillo follows her to her cabin, where the two are found by Masters, who condemns his wife and sends her away from home. Alone and virtually penniless, Gay finds work, makes vain trips to her home to see her son, who is made to believe his mother is dead. Masters, still loving his wife, but stubborn, takes to drink and neglects Jackie. One night, during the height of revelry at the Masters home, Gay forces her way to Jackie's room where she finds him ill. During the revelry, one of the "butterflies" suggests the election of sickly Jackie as Cupid. She mistakes Gay for a nurse, rushes downstairs with the child, undresses him and is about to place him in the basin of a fountain, when the motherly instinct in Gay rebels. She rushes to her son's aid, rebukes the guests and her husband. The latter is brought to his senses ultimately and a happy reconciliation is affected in a most entertaining and logical way.

Exploitation Angles: If you can't tear things loose with "the greatest kiss" appeal you can't ever make money, but you can pull holiday business on a Monday night if you even go halfway. Bat it over to the limit.

"The Sage Brush Trail"

H. H. Van Loan Prepares a Thrilling Story for Western Pictures Exploitation Company—Has Splendid Cast

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

With the three-fold advantage of fine authorship, cast and directing, "The Sage Brush Trail" has the essentials that make a solid box office success. It reaches a standard far above what is called an average Western. In the successful handling of material that is not new, it indicates that the popularity of a picture depends not nearly so much upon novelty as upon clever workmanship and a convincing cast. The action is so interesting that hardly once does the spectator stop to remind himself that he is watching the development of one of the most familiar of plots.

H. H. Van Loan is responsible for the script and the use of his name in exploitation will inspire confidence in the picture with the many who are aware of his skill. He has moulded the scene with fine suspense. The co-operation of an unusually strong cast and a faithful director makes his efforts doubly secure.

Roy Stewart and Marjorie Daw play with a reserve that is not typical of the usual western and will be appreciated by the better class of patrons. In the scene where the girl plays with the truth to prolong her brother's safety, Miss Daw shows a subtlety that is fascinating. Wallace Beery as the Mexican braggart has a scene which he does so cleverly that one almost forgets to hate him, as the part demands. The other important role is played by Johnnie Walker, a perfect type for the brother.

There are several scenes that stand out. The search in the girl's home for her brother is ingeniously managed and the fight between Roy Stewart and Wallace Beery is realistic almost to a harrowing degree. The camera too, comes in for its share of credit as the desert and mountain scenery has been photographed with beautiful effects. A decided improvement could be made by shortening the subtitles.

The Cast

Larry Reid.....Roy Stewart
Mary Gray.....Marjorie Daw
Neil.....Johnnie Walker
Jose Fagaro.....Wallace Beery

Story and Scenario by H. H. Van Loan
Direction by Robert Thornby
Length, 4470 feet.

The Story

Larry Reid as the Sheriff of Silvertown, has established a disarmament law. When he finds a gun in the hands of Neil, a stranger, right after a continued shooting, he chases him out of town, following him as far as the home of Mary Grey, the schoolmistress with whom Larry is in love. Mary evades his questioning but Larry suspects that she is sheltering the man. He leaves with the threat that he will pursue Neil to the last. He brings him back to Mary and learns that he is her brother. Meantime Mary has an unwelcome visitor in Fagaro the Mexican bandit and Larry arrives in time to save her. Neil explains that he was framed by Fagaro in the beginning and that he had no real part in the shooting. Fagaro is arrested and Larry believes once more in the pretty schoolmistress.

"Insinuation"

Margery Wilson Production Wholesome in Theme and Faithful in Detail

Reviewed by C. M. Inman

It is absolutely refreshing to review a picture like "Insinuation," whose real value and appeal lies, at the outset, in its naturalness and which does not have to rely upon artificialty or luxurious props to aid in the telling of the story. In reality, "Insinuation" is a page taken bodily from the book of life itself, in fact several pages, and the story they tell is natural, wholesome and absolutely faithful in detail and delineation. The plot of the picture-story is laid amid magnificent mountain scenery that is even more beautiful when covered with a mantle of snow.

In her delineation of the stellar role, Miss Wilson displays an elusive charm and delicate loveliness and in the important supporting roles she has surrounded herself with a coterie of players that are ideally cast. Percy Holton is among these. He is absolutely the type for the weak brother, for whom the sister would sacrifice even home and happiness themselves. Bradley Barker, as leading man, has a part in the village doctor who marries the stranded player, that gives him ample opportunity for the display of some excellent emotional acting, and Agnes Nielsen, who portrays the village gossip and self-appointed censor of the public morals, also is excellently cast. For the highly important role of the little daughter of the couple, a local child, Virginia Rumrill, was chosen. Her part is presented in a manner that is not only natural but absolutely devoid of self-consciousness.

It is not too much to say, however, that in the last analysis "Insinuation" will be classified as among the top-notchers, and that the exhibitor who is fortunate enough to obtain it for his patrons not alone is going to be able to please those patrons, but is sure to add to his own reputation as a picker of the worth-while.

Releasing plans have not yet been announced.

The Cast

Mary Wright.....Margery Wilson

Story, Scenario and Direction, by Margery Wilson

The Story

Mary Wright, specialty artist with a troup of barnstormers is made critically ill by the news that her brother has robbed the box-office. Dr. Crabtree a narrow-minded village physician takes care of her and falls in love with her. His maiden aunt, Prudence, fears that a marriage between the two would prove unwise. They marry anyway but Mary is unhappy except in the love for her baby girl. Dr. Crabtree receives $1000 to keep in custody for an old miser, but Mary takes this money from the safe to pay for keeping her brother out of jail. Her husband discovers her guilt and divorces her. Finally Mary goes insane. Soon the news of her brother's innocence comes to her and this is followed by a reconciliation with her husband who brings the sick child to her mother.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the stranded troupe story unless you have had one of this type very recently, and get a ride on the interest most playgoers feel in theatricals. Don't tell too much of the story, but play up the fidelity of the atmosphere.

Starland Revue No. 10

The tenth of the Starland Revue series has a distinct feminine appeal that exhibitors will find will please the male portion of their audiences. Principal exponents of this are the scenes surrounding the casting of a Broadway musical show and the episode in which Phyllis Jackson and Josephine Head perform the "Three Waltzes" number from Michie Ito's "Pinwheel Revue." Other interesting scenes are shots at the recent Lights Club Circus; back stage bits with Eddie Cantor, showing him making up for his various characters in his latest show; parts of musical numbers from the all-negro show, "Strut Miss Lizzie," and an amusing little bit enacted by William Kent, of "Good Morning Dearie," and his wife, depicting the troubles of a married man locked out of his home. (Released by F. B. O.)—F. T.

In bringing interesting and intimate scenes of stage people before screen onlookers, Starland Revue is making a fine addition to the increasingly important short subject side of picture entertainment programs. These chatty one-reelers, released weekly by F. B. O., will fit in any bill.—F. T.

'The Door That Has No Key'

Evelyn Brent Starred in Modern Picturization of an Interesting Theme—Produced by Alliance Film Company

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Cosmo Hamilton's story on an intimate theme has been treated here with a striking frankness without any touches whatever of sensation or vulgarity. There is nothing in it to displease the fastidious and much that will be of interest to those who find enjoyment in the more modern methods of handling an age-old theme.

The conflict, which is of a subtle nature, is expressed in two opposing feminine characterizations—the mother type and the social star—a study that is universally interesting and promise entertainment for both sexes. This is the most important but by no means the only angle of interest. With even sequence, each incident and situation is constructed to make a production that measures up, artistically.

Evelyn Brent courageously tackles a character that cannot possibly be attractive to anyone. It is a cold, inhuman part, and she seems to have read into the author's purpose with keen understanding. Agnes Southwick is a beautiful type for the contrasting role and the sincerity of George Relph in the leading masculine role wins approval.

The dignified English country places make charming exteriors for the action. The interiors, too, are a point of satisfaction, as they have beauty without tawdry display.

Length, 4,853 Feet.

The Story

The story deals with the marital misunderstandings of a young lawyer and his ultra modern wife. The wife aspires to social advancement and cannot afford to take the time to fulfill what her husband thinks is her part of the marriage contract. She plainly tells him that she cannot find time to give him children, as her social duties would suffer. He strives in every way to find the key to her better womanhood, but in vain, for it is a door that has no key.

Surrounded by false friends, a wife who is false to her duty and by a hard world, he struggles upward to fame, thinking to fill his empty heart with the hollow plaudits of the crowd. At last in the love of a simple daughter of a country minister he finds the ideal womanly perfection, and is united to her by marriage after the first wife in her folly casts him off.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill"

Universal's New Historical Serial Has Wide Appeal and Strong Interest

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill," the most recent of the chapter plays to be distributed by Universal, promises, from a view of the first five episodes, to be a serial that not only will be a tremendous success in theatres where serials are the custom but will also meet with approval in houses that do not make a practice of showing the continued-in-our-next form of entertainment. It is a decidedly worth while achievement and at the same time is engrossingly interesting. It is entertainment with a purpose and Universal may justifiably be proud of releasing it and an exhibitor in showing it is giving his clientele amusement that has a vivid background of educational value.

A story that has all the elements of popular appeal, what with love interest, excitement, suspense and drama, is closely linked with historical interest. The latter feature is so prominent that it should be but a simple matter for an exhibitor to obtain the co-operation of local educators in exploiting the serial, which is in eighteen episodes of two reels each. The historical angle is so definite that the entertainment value is increased a hundred fold and will more than assist in building up and retaining the interest of the spectator to the end that it will keep him attending throughout the eighteen chapters.

The tale is woven around the construction of the original iron trail that connected the East with the West—the Union Pacific Railroad—in the time during and just after the Civil War. Over one hundred and fifty characters from history are said to be included in the progress of the story, and this may be substantiated by the fact that the initial episodes include more such noted figures than can be enumerated here. The principal of these is, of course, William F. Cody, later known as "Buffalo Bill," who was at that time a noted scout and agent of the celebrated Pony Express. Lincoln, his famous cabinet, war generals and famous plainsmen heroes are some of the others that are faithfully depicted and furnish a thrill of interest. These characters are not dragged in merely for their historical value but are logically worked into the story or are prime figures in the movement of the plot. The scenes are historically correct, and for this, among other things, including well staged action, Edward Laemmle, the director, is to be heartily commended.

Art Accord plays the role of Buffalo Bill's intrepid companion and gives a fast riding, courageous and capably acted performance. Duke R. Lee gives a graphic picture of Cody in his younger days. The feminine appeal lies in the hands of Dorothy Woods, who fulfills all requirements. The historical character are played by excellent types.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill" has tremendous drawing powers, and when they are in the theatre each episode will entertain and portray a page from the history of our country during one of its most romantic periods.

"A Pair of Aces"

Jane and Katherine Lee provide excellent entertainment in this comedy, released by Fox. It is a sparkling number, featuring the two children to good advantage and lending a spontaneity to their actions that makes the effect doubly pleasing. While they possess unusual talent, nothing beyond their years has been required of them and the director has handled them so as to bring out what appears to be a perfectly natural mischievousness. The poor-house nightmare in the second reel is a grand and glorious comedy in itself. "A Pair of Aces" is a composite of several previous releases so that it is practically a new production with the advantage of including only the best features of the earlier pictures.—M. K.

"The American Toreador"

Anchor's Comedy Drama Is Breezy and Entertaining

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Bill Patton may have his own aspirations, but from the viewpoint of this reviewer he would find it to his advantage to continue depicting just such a snappy, breezy, Cohanesque role as he enacts in "The American Toreador." This is a picture out of the ordinary, for it has a story that is different with enough action to satisfy those who crave excitement, drama to meet the requirements of the more serious-minded element, and comedy that furnishes fifty laughs to the reel.

Anchor Film Distributing Corporation need have no fear of its future if it continues giving the State rights market pictures like "The American Toreador." Every role is well handled, but it is the ease and the natural work of Patton that holds one's attention. Here is a production that should be exploited to the limit, for it's the brand that bids fair to be popular this coming season. The background is laid in that romantic land of Spain, with types that are ideal, a bull fight that is a whirlwind, a half dozen fights that pull you out of your seat and a brand of romance that has never been known to fail with an American audience.

Two promising players, in addition to Bill Patton, are introduced in "The American Toreador," which is excellently directed, and these are Virginia Warwick, as beautiful a brunette as there is on the screen today and particularly suitable to the Spanish senorita role that she so aptly portrays, and Sam Turner, a colored gentleman, who is an Exalted Ruler of the Merry Order of Laugh-makers. Sam Turner should be an excellent subject for two-reel comedies, for he has a style of comedy that looks like sure-fire. Miss Warwick, who first attracted attention in "The Four Horsemen," never did better work. She is splendid in "The American Toreador." The rest of the cast is equally good. The lighting is satisfactory.

You can't fail with this one, Mr. Exhibitor, it's sure-fire hoakum, full of action, with enough drama and comedy to satisfy any kind of audience.

The Story

Bill, a husky Western cowboy, determines to visit the land of romance and bull throwing and vamping senoritas—Spain. Bill finds the wild and woolly West tame in comparison with the Spanish everyday life, but he finds no hardship in acclimating himself. He runs into Mose, a high brown from the home of prohibition, who was a member of his regiment during the recent war. Mose elects himself Bill's valet, more for protection than anything else. So Bill finds himself given every attention, but unconsciously assuming the role of bouncer for this darkie. Bill falls in love with a senorita who spends most of her time trying to persuade a greaser, who admits he's the champion bull thrower of Spain, that the place for bull throwing is inside the ring. But then bull throwers are bull throwers, and Bill has the time of his life trying to propose to the senorita, for whom he falls hook, line, sinker and all. But toreadors are not to be cast off, and in time Bill finds himself fighting the greaser. Of course, he wins. But the climax is staged at the arena, where the supposed champion is pinned to the ground by a rushing bull. Bill rushes into the affray and shows the greaseball how cows, bulls, and such are tossed in America—and he does it and saves the champion himself. That's the beginning of the end for the champion, who is licked at a duel, kicked around like Jim Casey's dog, and otherwise made to understand that his business is bulling the bull.

Big game hunting in Africa is reproduced with many thrills and with splendid picturesqueness in the film which Col. Eustace is now exhibiting in America. "Bulldog Courage"

Tense and Dramatic Action in Picture Made by Russell Productions

Reviewed by C. M. Inman

To those who are fond of action and the great outdoors, the rolling fields, the rugged mountains, galloping horses, fighting, and with a love story intermingled that proves anew the old adage that the course of true love never runs smooth, "Bulldog Courage" will interest and entertain and, cause some thrills. The thrills are there, all right, and at times the action in tense and very dramatic.

"Bulldog Courage" pictures the advent of a young Easterner into the cowboy country of Wyoming and shows how he made good, incidentally winning a reward of $50,000 and a bride, and ridding the country of a band of "rustlers" when he himself was under suspecion of being a member of the band.

"Bulldog Courage" is well cast, with Bessie Love and George Larkin in the leading roles, and it affords opportunity for the display of some excellent horsemanship and the attainment of some dramatic values that in both instances are well done. High-class photography adds to the picturization and, as a whole, the picture is one that will appeal strongly to the average audience.

The Story

Jimmy Brent, college athlete and ward of his uncle, John Morton, is sent West by his uncle to seek out a former rival for the hand of Mary Allen, Bob Phillips by name, who is a ranch owner in Wyoming. Having nursed resentment for years, Morton offers young Brent $50,000 if he will find Phillips and "beat him up." Brent finally reached his destination and falls in love with Phillips' daughter, Gloria. One of the Phillips' cowboys Smokey Evans, also in love with Gloria, as well as being a secret member of a band of "rustlers." He hands Phillips a note, purporting to show that Brent is a "rustler" and Brent is sent away in disgrace and under suspicion. Later Brent meets and bests Phillips in a rough and tumble fight. Brent finds the hang-out of the "rustlers" and after much fighting they are turned over to the sheriff. In the meantime Smokey Evans attempts to kidnap Gloria, but Brent arrives back at the ranch in time to trail them and to capture Evans after a thrilling fight among the cliffs. Big Bob Phillips learns of Brent's quest and the fact that he has won his uncle's $50,000, and the story ends with Gloria and Jimmy for matrimony in a gallop.

"Easy Pickin'"

First of Crescent Comedies Has Unusually Good Plot

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

The first of a series of two reel comedies produced by the T. R. Coffin Company, under the brand name of Crescent Comedies, gives high promise of some excellent material at the disposal of exhibitors who wish to augment the entertainment value of their programs with short, snappy stuff. "Easy Pickin'," the initial release of the series of six, functions as a comedy should, in that it makes you laugh, sometimes in chuckles and often deeper.

Basing judgment upon "Easy Pickin'," the Crescent comedies are clean, wholesome and different. But they are not too different to be immediately accepted as typical farce comedy material, as they strike a popular note in that form of screen entertainment. Their chief difference lies in the fact that they have far more story value than the usual run of farces and the gags are a part of the plot and not just glued on with no relation to what preceeded or that which is to follow. "Easy Pickin'" has been dressed up in feature fashion with lavish sets and unusually beautiful exteriors, and the cast includes some well known names.

Bruce Mitchell, the director of the series, deserves great credit for the excellence of the first issue, and probably for the others. He has been given an idea to work with and he handles it intelligently and like a showman.

"Easy Pickin'" is a laugh maker of the low comedy type, but with an idea behind it.

Incidentally, one of the principal roles in the comedy is played by a comedian that has never appeared on a screen earnestly watched by this reviewer. The actor's family name is Karr, with "Fat" as a first name, which is a complete characterization. But Karr can act, has the valuable combination of a winning personality and a low comedy appearance, and seems to be a good trouper. He is well worth featuring in a series of farces of the type formerly made famous by Fatty Arbuckle.

"Eustace in Africa"

Picture Presenting Travels of Colonel and Mrs. Eustace Is Rich Subject—Superb Animals and Scenery

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Twenty-seven years in the heart of Africa has given Colonel Eustace an almost unmatchable knowledge of the best that the country offers in scenery and game-hunting. Consequently this descriptive film which he has made represents more than a cursory tramp through the wild region. It reveals an interest in the subject-maatter that because of its very intensity will create enthusiasm anywhere, and an understanding of what will appeal to the uninformed that makes the picture unusually valuable.

If for no other feature than the scenes of the Victoria Falls, the film is well worthy of appreciation. These are magnificent shots, beautifully photographed. But the cast of the picture is the important thing and the lions, antelopes, pithons, zebras, rhinoceres, elephants and hippopottomae who are seen in prominent roles are wonderful specimens. The star of the picture is easily one of the lions, a superb, rare creature of the maneless species who displays the greatest interest in his unseen photographer. Col. Eustace has made a special effort to get unfamiliar specimens, as for example, the white rhinoceros.

While by far the greatest attention has been given to the animals, there are a few glimpses of the natives that will be generally interesting. Col. Eustace was accompanied by his wife on all the expeditions and personal acquaintance with her suggests the question as to why the Colonel did not insert a few close-ups of her. She is shown at a rather unsatisfactory distance taking part in some of the most thrilling hunting scenes.

It can be definitely stated that "Eustace in Africa" will be much enjoyed by the average audience. When first shown in New York it brought an unusually fine class of patrons to a theatre in one of the older commercial sections, and the showing was followed by long applause.

Releasing plans for the feature have not yet been made. The length is 5,500 feet.

"A Girl's Desire"

Alice Calhoun Proves a Versatile Actress in Vitagraph Picture with Wholesome Theme

Reviewed by C. M. Inman

Alice Calhoun, the Vitagraph star, in "A Girl's Desire" once again makes truly evident the admitted fact that she is an actress whose talents are not circumscribed by any particular type of role or acting, and that whether in comedy or in emotional acting she is equally efficient.

In this, the latest vehicle for her versatile talents, and surrounded by an all-star cast in which practically every important role brings to the fore some name famous on the "legitimate" stage, she has a whimsical role of the type in which she excels.

"A Girl's Desire" is a production in a light and frivolous vein that makes strong appeal to the average audience and is rife with complications that make for laughter and forgetfulness and afford the "tired business man" an opportunity to relax. And yet, withal, there are a number of exciting moments during which thrilling and dramatic scenes enliven the comedy flashes and add vastly to the zest of the entertaining story as depicted.

The photography throughout is clear cut and in many instances the picturization is far above the average. In fact, as a whole, there is an appeal to this picture that will make it of more than ordinary value as an attraction that may be relied upon to please the larger part of any audience. It is wholesome throughout, just frivolous enough to keep the audience in constant good humor, and with sufficient satire regarding the nouveau riche to please the ordinary citizen.

The cast chosen to support Miss Calhoun is truly representative and includes such well-known players as Lillian Lawrence, mother of Ethel Grey Terry, Warner Baxter, Victory Bateman, James Donnelly and Lydia Yeamans Titus. While these may be said to head the list, the others in the supporting cast are all that could be desired to make the ensemble a noteworthy one.

Length, 4,950 Feet.

The Story

Elizabeth Browne, daughter of H. Jerome Browne, who has been brought up as "Lizzie" until her father struck oil and became enormously wealthy, is sent to a finishing school, while her mother, with an ambition to break into high society, goes with her father to England in search of a family tree and a coat of arms. In the meantime the girls at the school refuse to admit her into their secret organization, membership in which necessitates the possession of a family crest.

While Elizabeth is undergoing this ostracism, Papa Browne and his wife have succeeded in obtaining an ancestral tree and a family portrait gallery belonging to the late Lord Dysart. The present Lady Dysart, an adventuress who had married Lord Dysart just prior to his death, has a son by a former marriage and seeks to have him wed Elizabeth. The appearance of the real Lord Dysart upon the scene, after advice from his late father's solicitors regarding the plot underway, and his success in becoming the secretary to old "Hank" Brown, initiate the complications that give play for the dramatic moments that follow, and the final expose of the conniving mother and son, with the subsequent marriage of Elizabeth and the real Lord Dysart.

"When Husbands Deceive"

Intense Drama Marks Leah Baird Production—Associated Exhibitors Release

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

In her most recent production, Leah Baird chose to be practically the whole works, adding a little oil and fuel for good measure. The result proves unequivocally that her choice was wise. She is largely instrumental in turning out a very good picture of the tensely dramatic type. Miss Baird wrote the story, made the scenario, arranged the continuity and then played the leading role. And she has done everything expertly, also with an eye towards the showmanship angle. The story strikes a popular note and it has been pictorially expressed to good advantage.

Wallace Worsley, the director, was about the only other person concerned with the production except the cameraman and the film editor. He accomplished his part of the finished product with his customary skill. The cameraman and editor also deserve praise for their share of the entertainment value.

The chief appeal of the picture will be found to lie in its intensely dramatic story, it being told in such a way that the drama is enhanced. But there are also many other points of appeal, chief among them being the lavish production, which is all in good taste, and the acting of the cast. Miss Baird gives a sincere and able performance of a difficult role and she is supported by players who contribute greatly to the numerous dramatic moments. Special mention should be made of William Conklin's delineation of one of the rottenest, meanest villains that has been encountered in some time. Teddy, the dog, and Darwin, the monkey, should not be neglected in the credits. Both of them figure prominently in the exposition of the plot.

"When Husbands Deceive" is a perfectly safe bet when strong drama is desired.

The Story

Marshall Walsh, guardian of Viola Baxter, dupes her into believing her fiance, Richard Fletcher, a thief. Her trust in Fletcher gone, she marries Walsh, innocently falling into his trap to secure her fortune. Her married life is a series of discoveries of her husband's treachery. Then Fletcher learns how he was framed, and wrings a confession from Walsh's woman accomplice. He goes to Viola with the news.

Walsh discovers the two in Viola's boudoir and attempts to prove his wife's infidelity. But Viola turns accuser and proves his dishonesty. Later, alone with his wife, he fiendishly plans to commit suicide, and take her with him to Eternity. Her cries for help are answered by her dog, who breaks his leash and leaps to defend her from the murderous intent of her husband. Eventually Viola and Fletcher find their happiness.

"His Own Law"

Pathe has another new series of two-reelers. It is known as the Range Rider Series and Leo Maloney is the star. The initial offering, "His Own Law," should prove a welcome addition to theatre programs and promises well for the success of the series. While following somewhat conventional lines there is no waste footage. There is something doing every minute, with as much pep and action as is found in a good many five-reel features.

The star is congenially cast and looks the part of the character he portrays, measuring up to the requirements for a convincing fighter and horseman. He is seen as a Texas Ranger who resigns his commission to help his sweetheart's brother who is mixed up in a dope smuggling affair. Circumstances cause him to be suspected of having killed the boy, but everything ends happily and the culprits are brought to justice. Leo Maloney is assisted by a satisfactory cast including Leonard Clapham and Chet Ryan,—C. S. S.

Universal's new serial "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" is great stuff. So fine in fact that it might be said exhibitors are neglecting a duty to their patrons if they do not show it.

Carl Laemmle states that it is a serial achievement. It is no vain boast. And Mr. Laemmle is to be complimented for placing it at the disposal of the screens of the country.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill" is such an interesting amalgamation of real entertainment and desirable education that its success is assured before audiences composed of both young and old. —F. T.

"Jan of the Big Snows"

Curwood Story Well Produced—Distributed by American Releasing

Reviewed by J. M. Shellman

The moral tone of James Oliver Curwood's story "Jan of the Big Snows" is fine and Curwood has worked it out with skill and lucidity, but, when you dissect it to it's fundamental points, you find it resembles strongly the eternal triangle with a true wife, a villain who covets her and an honorable hero. The locale of the story is in the Hudson Bay Country and instead of the Northwest Mounted Police to furnish the law and order element, there is a code of honor called "The honor of the big snows," to keep the peace.

There is a surprise ending that is different from the usual run in that the final clinch is omitted and the hero does not marry the heroine. This may be considered by some an unhappy ending. The photography is well handled; the locations picturesque; the interiors natural; the night effects excellent; the sub-titles beautifully phrased and written and the art title work handled with care.

Warner Richmond's acting is fresh and delightful. He is one of the real leading men on the screen to-day who backs up his pleasing appearance with histrionic ability. His work in "Tol'able David" stamped him as a fine actor. Louise Prussing handled her part in a natural way. Richard R. Neill overacted his part. The other members of the cast were all good.

The Story

All the action takes place at an isolated trading post where Fred Cummings returns with his bride. The entire population consists of seventeen men, including Jan, who has never had a love affair in his entire life till he meets Cummings' wife. The "honor of the big snows" demands protection for the weak—a man must suffer, starve or die before he will take what belongs to another man.

Blanding a New Yorker, arrives at the post, and his attentions forced upon Nancy cause Jan and his comrades to teach him to observe the "honor of the big snows."

"Moonshine Valley"

Fox Presents William Farnum at His Best in a Sympathetic Performance

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

William Farnum's recent appearances in conventional roles only serve to make his return to the out-door picture a more striking success than ever. "Moonshine Valley" is Farnum as he is best known and admired. He is afforded almost unlimited chances of acting, and the result is a performance of unusual strength. This is a feature of importance to the many who have enjoyed his most representative work in the past, and it is significant in planning exploitation.

"Moonshine Valley" makes use of situations and characters that have proven beyond all doubt, their entertainment value. Particularly is this true of the factors that contribute to the heart interest. The stranger who desecrates the hospitality of those who took care of him in sickness, by double crossing his host and stealing his wife; the wife who mistakes infatuation for love; the husband who becomes mad with drunkenness; and the crowning touch in the redeeming influence of the tiny child. There is something generally familiar about the material. But Herbert Brenon, the director, has handled it so as to bring out the most effective situations and with fullest appreciation of the human interest motive.

Dawn O'Day, the three-year-old child, can be counted on to win everyone in the audience. It is the old sentimental appeal of "a little child shall lead them" that has been designed to put over her part, but the impression prevails that Dawn O'Day is adorable enough personally to make any kind of a part successful. Another attractive member of the cast is Sadie Mullen, who plays opposite the star.

"Moonshine Valley" is not what its title suggests. There is no hint at the prohibited traffic unless it might be derived from one short drunken scene, included to show the change that has been brought about in the character of the hero.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Biggest Question

The question, propounded by a San Francisco projectionist is:

IF YOU WERE CALLED UPON TO DESIGN AND EQUIP A 2-PROJECTOR PROJECTION ROOM IN A HIGH CLASS MOTION PICTURE THEATRE, AND TO ADVISE AS TO THE LOCATION AND CONSTRUCTION OF SAME, AND TO ADVISE AS TO THE SELECTION OF A SCREEN, WHAT WOULD YOU DO WITH REGARD TO EVERY ONE OF THE ITEMS CONCERNED AND WHY WOULD YOU DO IT?

We now come to a much more serious objection to the long projection distance, no feasible method of avoiding which has as yet been devised.

In figure 4 we see the projector optical system with the face of the converging condenser lens sixteen inches from the aperture—which is not far from the average condition where high amperage is used. The diagram is drawn to scale. The broken lines indicate what governs the diameter and shape of the beam after it passes through the aperture. Line A indicates a 2-inch diameter lens, which just covers the beam at about 3⅜ inches working distance. Line B indicates a 2-inch diameter at six inches working distance—about the minimum working distance found where the projection distance is long.

You will observe that whereas the lens covers the entire beam at A, it does not nearly cover it at B, and there is loss of light. Under the condition shown a lens of 2½ inch free diameter would not cover the beam and admit all the light, and many theatres have a very much worse condition than this.

The Least Evil

But loss of light is the least evil. The real damage is done through unevenness of illumination. If you will examine the cone passing through a central point in the film, figure 4, you will discover that it all enters lens A; also it all enters lens B. But examine the cone passing through a point of the film near its edge and you will find that while it all enters lens A, it does not and cannot possibly all enter lens B.

This represents conditions exactly as they are with the equipment indicated, placed as indicated. Under these conditions figure 4 illustrates precisely what actually takes place. But the practical effect of it is something very few understand. You see a production projected in one theatre and it "stands out" wonderfully well. It seems to have perspective—depth—stereoscopic effect. You see the same print of the same subject projected in another theatre, and it lacks those qualities. It is "flat." UNEVENNESS OF ILLUMINATION CAUSED BY CONDITION B IS THE REASON. The lens in one theatre "picks up" all the beam, while the lens in the other theatre does not.

I could give you still other reasons why an over-long projection distance is objectionable, and seriously objectionable too, but these already enumerated seem ample and sufficient.

Limits Hard to Define

It is hard to say just what the limits of projection distance should be, but one hundred feet certainly is as great a distance as we may expect to provide conditions enabling the projectionist to produce the best possible results. I do not wish to be understood as saying that 100 feet should never be exceeded, because there may be conditions where it is not practical to keep within that distance. I do, however, most emphatically say it will pay to so locate the projection room that the projection distance will be such as will admit the use of a projection lens working distance not less than four inches or more than five inches, provided it can be done without a too-great sacrifice in other directions.

I also say, and say most emphatically, that the best results will NOT be obtained if the distance be such as will force a working distance too great to allow the lens to admit the entire beam from the aperture.

We may sum up the matter of location by saying that one should try and get the lenses as nearly as possible central with the screen center under no conditions approving a location which will increase the height of the picture by more than five per cent.

If friend boss wants a location giving a greater projection pitch, let him do it on his own responsibility, after you have explained the various effects to him. Try to keep the distance within the limits I have indicated, which in practice would mean, roughly, between 60 and 100 feet. Knowing the size picture friend boss wants you can readily, by the aid of the handbook, figure out exactly what focal length lens will be required for any distance he proposes.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

The Handbook at Last

Thanks be to Isis and Osiris, and to any and everything else I can think of, the Fourth Edition of the Handbook is here at last.

It has been just one "# : * ; % thing after another in the way of delay," until I've been driven about half mad with the strain. I am unable to even think of a printer in decent language!

I have no apology to offer, because I don't owe any. I have done everything humanely possibly to get the book out sooner, but it just seemed as though it could not be done. We've been promised and promised and promised books, until I've felt like a fool because, depending on those "printer's promises" I've promised you.

Worth the Wait

Well, anyhow I think you will agree that the book is worth the wait, and it is ready for you now. Its color is blue, and and we shall call it the BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION. There are a great mass of orders in already. As I told you the United States Government ordered one hundred copies for its navy alone. You will find the question list, with answers indicated by page number, of great value as an aid to study.

And now I am anxious to know just what you think of the book, so let me hear from you as soon as you've given it a thorough examination.

Interested Reader

T. H. Whittemore, formerly Projectionist and Manager Select Picture Theatres, Newcastle, California, writes:

Dear Mr. Richardson:—Have been an interested reader of the department for some time. Inclosed find check for $6.00 for the new Handbook.

Until a few months ago, when my theatre was destroyed by fire, I was one of those small-town exhibitors who act as projectionist, manager and everything else physical ability will permit of. And right here let me say that I was proud of the results obtained, both as manager and projectionist.

Am anticipating the erection of a new theatre soon, and would appreciate an expression of your opinion as to the best equipment to install in the projection room, at a minimum cost.

The size of the town does not justify the installation of a mercury arc rectifier or other device to rectify the current. What do you think of Mazda? Am figuring on a projection distance between fifty and sixty feet and a twelve foot picture.

Not "Cheap" Equipment

When I say "minimum cost" don't get me wrong and think I favor installing cheap equipment, for I most emphatically do not!

What do you think of attached clipping? Some example of Pacific Coast progressiveness, what?

The clipping reads as follows. It speaks for itself. Ten years' experience and still is only the operator of a mechanism!

> MOTION PICTURE OPERATOR with 10 years' experience, wishes position. Can give references. Will go anywhere. Write Box L-20, Independent Exhibitor, 120 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco, Cal.

For the conditions as you have named them I certainly would prefer 116 Mazda to A. C. You should be able to get a very excellent twelve foot picture with Mazda and a good screen, and if you are able to get one of the new aspherical condensers you will, I think, be both surprised and pleased at the excellence of results.

Properly handled—or perhaps I might better say intelligently handled, the modern Mazda with an aspherical condenser will give as good a twelve foot picture as any one need wish.

My advice is to install it by all means, provided you are willing to study the Mazda and master it in all its phases, to the end that you get the best there is in it.

From what I saw in Boston I am of the opinion that the new condenser (which I believe is not yet quite ready for the market) will put Mazda very muchly on the map for all small theatres and for some pretty good sized ones also.

Film Buckles

S. T. Stanley, Projectionist, Rex Theatre, Darlington, S. C., has trouble as follows:

Am having trouble, and it has corralled my goat for quite a spell. Have two new Power projectors, latest models. My trouble seems to be the buckling of the film over the aperture, which produces an in and out of focus effect.

Have tried tightening and loosening tension springs, readjusting the shoes, and about everything else I thought might help, but there is no improvement. I also examined the lens, thinking it might be loose in its chamber. The queer thing is this never happens with anything but First National Films. I am, therefore, inclined to think it is due to film. If you can give me any help, I certainly will appreciate it. Have been projecting pictures for 11 years. Am a member of the I. A., Local 347, Columbia, S. C. In all my experience, nothing has "got" me like this.

I wish, Brother Stanley, you had told me more about the service. Perhaps your First National is first run and the rest old stuff, or vice versa, though even so I would not be able to diagnose the case from your description.

I have had no similar complaint with regard to First National stock, nor do I know of any reason why such a thing should happen unless there is something you have not told me. I am going to refer your letter to the Power Company and see what they can make out of it; also I would suggest that any of our readers who can suggest anything to do so, preferably through the department though they can write Brother Stanley direct, if they wish.

Carbon Trouble

C. E. Dolan, Mt. Morris, New York, says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I am projectionist in the Family Theatre, this city. Have two Simplex projectors and use A. C. at the arc. We have a Ft. Wayne compensarc for each projector. We use the white flame A. C. carbons, which come in sets of twenty-five.

The trouble is the small bottom carbons burn faster than the upper, and from the last fifty sets we have twelve top carbons left to one bottom one. Any information you can supply regarding the cause of this will be highly appreciated.

The fault may or may not be with the carbon trim. First, make sure that your lower carbon is making good contact with the jaw, since poor contact would set up abnormal heating in the carbon.

If this is not found to be the case, then I would suggest that you take the matter up with the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio. Address the manager of the Projector Carbon Department and tell him I referred you to them.

The New Castro of San Francisco Has a Unique Decorative Scheme

SAN FRANCISCO has many notable residential district moving picture houses, but none have attracted more attention than the New Castro Theatre, opened on the evening of June 22.

This house, which covers a lot one hundred by one hundred and fifty feet in size, is located on Castro street, near Market, near the eastern portal of the Twin Peak tunnel, the longest municipal tunnel in the world, and one which taps a splendid new residential section. The theatre has a seating capacity of 2,000, and is owned and operated by Nasser Brothers, and represents an investment of about $300,000. Timothy L. Pflueger was the architect.

Nasser Brothers have been associated continuously with moving picture enterprises in the Eureka Valley district since 1907, and six of them have an interest in the new house. William, Elias and George Nasser are actively identified with the theatre, the latter acting as resident manager. The Liberty was their first theatre in the district and later this was supplanted by the older Castro, which in turn, has been succeeded by the new house.

Designed on Daring Lines

The new Castro Theatre has been designed along rather daring lines, and it is this unusual feature that is one of its greatest charms. Influences of the Orient and Occident have been combined, with features of Spanish and Italian origin, resulting in a theatre entirely different from the usual run of moving picture houses.

The structure is of strictly fire-proof construction, being built largely of reinforced concrete, and presents a pleasing appearance. It is the interior which offers such an unusual feast for the eye. The theatre proper is suggestive of a Roman amphitheatre with stone walls, a canopied ceiling suspended from ropes and a cantilever roof of wood over the stage.

The culminating feature of the decoration is the canopy of plaster, which imitates a richly decorated fabric hung on ropes of gold. From the center of the ceiling hangs a Moorish lantern, with shades of colored parchment and fringed with tassels and valances, which produces an effect of Oriental splendor.

Scraffito Panels

For the first time, it is believed, in theatre construction in this country, use has been made of Scraffito work, an old Italian art, two large panels, twenty-six by twenty-nine feet in size being on either side of the auditorium. This work, by the Faggioni Company Studios, has attracted much attention from interior decorators. The process employed is a combination of carving and etching in plaster. Layers of differently colored plasters are applied in thin coats and the design later etched, revealing the desired colors beneath.

The balcony of the Castro projects but a few feet over the rear of the orchestra section and all patrons are enabled to enjoy a view of the ceiling and the splendid side walls. It is reached by short inclines from the mezzanine lounge, which extends the full width of the building. During the matinee hours this floor is available to ladies for bridge, tea or club parties, without any expense in addition to the usual admission prices, and has become quite popular.

The projection room is located at the top of the balcony in the center of the house and is equipped with two Simplex projectors, spot lights and a stereopticon. This room is quite large and its appointments are of a high order.

Ample Ventilation Facilities

The heating and ventilating system was installed by James Nelson, the equipment having a capacity for a larger house than the Castro, thus insuring an abundance of fresh air of the desired temperature at all times. The location of the house in the warm belt of the Mission also simplifies the heating problem.

Music has a prominent place on the program and is furnished by a Robert Morton organ, presided over by Lloyd Carmichael, and an orchestra led by Frank Siegrist, a noted cornetist. A grand piano is a part of the musical equipment.

Special attention has been paid to the seating, all equipment of this kind having been furnished and supplied by C. F. Weber & Company.

A Spencer turbine vacuum cleaner system is another feature of the equipment, every part of the house being reached by this.

The publicity work is handled by W. Harold Wilson, who is making a specialty of such work for district theatres, and patrons are being attracted from all parts of the city.

Ladies' rest rooms are to be found on both the ground floor and on the mezzanine, with a maid in attendance, and a men's smoking room is located downstairs.

The matinees are from 1:30 to 5 o'clock p. m., and the evening performances from 6:15 to 11:00 p. m., with the exception of Sundays and holidays, when the house is opened earlier and the show is continuous.

The prices are 15 cents for the entire house at matinees, except Sundays and holidays, and 25 cents evenings, Sundays and holidays, with five cents extra for the loge seats. The war tax is extra. Admission for children is 10 cents at all times.

Our Compliments to J. F. Collins The Showman of Lyndhurst, N. J.

IN last week's issue we complimented exhibitors who were sufficiently progressive to convert their older houses into 1922 models of comfort and convenience.

This week, we remove our chapeau in honor of J. F. Collins, proprietor of the new Collins Theatre, of Lyndhurst, N. J., which opened in a downpour of rain on the night of August first.

The Collins is not a big house, only 850 seats in fact, and Mr. Collins realized that his competitors could show just as good pictures as himself, that they could and probably did have just as good projection equipment. So, he proceeded to specialize on patron comfort with a capital "C" by installing a seating system which provided two individual arm rests to each and every occupant of the seats.

He also figured out that it was not the late comer who always disturbed the show by cutting off view of the picture, for the latecomer might be thin and walk edgewise. It was the long line of patrons who bobbed up to give the latecomer passage room who actually shut off the screen view in appreciable and unpleasant quantity.

Screened the Instructions

So he installed a seating equipment that would allow any one in the audience to swing sideways, without rising, and let the culprit pass in peace and without doing any damage to shines, corns or chiffon skirts. And, having installed the system, he did not take any chances that the audience might at first, miss the real advantages of the new chairs.

He did not rely upon a note on the program which might never be read, verbal and verbose instructions by the ushers that would be a nuisance to all concerned or to a megaphone orator on the stage. He took his own prescription and showed a moving picture that, in a few feet, showed just how the seats swivelled and why and the audience got it the first hand round and were contented, happy and appreciative.

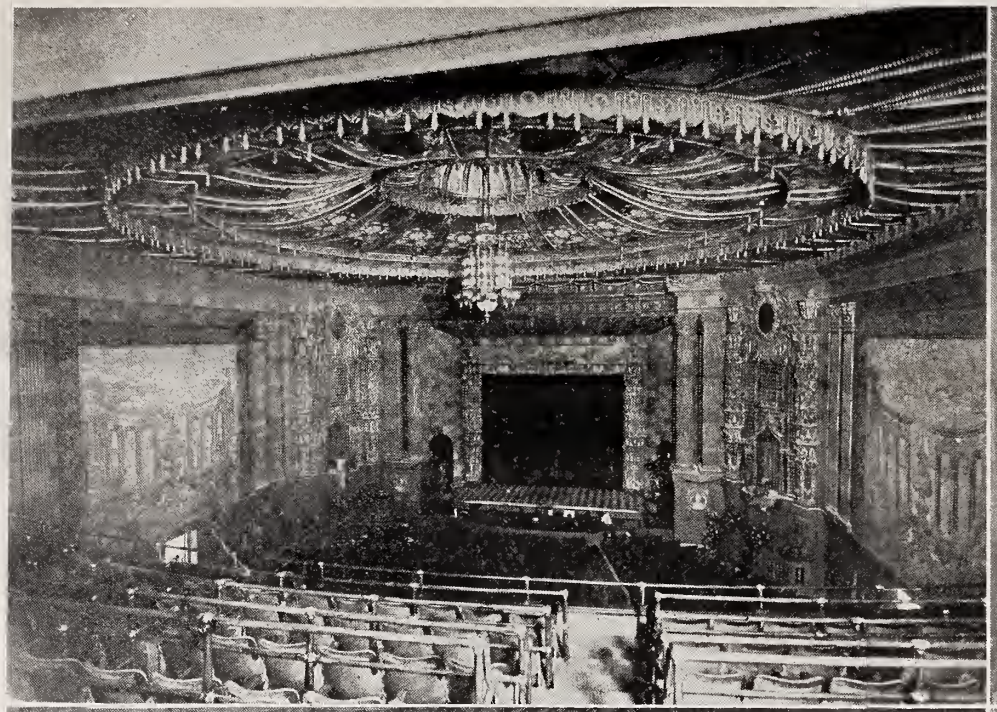
And, when a lady of large diameter and two kids sailed in at one aisle end of a row and ended two seats from the other end there was not a groan or an aching corn in her triumphant wake. Everybody gently swivelled and the lady and her convoy had passage way.

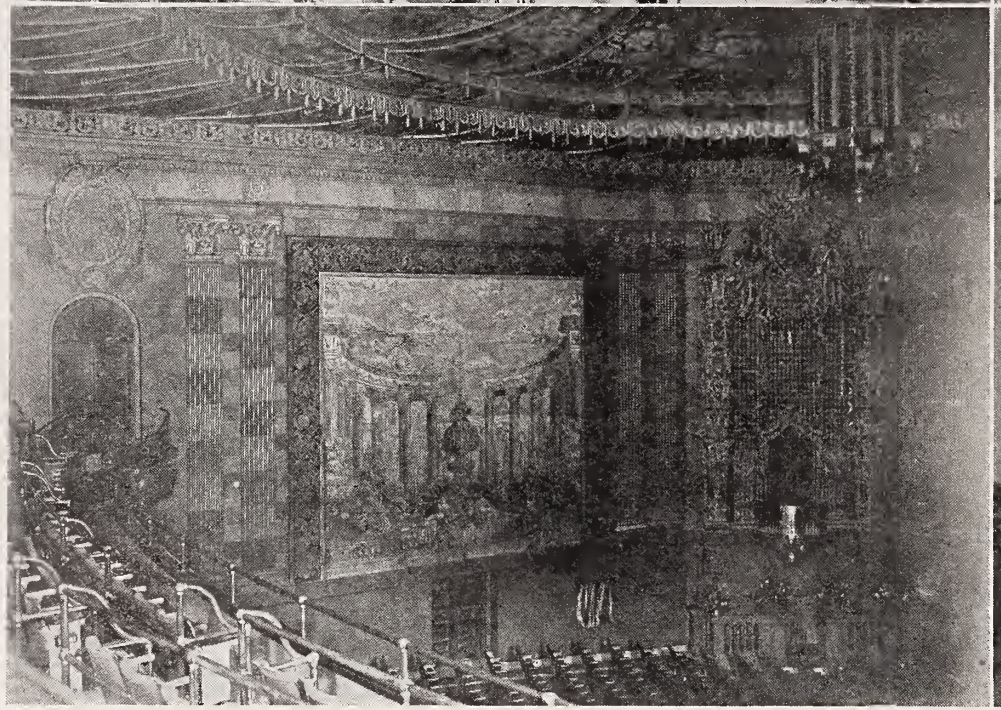
That Collins was progressive enough to pick out a new device and install it in a moderate sized house is to his credit. That he utilized showmanship in advertising it and making it popular from the first, shows genius. It also demonstrated how it is possible for an exhibitor to feature the good points of his equipment from the first jump, and ease his patrons into the proper use of the facilities that he gives them.

And Collins was wise in that instead of laying himself open to a lot of correspondence and telephone calls he explained on the screen that the new chair was the Mov-Ezy built by Josiah Partridge Sons Company, Marbridge Building, New York.

Buffalo's Olympic Re-opens Labor Day

The Olympic in Buffalo reopens Labor Day. The house has been completely remodeled and redecorated. Bill McKenna, formerly at the Miles theatre in Detroit, will be manager. "The Storm" is the opening attraction.





INTERIOR VIEWS OF SAN FRANCISCO'S NEW CASTRO THEATRE

East Indian Organist Delights Kenosha's Moving Picture Fans

DR. HYLAND ELMAN SLATRE-WILSON now presides at the big three manual Barton Orchestral Organ installed in Saxe Brothers' half-million dollar Orpheum Theatre, Kenosha, Wis.

Dr. Slatre-Wilson is one of the best educated musicians in the United States. His education was begun in the public schools of Syracuse, New York, and continued at the college of the City of New York, the State University of New York and under such masters of music as Leschetizky, Marescalchi, Consolo, Vitale and others in piano, violin, voice orchestration and composition.

From his youth Dr. Slatre-Wilson took up the study of the organ and at the age of fifteen became city organist of the All-India University of Bombay, India, his native land. He organized the 150 piece Emin D'Nalyh Orchestra, named after him. (Emin D'Nalyh is Dr. Slatre-Wilson's family name).

Dr. Slatre-Wilson comes from a long line of great East Indian educators. About ten years ago he returned to the United States with John Alexander Dowie, of Zion City, Illinois. Dr. Dowie at that time was building the Zion City tabernacle and planned to install one of the best pipe organs in the United States to be used in connection with a large choir and extensive musical festivals. Dr. Slatre-Wilson was placed in charge of the organ selection and installation and himself designed one of the best Cathedral Organs in the United States, which even now is a famous feature of Zion City. The organization and establishment of the great Zion City Choir, whose singing has brought pleasure to hundreds of thousands in dozens of cities, was also a work of Dr. Slatre-Wilson.

Founded Conservatory

Moving to Kenosha, Wisconsin, Dr. Slatre-Wilson founded the Conservatory of Music, which he conducted with great success until the opening of the Orpheum, when he took his place at the console of the Barton Orchestral Organ installed there. The combination of Dr. Slatre-Wilson's musical skill and the widely versatile three manual Barton Organ has captivated Kenosha's music loving movie goers, and the Orpheum is crowded daily and nightly. The delicately shaded, thousand-toned melodies pouring from the dozens of throats of the Barton Organ in response to the touch of Dr. Slatre-Wilson's gifted fingers is a revelation both of human skill and instrumental perfection.

In explanation of the marvelously intricate

improvisations and minute tonal gradations with which Dr. Slatre-Wilson delights Orpheum audiences, he modestly gives great credit to the Barton Divided Manual. "I was greatly surprised," he says, "to find that in spite of the many tonal combinations and rich expression possible with the Barton, I was able to play it readily on sight, without a minute of study and I find it a constant inspiration in my daily striving to gain further mastery of organ playing."

Longer Life for Films by the Dura Process

What promises to be an important factor in economical film production is the process for treating film as operated at the East Orange plant of the Dura Film Protector Company, Inc., of which Allan A. Lownes is president, with offices at 220 West Forty-Second street, New York.

The process consists of chemically treating the emulsion side of the film so as to provide a smooth glass-like surface which it is claimed not only lengthens the life of the film, prevents wear and tear, eliminates scratching and rain but actually increases both depth and brilliancy of screening.

The process is a German invention, the patent rights for which, covering both process and machinery have been secured by the Dura Film Protector Company, which also has acquired the American patent rights which it states broadly cover the various means of so treating films including the patent on the film itself when so treated.

Proven Worth of Formula and Machines

The Dura Film Protector Co. will use in its work the formulas and machines which have been so successfully used in Germany. It has already established one unit at West Orange, New Jersey, where it is beginning to operate commercially. Other units will be equipped as rapidly as machinery can be installed. Its trade-mark is "Duratize" and its trade slogan, "Duratize Your Film."

Not the least interesting of the claims which are made for Duratized Films is that old films which have had several months' wear can be Duratized after renovation and made to have the appearance of being like new. This news will be of particular interest to exchangemen who will doubtless wish to save their investments in prints which might otherwise be considered of little or no value.

Niagara Falls' Strand Has Cost One Million

The new Strand theatre in Niagara Falls erected at a cost of $1,000,000 by a company headed by A. C. Hayman, will open to the public Saturday evening, August 26. Hope Hampton and Lew Cody are expected to appear in person. The opening feature will be "The Light in the Dark," starring Miss Hampton. Senator James Walker will also attend as the guest of Mr. Hayman. George Albert Bouchard will play the organ and Albert Greenverg is conductor of the orchestra. The Strand has a seating capacity of 2,200. R. W. Thayer, formerly connected with Paramount's theatre department, is managing director.

Gouverneur's Graylyn Changes Ownership

The Graylyn theatre in Gouverneur, N. Y., has been purchased by James and Harry Papayanakas, who formerly controlled a number of theatres in Watertown. Harry will manage the Graylyn.

A Combined Ventilator and Heater

The Skinner Bros. Direct Fired Heater offers the ideal combination of ventilation and heat in a single unit. No pipes or ducts used—your auditorium remains clear and unobstructed—the heater can be completely concealed from view. In operation it is odorless and practically noiseless.

In the summer time, heater can be used to draw pure, fresh air from the outside and diffuse it through auditorium, where it displaces the impure air and drives it out through the regular ventilator openings in the building.

When used for heating, the air is warmed as it is drawn through the heater. This warm air can be recirculated through the building as often as desired.

Economical—Fully Guaranteed

Even in coldest weather the Skinner Bros. Heater needs to be operated only a few hours daily. Costs little to install and can be operated by anyone. If steam is available we supply our Baetz Type, which uses live or exhaust steam at any pressure.

Every Skinner Heater is fully guaranteed. Should a heater, when installed as directed by our engineers, fail to accomplish the results we specify, it becomes immediately returnable at our expense.

NEW FRONT PLATE AND LENS MOUNT FOR POWER'S PROJECTORS

Has a rack and pinion adjustment with double focusing knobs so that the lens may be easily focused from either side of the projector. The front plate is a solid casting which provides a rigid support for the lens mount. A thumb screw securely locks the lens mount after the picture has been brought into accurate focus.

The mount proper consists of a split collar which is securely clamped by means of a set screw, thus holding the lens firmly in position. Adaptor rings can be supplied to hold any projection lens of standard diameter, and lenses may be changed without difficulty or delay.

THE VALLEY OF SILENT MEN

Here is a Gold Mine For You!

Curwood, past master of Northwest country fiction, never wrote a better story than "The Valley of Silent Men."

Borzage, who directed "Humoresque," took his company to the actual location where the scenes are laid and there, amidst the natural surroundings, made his picture. He has created another "Humoresque," the gold medal winner, the picture exhibitors fought for and of which the public never tired.

Alma Reubens does the greatest work of her career. Lew Cody, George Nash and Joe King are included in the all-star cast.

MERMAID COMEDIES

Have Earned Your Patronage

BECAUSE their quality has been consistently high and sustained through two successful years of furnishing laughter to millions of theatre-goers.

They are produced under the personal supervision of Jack White, the youngest and one of the most highly regarded directors of screen humor.

They do not depend on so-called "gags" to force a laugh. The director's artistry consists of, an unusual ability to manufacture genuinely humorous situations which at the same time are possible situations.

Patrons of motion picture theatres who have enjoyed any of the following MERMAID COMEDIES—

"Get Away to a Strong Start"

SAYS GEORGE BLAISDELL, SHORT SUBJECT EDITOR OF EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

Read this Editorial

"Look Out Below," First of Jack White's New Series, Contains Steady Procession of Mirthmaking Incidents.

"Jack White's opener for the series of thirteen Mermaid Comedies for release by Educational in 1922-3 is Look Out Below, slated for regular issue in September. It is up to the average of the immediately preceding Mermaids, and that surely is a statement which does not damn with faint praise. It is 99.44% pure fun. And that is the chief aim of comedies.

"Look Out Below is fast. The two reels slip through all too quickly. There is no let-up in following incident. Much of the action takes place on a steamer, and contributing to the excitement are a dog and a monkey. The former alone will put over the picture, but the comedy does not lean on him by any means.

"There are some old stunts with a new twist in this picture, and there are some new ones. By and large, it is a real comedy."

The Great Alone

Directed by Jacques Jaccard
Personally Supervised by Isadore Bernstein

The final answer on a picture is found in a list of the first run accounts that play it; the number of circuits that play it and in the reports made by the exhibitors who have played it. That kind of answer is the answer of the box-office and it doesn't lie or go wrong once in a thousand times.

In "What the Picture Did for Me" and in the "Exhibitor Box-Office Reports" you find highly favorable reports on the business "The Great Alone" has done in every section of the country. It has won both public and exhibitor favor.

"The Great Alone" is a big, virile, full-of-action romantic melodrama; a snow picture of blinding storms; of heroism; of physical encounter and it contains without question as great a fight scene as ever caught before in a motion picture.

It has story value; a big, well-known cast and extremely powerful direction by Jaccard.

Book it now.

The All American Pictorial Record

FOX NEWS

IS "MIGHTIEST OF ALL"

HERE ARE THE REASONS

1 It is independent, with no strings attached to it. Its one big consideration is to get the picture that entertains. Expense is secondary.

2 Its camera staff is greater than all the other news reels combined. More than 2000 cameramen in all parts of the world work for it day and night.

3 Its editorial staff is composed of newspaper men of long experience, who know what NEWS is and how to present it.

4 Its methods of shipment, via airplane, etc., makes FOX NEWS the first on the screen with every important news happening.

5 It has the record of more exclusive pictures and news beats than all other news reels. Some of its outstanding exclusive features are:

First Flight Over Vesuvius in Eruption.
Pictures of Bandit Villa Back on the Farm.
Air Flight Over the Mexican Volcano Popocatepetl.
Picture of German Crown Prince in Exile.
Pictures of Pope Pius at Eucharistic Congress.
First Flight Over the Grand Canyon.

6 Because of its large and able staff no important news event can escape FOX NEWS.

7 It has expert cameramen from the home office looking for the unusual and the unique all over the globe.

B. P. Schulberg
PRESENTS

A GASNIER PRODUCTION

"RICH MEN'S WIVES"

While New York crowds of Mid-Winter proportions were storming the Capitol Theatre in Mid-August weather, the Trade Press Critics paid this splendid production the very highest tributes.

One of the Outstanding Attractions

Martin J. Quigley, editor and publisher of the Exhibitors Herald, wrote:

" 'Rich Men's Wives' is a valuable addition to the list of big pictures of the current season. . . . Al Lichtman launches his distributing organization with a Gasnier production which is entitled to recognition as a first rate attraction in every important aspect. It is a lavishly and effectively produced society drama. It is enacted by a singularly fine cast. IT IS ONE OF THE SEASON'S OUTSTANDING ATTRACTIONS."

Head and Shoulders Above Others

From the Exhibitors Trade Review:

"The quality which lifts it head and shoulders above the ordinary photoplay is the tremendous amount of sympathy it creates for the suffering young mother and her pretty baby boy. Has a decided commercial value. 'Rich Men's Wives' is refreshingly free from the slushy striving after effect. The picture gathers force as it proceeds. Such scenes as that in which the baby boy kisses his outcast mother through the glass door brought tears to the eyes of the huge audience which packed the big Capitol Theatre during its initial showing, and there were many moments when the sympathy of the crowd was expressed loudly, a sure test of the heart interest striking right home. Artistically, the picture is a treat."

Looms up like a Million Dollars

Roger Ferri, in Moving Picture World, said:

"Al Lichtman made certain promises to the exhibitors of the country that he would strive to give them pictures that would fatten box office receipts. And he has wasted no time in fulfilling that promise, for in the first release of the Al Lichtman Corporation, 'Rich Men's Wives,' he has a picture that will compare favorably with the best in the business. It's sure-fire material that he has given the theatre owners in this production, which is luxurious in settings, and valuable in cast and story. Whatever superlative claims you make for this feature will be substantiated by the picture itself, for it has everything—pathos, humor, thrills and romance. This picture can be shown at the 'blue blood' houses and at the so-called small town theatres, and go over like a tornado. As a production, it looms up like a million dollars, elaborate, pretentious and extensive in many ways. Go after this one tooth and nail."

A Woman's Picture

Laurence Reid, in Motion Picture News:

"A woman's picture—the mother love theme being developed to stimulate the feminine sex. A good box office title likely attract the eye everywhere, a couple of good troupers in House Peters and Claire Windsor, and a society background charged with real atmosphere—these will be sufficient to make this picture popular wherever shown."

HODKINSON PICTURES

The Practical Fulfilment of a Picture-Ideal

FOR the first three months of the new season, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation makes one of the most important announcements in its history—an announcement that constitutes in a practical manner the fulfilment of a picture ideal.

In presenting the features and short subjects listed on the succeeding pages, we have sought to give expression to the sense of responsibility which we have always felt toward the Exhibitor, a responsibility that begins with good product and ends only when the full service implied by a HODKINSON CONTRACT has been faithfully and expeditiously performed.

That the Hodkinson policies have met with the full recognition of the Exhibitors of the country is best evidenced by sentiments such as the following which are continually making their appearance in the Box Office Records of the trade press. They are typical of the Exhibitor-attitude toward Hodkinson product and Hodkinson service:

"Have played a great many Hodkinson Pictures, and each one has proved to be a good attraction."

R. H. Durham,
Mission Theatre,
Mt. Vernon, Wash.

"Hodkinson Pictures are the most satisfactory, clean and entertaining, and at a price, too, exhibitors, that enables you to make money."

L. L. Connor,
Victory Theatre,
Cambridge, N. Y.

"Hodkinson Pictures are the talk of Bristol. We have never had a poor picture or a poor film since we began receiving prints from your Boston office."

William F. Eddy,
Star Theatre,
Bristol, R. I.

"All Hodkinson Pictures are good, and their prices are right. They don't ask you to give them a share of the theatre to pay the rental."

Charles Holtz,
Princess Theatre,
Danforth, Me.

"I find all Hodkinson's are above the average."

J. E. Higgins,
Majestic Theatre,
Cullom, Ills.

"The fine condition of Hodkinson prints invariably makes it safe to run them even a bit old."

Fred. Hinds,
Cresco Theatre,
Cresco, Ia.

"Hodkinson paper and photographs show up well."

A. S. Kelsted,
Rialto Theatre,
Hood River, Ore.

And so we might go on for many pages. It is significant that not only have Hodkinson Pictures demonstrated their audience-values, but when the Exhibitor goes out of his way to mention the condition of prints, the square-dealing prices and the effectiveness of paper and accessories, it is proof positive that he is getting more than so many feet of film when he buys a Hodkinson Picture, that an element of service goes with the sale which makes for satisfaction.

"Affinities" is an ideal showman's picture. It's a rip-snorting comedy-drama tremendously rich in entertainment values.

It was written by Mary Roberts Rinehart, the author of "Affinities," whose books are known to millions.

It has Colleen Moore, one of the great shining lights of today's galaxy of popular screen stars.

It has John Bowers, that versatile young actor, who has climbed to such heights of popularity that his name has become a great power at the box-office.

"Mind Over Motor" is one of the famous Mary Roberts Rinehart "Tish" comedies that became tremendously popular through the medium of the Saturday Evening Post. Very few writers of today have such an enthusiastic following as Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Her name has become a powerful box-office factor in the moving picture business. Additional advertising value has been added to "Mind Over Motor" through the selection of Trixie Friganza, who plays the lead in this exceptionally amusing photoplay. The American public from Coast to Coast remember Trixie Friganza as one of the greatest comediennes that ever graced the musical comedy stage.

With a good picture and two such business getting names, exhibitors are assured of more than satisfactory returns at the box office.

When the man who pays for the film talks about your goods as this exhibitor does, what other arguments are necessary?

THIS is only one of the scores of glowing expressions of praise from showmen who have played this box-office sensation of 1922 for a GRAND CLEAN-UP. Others in the same enthusiastic strain are pouring into F. B. O. headquarters. They tell of ammed theatres, of shattered box-office records, of surging mobs storming the doors, halting traffic to pay their money for tickets to the GREATEST SCREEN SHOW of the year.

Wise old "Variety" had this to say about the engagement of "In the Name of the Law" at the Empire Theatre, Syracuse: "The film was dedicated to Chief of Police Cadin, the Commissioner of Public Safety and his men. The idea worked to the extent that the house was forced to lock 'em out Sunday night." You, Mr. Showman, can DO IT TOO!

Records blown to atoms EVERYWHERE. Detroit overwhelmed; Fort Wayne rocked and shaken; Cincinnati stormed; Los Angeles knocked for a goal; New York City ripped and torn asunder by the GREATEST EXPLOITATION CAMPAIGN IN THE HISTORY OF THE SHOW BUSINESS!

Gentlemen:-

I played your picture "IN THE NAME OF THE LAW" Aug.16th and 17th and I wish to say that I have had more compliments on this picture than on any picture I have played in the last five years. People meet me on the street and compliment me for showing it.

There is no doubt about "IN THE NAME OF THE LAW" being the biggest box office bet of the year for exhibitors.

You have wonderful publicity possibilities but what counts a great deal more, the picture backs up the publicity 100% and does not kill a man's business for weeks afterwards as many of the so-called super features have done.

Your picture is one that any censor board will rave over for cleanliness and the exhibitor who books and falls down on this picture is suffering from either sleeping sickness or hookworm.

You have the picture and the publicity possibilities and if the exhibitor lays down on the job it's hos own fault.

Wishing all the the success in the world to this, one of the best and cleanest pictures made since the industry started, I am

Very truly yours.

Distribution

Our intimate acquaintance with all phases of distribution — national, independent or state-rights—enables us to place your product at the most advantageous terms and with the utmost protection.

Field Selling

Our organization in the field will undertake a new and vital service for independents by watching every first run situation and assisting the local exchanges in placing the product advantageously, and in following up unsold territory.

Auditing

With a thorough knowledge of values, we will approve contracts, enforce play dates, and with a competent auditing staff in the field, we will check up every exchange to the end that our clients may obtain their due revenue from each booking.

LEST YOU DO NOT KNOW—

Alexander S. Aronson, who pioneers this thorough and long-needed service, has had a most extensive and intensive experience in all phases of motion picture distribution.

SOME nine years ago he became associated with the WORLD FILM CORPORATION, confining activities at different times to their producing and distributing divisions.

Thereafter he organized, with others, REGAL FILMS of CANADA, and subsequently GOLDWYN PICTURES, LIMITED, also of CANADA.

Three and a half years ago he joined Goldwyn in the United States and controlled their distribution from Denver west.

In December, 1920, he became General Sales Manager and Vice-President of the GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, from which duties he voluntarily resigned this year.

Exploitation

We will have on our staff competent people to thoroughly exploit your product in important key cities, and to cooperate with the exploitation departments of the distributors.

Foreign Department

Our foreign division will place product so that our clients may obtain the maximum benefit from foreign sales. Where product is disposed on World's Rights, this department will be an invaluable aid in determining the Foreign value.

Star Appearances

We will maintain a department to book stars or featured players, either with or without film, obtaining the most advantageous business arrangements.

Every Department will be under my personal supervision

TO WEST COAST PRODUCERS

Within the next three weeks Mr. Aronson will be in Los Angeles. Write or wire now to arrange interviews when there.

"HURRICANE'S GAL"

Starring the beautiful Dorthy Phillips and produced under the direction of Allen Holubar

Excellent Business

D. J. Shepherd, Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J., says:

"'Hurricane's Gal' was very well received and the audiences were enthusiastic. Did excellent summer business in extremely hot weather. It's a very good audience picture."

Phenomenal Business

Dave Bershon, West Coast Theatres, wires from Los Angeles as follows:

"Did phenomenal business at the Kinema, despite summer heat and summer resort exodus. Bound to please audiences everywhere, and we expect reports of big business from all over our circuit. It is there 100 per cent."

Best Ever Played

T. J. Eslick, Hope Theatre, Dallas, wires:

"Best audience picture I have ever played. It has everything, and made splendid record here."

Sure Money Getter

W. C. Patterson, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, wires:

"A sure money getter, alive with incidents and unusually thrilling. Most satisfactory."

THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK

Mack Sennett's latest big comedy-drama feature, starring Mabel Normand, is making the money.

Seldom Equaled

The Chicago Tribune in its editorial columns says:

"From his cast Sennett produced acting which is seldom equaled on the screen, acting such as made the 'Four Horsemen' distinctive. By this acting he created an effect of probability and plausibility.

"One by one he invaded the choice fields of movie emotion and activity, and in each case he made his satire better in acting and in employment of effects than the movie standard against which his satire was directed. When he touched the emotional absurdities of the movies it was done so deftly that it was an example of persuasive acting almost concealing the fact that Sennett had the sawdust all out of the doll and scattered on the floor."

Excellent Play

H. J. Longaken, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn., says:

"Excellent entertainment from beginning to end. For four and a half reels the audience applauded and laughed heartily; then, wow!—one and a half reels of thrills and real melodrama that caused one to hold on to the seat, and a climax that sent them out chattering and praising the show. All seemed well pleased and if they had not been I would have felt like calling the coroner. This class of features will put the motion picture back on the map. Characterization good; photography good. In all, a dandy show."

Extraordinary Business

W. M. Smith, Rialto Theatre, Tulsa, Okla., says:

"No need for exhibitors to operate their theatres at a loss during the hot weather when pictures like this are available. Business extraordinary."

"SONNY"

A Big Success

J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Ga., says in a report to the Exhibitors' Herald:

"'Sonny,' with Richard Barthelmess—most successful picture we have had since 'Smilin' Through,' which was a record breaker for popularity."

An Absorbing Play

The New York Evening Telegram says:

"A story truly human and realistic—absorbing—played in a marvelous way by Barthelmess. It is unusual and genuine."

Very Stirring

The New York Herald says:

"A rare film flower, more stirring than 'Flanders Poppies,' for it is the expression of a personality."

"Sonny" Is A-No. 1

Mrs. Frank Paul, Marvel Theatre, Carlinville, Ill., reports:

"'Sonny' and 'Tol'able David,' with Richard Barthelmess.—It's a pleasure to show pictures like these. A-1 in every respect, and we received nothing but compliments. Barthelmess great. Also think Pauline Garon in 'Sonny' a coming star."

Strikes Into Heart

The Cincinnati Enquirer says:

"It strikes deep into the heart. It is easily Barthelmess' best role, better even than 'Tol'able David."

Worthy of Hall of Fame

The Philadelphia Enquirer says:

"A picture that is worthy of enshrinement in a permanent Hall of Fame for Photoplays. Richard Barthelmess holds the audience in the hollow of his hand. He brings the tear to the eye and causes hearty laughter."

"ONE CLEAR CALL"

A John M. Stahl production, presented by Louis B. Mayer

Plays to Capacity

W. M. Smith, Rialto Theatre, Tulsa, Okla., wires:

"'One Clear Call' opened to capacity, and on this, the sixth day, is still drawing big houses. This is remarkable, considering the weather, which is exceedingly hot. Patrons generally enthused, and it is considered one of the year's best pictures. Any exhibitor who can not clean up with this one better close his theatre. The newspapers here voted it a film masterpiece, and one of the best made in four years."

Best Box Office Film

U. K. Rice, Piedmont Amusement Co., Winston-Salem, N. C., writes:

"We have just finished the showing of ONE CLEAR CALL, and I do not hesitate saying that it is one of the very best pictures of the year. This is not only my own personal opinion, but the remarks of our patrons leaving the theatre substantiate it. It pleased our patrons as much or more than any other this year, and as a box office attraction it was the very best. Mr. Sams stated this evening that it is the first picture he has taken the time to sit through from the opening title to the end, and in his opinion is the best thing since 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

Real Picture Art

R. St. John, First National Theatre, Sylacauga, Ala., writes:

"We want to congratulate you on this picture. Our patrons were carried away with it and we recommend it strongly to those desiring real picture art."

Well Worth Booking

J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Fla., says, as quoted in the World:

"FOOLS FIRST"

A Marshall Neilan production, taken from the story by Hugh MacNair Kahler.

Something Unusual

The Los Angeles Examiner says:

"Here is something unusual—an interesting picture. Sharply clever and impressive bits of directorial genius. The acrid touches of humor, the gorgeous photography, make 'Fools First' a brilliant production."

Sure-Fire Drama

The Omaha World Herald says:

"There are sure-fire situations in 'Fools First.' It is highly entertaining. A typical Neilan picture, well cast, well directed, splendid sub-titles, good plot, interesting character portrayals, plenty of suspense, unusual."

Has Big Wallop

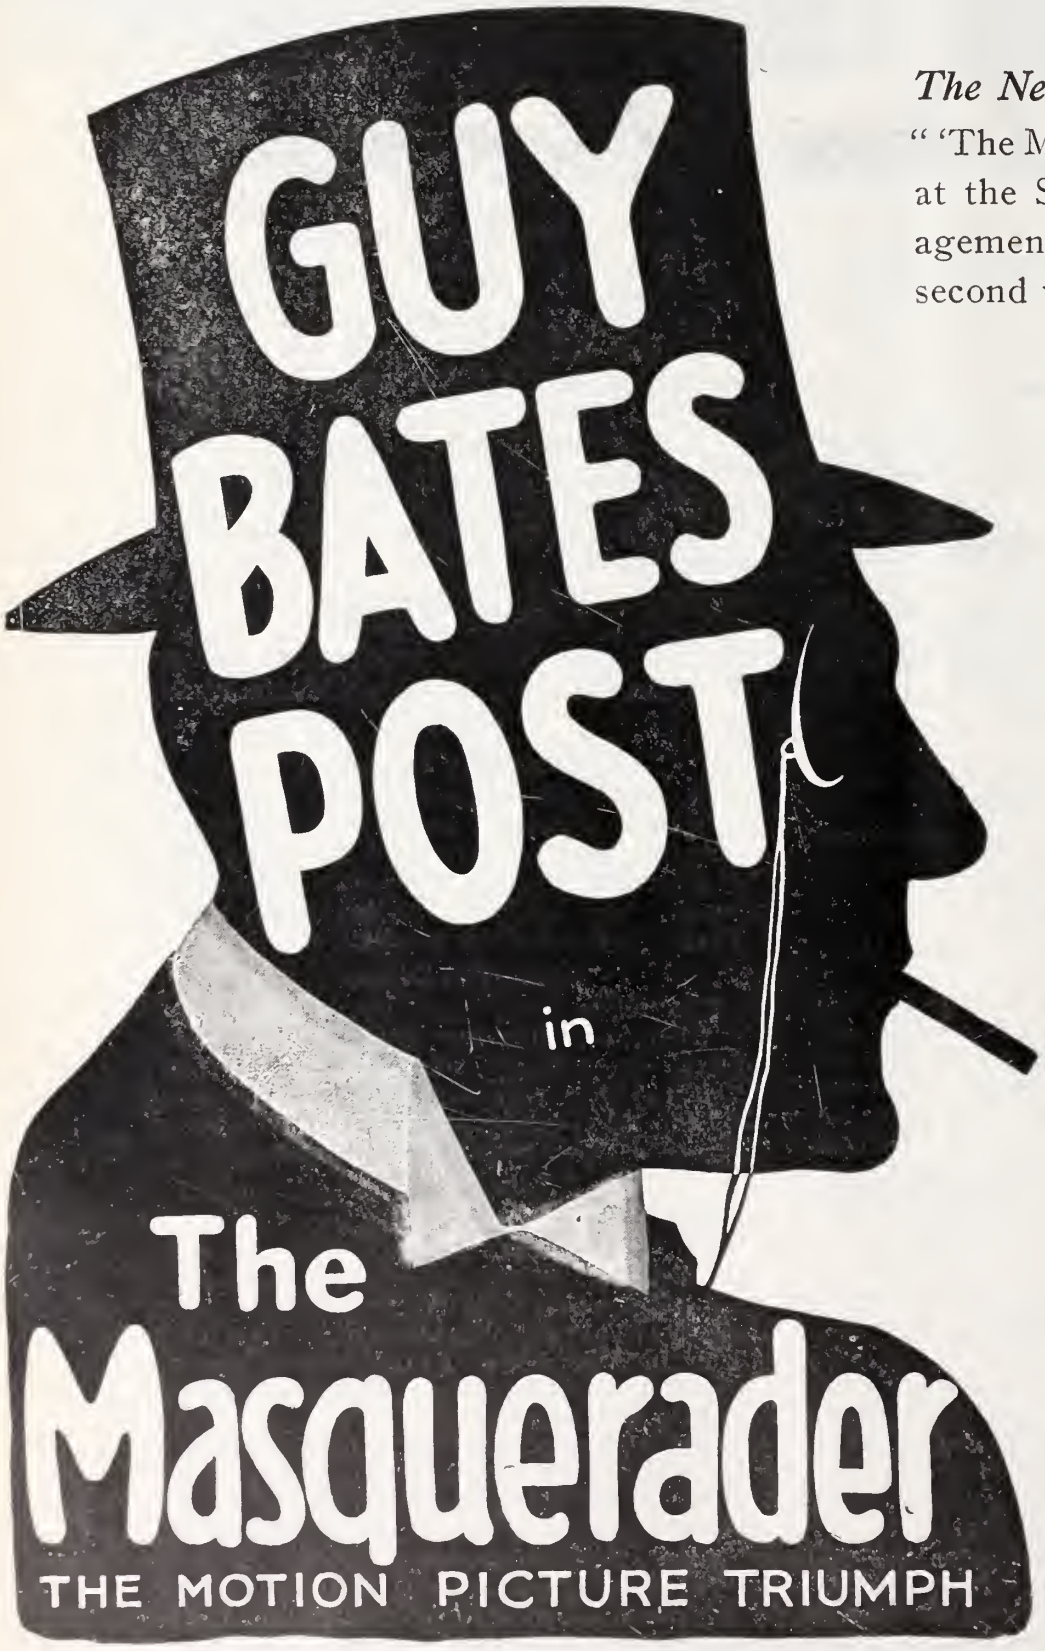
The Los Angeles Daily Times says:

"'Fools First' carries a big wallop. Pictures are pictures, but Neilan pictures are generally something better than a mere string of pretty scenes. They're an interpretation of an idea. They inveigle you into thinking that you're watching something really happen, instead of looking at a movie.

"What particularly allures a blasé photoplay fan about 'Fools First' is the tempo. The whole of the action moves swiftly, and with lots of surprises, toward a very satisfying objective—regeneration.

"We rate the acting as top-notch. The best, we take it, is by Claire Windsor as Ann Whittaker, the character portrayal of Claude Gillingwater, some dramatic moments of Raymond Griffith, and the sincerity of Richard Dix."

One of the Few Pictures Held For Second Week's Run at N. Y. Strand!



The New York Mail says:

" 'The Masquerader' proved so popular at the Strand Theatre that the management prolonged its engagement a second week."

A Good Job Well Done

WE have just come across—perhaps belatedly—a manual issued by the M. P. T. O. A. The title is "Public Service Work in the Motion Picture Theatre."

And, we are surprised.

Your average film man—and we belong in that classification—spends a large part of his time saying, "This ought to be done," "That ought to be done."

With the result that he is rather taken aback when his eye encounters an "ought-to-be" that is being done.

"Public Service Work" is a sonorously impressive phrase that may, to some extent, hamper the good intended by the movement.

It is very likely that thousands of exhibitors have not seen this manual—and that a good proportion of those who have received a copy passed it by with only cursory thought.

Which is the "reason why" of these words.

The manual is something which should be in the hands of every exhibitor. And once in his hands it is a business talk that he should read closely and absorb thoroughly. "ABSORB"—not merely read.

No treatise on such a subject can be expected to serve as a working tool in the sense that it will provide specific instructions to be followed by every manager in every town.

But a manual that will inspire the theatre man to a desire to make his playhouse a vital community force, instructions that will at least start his own mind working out adaptations to fit local conditions—this manual will have accomplished all that can be expected.

And this the M. P. T. O. A. booklet does.

The compilers place Public Service Work before the exhibitor as an OBLIGATION. In these words:

"Motion picture theatre owners are custodians of the screen press, relatively as much a factor in the life of every community as the church, the school, and the newspaper, and equally responsible to the people for such measures of public service as their screens may be able to provide.

"Because of this close community association every motion picture theatre owner is morally bound to do everything within his or her power to advance the interests of the public and extend helpful co-operation wherever possible to all other service elements in conserving the welfare of the nation, state and community."

The DUTY of the theatre in responding to its opportunities for community service is thus well put.

But we can afford to be frank.

And in such a cause we can well admit that there are strong SELFISH reasons for every picture theatre to bend its utmost effort towards public service.

One of the selfish reasons is an indefinite one bearing on the relations of the whole industry towards the public.

It is this:

The more the screen identifies itself with local and national public service, the more it becomes an aid to school, church and civic authorities—the sooner will the general public come to look upon the screen as identical with the press.

And entitled to—THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

This is one point. An important one.

There are other selfish objectives. The standing of the average small town theatre in its community is a peculiar one. Too often it is entirely dependent on the standing of the proprietor BEFORE he became a theatre man. If he was a part of the community then—he is now. If not—he is "the theatre man."

These are unpleasant facts—but true of too many towns.

The general patronage of the small town theatre is affected by this attitude, his banking and commercial relations are affected, and his position is serious when he is selected as a target by the local reformers.

Public Service Work—day in and day out, in season and out, is the prescription that can heal that sore spot.

Robert E. Welsh

Editorial Personalities

A miracle has occurred!

New York is witnessing a particularly sordid murder case. Some of the participants are connected with the motion picture industry in about the same manner that a ribbon counter clerk could be proclaimed "A leading drygoods merchant."

A young lady appeared in the case several days ago and basked in the glory of headlines proclaiming her a "Pretty Moving Picture Actress."

Then—on Wednesday morning, the miracle!

We picked up a copy of the New York American to read this in the display type, "Alice Thornton, Never in Movies—Was a Filing Clerk."

Ye gods!

There in cold type—the truth. What a daring city editor to cast from a Park Row window the darling phrase, "Pretty Moving Picture Actress."

But while on the subject we might say that while the other papers have stopped referring to the girl as a screen beauty none but Mr. Hearst's morning and evening papers came forth with a blunt statement correcting previous words.

Charles McCarthy, of Famous Players, comes forth with a real idea. It is this: As long as there is any prospect of the serious coal situation assuming definitely serious aspects it behooves exhibitors to decide that this is the time to GO GET THE MONEY. "Set the big pictures in now," says McCarthy, "and drive so hard in the good weeks that are coming between now and the first weeks of November that you will be ahead of the game no matter what happens."

Mention of William R. Hearst in our first paragraph leads us a step further to say that Mr. Hearst seems set to "show 'em" this year and gives every sign of succeeding in his object.

The good notices "The Young Diana" has received are enough to start any producer's season off with smiles and good cheer. But what we are waiting anxiously for is the first glimpse of "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

This Marion Davies feature is the pride of the Cosmopolitan organization. You can't talk to a member of the Hearst forces from George Utassy down without awakening a rush of enthusiastic description of the "million dollar Davies special."

First we took the propaganda with at least a handful of salt. Then we heard a little more—and a little more. And the latest we hear is that Hearst has engaged the Criterion Theatre indefinitely to house the Broadway run on "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Joseph Urban, whose artistic genius is given to all Cosmopolitan productions, is going to step in the front door of the Criterion and start working until he goes out the stage door. The house, we understand, is going to be transformed to be entirely in harmony with the big special.

Too many signs of absolute belief in that production. We've thrown away the salt—and now we're just waiting.

J. D. Williams isn't sailing for Europe after all. Just a false report. But at least we know that he has got as far as Sheepshead Bay. Bumped into him last Thursday playing "Daddy Longlegs" to a lively gathering of the First National home office employees. Europe's too far away, especially at a time when some big things are being cooked up by the Williams, Schwalbe, Rowland trio. Might as well cast modesty aside to tell you that J. D. says The World is getting better with every issue.

We have a suspicion that many exhibitors, reading the trade paper reviews these days, have formed the impression that the critics must be slipping badly. Inclined to find every picture a good picture and few harsh enough to unsling the sharp-pointed adjectives.

We checked the matter over ourselves the other day.

And here's the truth:

Pictures this Fall are too gol durned good. That is, too good to allow a reviewing department to stand up and valiantly slam a few heads.

Gosh, but it is almost getting disgusting, this procession of good pictures. One after another. And every time we think of some of the pictures that were outstanding last year, pictures we even went so far as to call "big," and then look at this season's output—we feel ashamed.

There were pictures last year big enough in the general run to be called "specials" that wouldn't even rank as average with this Fall's crop.

So don't blame the reviewers, boys. They can't help it if review after review reads like sugar and honey. Blame the pictures, boys.

Here's a batch:

F. J. Godsol is visiting his Goldwyn studios at Culver City.

George Kann, of Goldwyn's foreign department, has returned from abroad.

Ralph Block, of the Goldwyn editorial staff on the Coast, has arrived in New York and with his arrival the news that he has resigned his post with that organization.

Seems funny to write "George Kann, of Goldwyn." The typewriter almost wrote "Universal" from force of habit created in those years, and years, and years—and years.

Alexander S. Aronson's announcement of his plans to co-operate with independent producers by offering an all-embracing service is of interest. Aronson is both likable and capable.

And the Fates know the independent producer can use the sort of service promised by Mr. Aronson's organization.

No service can help the sort of independent who is an independent producer merely because he happens to know how to raise a bankroll—and knows not enough for someone to hire him.

But the independent with real producing knowledge, ambition and sincerity can use a business service. The very qualities that insure his success as a producer are traits that prove handicaps to him in trying to handle the multiplicity of business details in sales, distribution and exploitation.

The result, when he tries to handle them, is that his productions begin to slip through not getting the attention that he is qualified to give them.

And when the productions slip—all the service in the world won't help.

So the wise producer is the man who says, "I am a producer. Now I'm going to look around for someone who is a DISTRIBUTOR and that's his end."

Our most energetic news gatherer comes to us with an item. "Courtland Smith, of the Hays organization, is suffering an attack of Hay fever." We disclaim responsibility. There it is as we got it.

Coal Crisis Threatens Theatres; Rap N. Y. Governor's Program

UNLESS the coal situation is settled within the next fortnight the theatres of this country will be placed in the embarrassing position of either utilizing oil for heating and operating purposes or closing by November 1. This statement was made in New York this week by showmen who appeared before the municipal and state committees appointed to deal with the possible coal shortage. The situation, however, was clearing, according to reports received late in the week at the offices of Will Hays and Sydney S. Cohen. In New York the situation is characterized by certain theatre men as acute, but in other circles these reports are said to have been greatly exaggerated.

The New York State Legislature convened in special session on Tuesday night, August 29, at the call of Governor Miller, to ascertain ways and means of distributing fuel in the event of a shortage. Aside from a general discussion of the possibilities of such a shortage nothing was done. Governor Miller's program was bitterly attacked and the legislators indulged in a general game of high-powered finance.

After an all-night session it was decided that the governor name a board to cope with the situation. Senator James J. Walker, of New York, spoke on the shortage as it would affect the theatres of the state, but nothing was done to meet any possible shortage in the fuel. As a result of this action, New York theatre owners are in a turmoil for lack of definite knowledge as to what to do.

Late this week Mr. Cohen issued a statement from his offices in New York, in which he urged that the theatre owners co-operate with the officials in every way possible. Mr. Cohen was recently appointed a member of Mayor Hylan's coal committee of Greater New York. A special meeting of this committee was held in New York on Tuesday in Commissioner Grover A. Whalen's office, when it was definitely agreed that a special meeting of the Board of Estimate, of Greater New York, be called to enable the committee and others to make definite plans for emergency transportation of coal in the event that the present carrying system should, in any way, fail to meet the necessary demand.

Mr. Cohen's statement follows, in part:

"Giving the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America representation on the mayor's coal committee is an official recognition on the part of the government of Greater New York that the theatre is an essential industry and necessary for the welfare of the people. It is also a very distinct approval of our public service efforts, wherein the theatre owners co-operate in every way with public officials in furthering necessary programs of all kinds calculated to advance the general welfare of the community."

Play "Il Guarani"

September 7 marks the date of the opening of the Brazilian Centennial exposition, a big moment in the history of our sister republic, and Franklin Adams, counsel for the Pan American Union in a letter to Sydney S. Cohen has requested that theatres play the overture "Il Guarani" by Carlos Gomez, a Brazilian, in celebration of this event.

We are glad to second this request and urge exhibitors to co-operate in thus emphasizing the friendly relations between our country and Brazil; also to display flags of the two nations. Remember the date, September 7.

THE EDITOR.

Exhibitors Make New Agreement with Producers and Distributors

AS a result of information obtained from an unquestionably reliable source Moving Picture World is enabled to make exclusive announcement of details connected with the recent negotiations between the exhibitor committee, headed by Sydney S. Cohen and Will Hays.

The committees have decided upon an entirely new form of contract. They have also effected what has been accepted as a "code of ethics" regulating salesmanship insofar as it concerns exhibitor patronage.

Insofar as the exhibitors' committee is concerned, the contract and code, as formulated, are acceptable, but before either can be effective the producers and distributors represented in the Hays' organization must approve them. Copies of the contract and code already have been sent to them.

Some definite action on the contract is expected to be taken late next week. It is generally believed, however, that the contract, as negotiated by the two bodies, has met with the unofficial approval of the companies, who were represented on the Hays' committee that dickered with the exhibitors for many weeks.

Most important of the many features embodied in the agreement is that pertaining for the creation of joint arbitration boards in the various exchange centres. On these boards will be members representative of the exhibitors and various exchanges.

All disputes over contracts will be submitted to this board for settlement. In the event that the decision of this board be unsatisfactory to either side an appeal can be taken to a national joint arbitration committee, which, it is said, will include Messrs. Hays and Cohen, for a final decision.

Another interesting feature provides that before any contract shall be considered finally closed it shall be properly and officially approved by the home office. A maximum period of 14 days for coast exhibitors, wherein the decision of the home office shall be made known, has been fixed. In the event that no decision is reached within that maximum period, the contract shall be considered invalid.

Embodied in the code of ethics is a provision prohibiting film salesmen from approaching other exhibitors in any place where negotiations for a picture already have been opened, i. e., no salesman can, after closing a contract with an exhibitor, use that document as a weapon in forcing the opposition to submit to a higher rental.

After much dickering the committeemen are said to have agreed on a replacement fee of four cents per foot of film. When negotiations were first opened the replacement fee was fixed at eight cents per foot.

Disposes of Interest

Alfred Weiss Sells Holdings in Goldwyn Exchanges in New York and Buffalo

Alfred Weiss, formerly vice president and general manager of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has sold to that company his entire commission interests in the operation of the Goldwyn exchange offices in New York City and Buffalo. This important transaction, which was consummated the latter part of last week, involved a cash transfer of $100,000.

Mr. Weiss' arrangements with the Goldwyn company has been in effect for the past five years and in lieu of the completion of the arrangement for the two years to run, the payment was made.

Few men in the motion picture business have more friends among exhibitors, producers, branch executives and salesmen than Alfred Weiss, who has been closely identified with the industry for the past seventeen years. He has played an important part in the development of distribution systems ever since the early days of the business.

Because of his broad experience and proven judgment he was secured to organize the Goldwyn distributing branch offices when that company was launched in 1917 and for five years he filled a high executive post with conspicuous success. Previous to his connection with Goldwyn he occupied important executive positions with Triangle Film Company and also operated his own exchange for five years under the name of the Alfred Weiss Film Exchange.

It is understood that Mr. Weiss will take a trip to Europe and that after his return his future plans will be announced.

Commenting on Mr. Weiss leaving the organization, F. J. Godsol, Goldwyn's president, says his absence will be keenly felt, as he was one of the organization's mainstays.

Hot Music Tax Battle

Many North Carolina Exhibitors Are Rebelling Against Its Imposition

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are now making their first consistent effort to pry North Carolina Exhibitors loose from a license fee for using their copyrighted music, having established North Carolina headquarters in Raleigh and secured John H. Manning, a prominent lawyer, to represent them in the state.

From reports coming in to the headquarters of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. it is believed that few exhibitors are forking over the asked-for checks and the matter has caused considerable confusion in exhibitor circles. It is believed that by the time the various arguments are all settled, the amount expended by the society to effect collections in this state will far exceed the receipts from those who pay the tax, although it can naturally be expected that the matter will be carried through to a conclusion, whatever the cost.

Valentino Rebels

Rodolph Valentino is kicking over the traces. The star, indisputably one of the greatest drawing cards of the present day, has informed Famous Players that he will not return to its studio to begin work on "A Spanish Cavalier," alleging that the company has breached its contract so far as publicity and advertising is concerned. His latest to be released is "Blood and Sand"; he recently completed "The Young Rajah."

Elek John Ludvigh, counsel for Famous Players, says that "for once Famous Players intends establishing in court whether a contract means anything." Arthur Butler Graham is counsel for the star. He would not comment on the case.

Here to Buy Films

Ing. Edward Svoboda, of Prague, has arrived in New York and is interested in obtaining American films which may be suitable for Czechoslovakia; besides this, he wishes to negotiate with American producers about distribution of American films in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Jugoslavia, Roumania, Bulgaria, etc.

Ing. Svoboda is a pioneer in the distribution of motion pictures in Czechoslovakia. He opened the first exchange in Prague ten years ago. He was founder and shareholder of different film companies and was foreign manager of the biggest corporation in the Balkan states. He has also a thorough knowledge of the different protection systems and electrical lighting, and has established the first studio in Prague with mercury vapor light and, last, he was a representative of Carl Laemmle for Middle Europe and has controlled the distributors of the Universal product. After his resignation he opened his own office as a foreign distributor in Prague. He will be here about three weeks. His address is Room 511, Hotel Astor.

Admission Taxes for Year Show Decrease

The extent to which theatre attendance has been lessened since the war is shown by figures just made public by Commissioner of Internal Revenue David H. Blair, showing tax collections for the fiscal year which ended June 30 last, as compared with the preceding fiscal year. A decrease of $16,356,895 is shown in the collection of admission taxes, which in the fiscal year, 1922, amounted to $73,373,937, against $89,730,832 in 1921.

During the first half of the fiscal year, the report shows, taxes were collected on film leases, $3,678,868 being collected from that source between July 1 and December 31, 1921. During the fiscal year, 1921, this tax amounted to $6,008,108. Collections from the special tax on theatres during the year amounted to $1,850,075 against $1,703,280, an increase of $146,695.

Durlam Appointed

G. A. Durlam, formerly connected with the Minneapolis Paramount Exchange, has been appointed by S. R. Kent branch manager at Milwaukee. Mr. Durlam succeeds A. E. Bernstein, resigned.

St. Louisans Have Ringside Seats to First-Run Battle Now Raging

ST. LOUIS' moving picture population is sitting back complacently awaiting the outcome of a first-run picture battle that is promised by the opening of the Delmonte Theatre by Fred L. Cornwell, former president of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, and the purchase of the Royal Theatre from Harry Koplar by the Universal Film Corporation.

Cornwell opened the Delmonte on September 1 with "Slim Shoulders." He also presented Irene Castle's Fashion Promenade and Kitty Gordon in person as features of his opening attraction. And he has announced that personal appearance of top liners of the film and musical comedy world will be weekly affairs at the Delmonte.

Recently Cornwell sold his stock in the Famous Players Missouri Corporation to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and has been succeeded by Nathan Frank, a leading member of the St. Louis bar, as president of the corporation. The amount of Cornwell's holdings in the Famous Players Missouri Corporation has not been revealed, but it is said to have been comparatively small.

However, the Delmonte Building and Investment Company, owners of the Delmonte Theatre building, are said to have been paid $100,000 to release the Famous Players from a lease that called for an annual rental of $36,000 for the theatre. Cornwell is the principal stockholder in the building corporation.

What caused Cornwell's sudden withdrawal from the Famous Players local organization has not become public property, but it is said he plans to make things interesting for all of the picture houses of St. Louis, including the Missouri Theatre, the only theatre now controlled by the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, and the New Grand Central, the big house of the Skouras Brothers' string.

Gossip, for several weeks, has been that Universal would take over the Royal. However, it was not possible to confirm the report until a few days ago when Barney Rosenthal, local manager for Universal, and Harry Koplar returned from New York, where the deal was closed.

The purchase price and improvements to the Royal will cost Universal upwards of $75,000, it is said. Workmen are now remodeling and enlarging the theatre. At present it accommodates about 700.

Independent distributors are hopeful that the Delmonte and Royal will provide an outlet for their big productions and that the intense competition may cause the New Grand Central and the Missouri to give consideration to independent pictures. St. Louis has been a closed city so far as first runs go, for several seasons.

About a year ago the Famous Players Missouri Corporation sold eighteen neighborhood theatres to the City Wide Amusement Company, controlled by Harry Koplar and Sam Hamburg, Jr. These houses have since been taken over by the St. Louis Amusement Company. The neighborhood theatres were originally controlled by Koplar, who was induced by Cornwell to sell out to Famous Players about three years ago.

A War on in Toledo

Construction work on a million and a half dollar theatre, on a St. Clair street site, Toledo, is to be started immediately by the B. F. Keith interests. All negotiations for acquisition of the Rivoli Theatre by the Keith interests have been broken off, and the Pantages vaudeville circuit will book that house this season. The new theatre will seat 3,500.

But the big item of interest is the probability of a big theatrical war. This war will bring to Toledo the greatest variety of motion pictures and acts obtainable in Europe and America, and will bring them to the city at ridiculous prices. It will be a war between the vaudeville magnates and motion pictures — and the theatregoers will reap the benefit.

Pantages vaudeville will replace the Gus Sun time at the Rivoli with the beginning of the current winter season.

Niagara House Opens

Cataract Corporation Completes Beautiful Falls Theatre.

Niagara Falls celebrated the opening of the Strand Theatre on Saturday evening, August 26, by an enthusiastic demonstration that began early in the day. A. C. Heyman, president of the Cataract Theatre Corporation, which has just completed this third and most magnificent of the houses in the Niagara chain, stated that the success of the first night was great enough to compensate for the worries and delays of erection during the past year.

The Strand, which belongs in the million dollar class, accommodates 2,200. Seats were sold in advance and when it was announced that 200 were available Saturday morning, a line formed two hours before the box-office was open. Manager R. W. Thayer satisfied their fairest expectations by giving them a program remarkable for its variety and smoothness. In stimulating advance interest in the opening, no one worked harder than Harold Lloyd Beescroft, assigned by First National for the exploitation of the feature, "The Light in the Dark."

Hope Hampton's personal appearance kept the whole town on the alert from the moment of her arrival. She gave her audience a surprise by responding to their applause with a song number, and proved an irresistible attraction at all performances Saturday and Sunday. Mayor Thompson started the program with a gracious speech and many prominent citizens of Buffalo and Niagara Falls were among the guests of honor.

Harding in Control

Sam H. Harding, owner of a chain of theatres in Kansas City, Omaha and Oklahoma City, has gained control of the Wichita Theatre, Wichita Kans., one of the largest moving picture houses in that town, by acquiring the majority of stock and a sublease on the building. Mr. Harding plans extensive improvements, it is said.

As Col. Levy Sees It

Col. Fred Levy, serving as a member of the rotating committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Kentucky and Tennessee, for eight years has studied showmanship and is affiliated with the operation of thirty-one picture houses. He discusses the business outlook as a merchant as well as an exhibitor, being also one of the big dry goods men in the South. Read:

The outlook is good. Why? Because the announcement has been made that so many big productions are going to be put out.

Are business conditions becoming more normal? I think so. However, when business dropped off in other industries the picture business was the last to feel it, and while business in these other industries is now recovering, I think it will take the picture industry longer to recover entirely; but it will be forthcoming during the fall.

Of our successes during the last few months, Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through" has been one of the best in the big picture line. In comedies, Buster Keaton scored a good box-office record with "The Boat." Features and short subjects in all lines are showing an improvement, because the public demands it.

Success in the motion picture business from now on is going to be gauged more or less by the presentation of attractions. In the past the showman believed he was alone in the matter of exploiting and presenting pictures. But today progressive merchants are out-showing showmen in the art of showmanship.

The outlook for First National attractions during the coming season seems to be an excellent one. "The Eternal Flame," with Norma Talmadge, should have big drawing power. Other companies also are putting out big productions for the season at the threshold of which we now stand.

Let us all be optimists. Pessimism means despair. Optimism means hope and cheerfulness. We have every reason to look forward to a splendid season. Let us expect success, work for success—and gain success.

Situation Bad Abroad

U. S. Has Little to Fear in Way of Competition, Says Kann.

George E. Kann, head of Goldwyn's foreign department, who sailed on June 3 for Europe, returned on August 23 and is now at his desk at Goldwyn headquarters.

Mr. Kann reports that picture conditions generally on the continent of Europe are in a bad condition, with little to be feared here in the way of competition on our own market. Germany is making a lot of pictures, but of a sort which does not appeal strongly to the American public. And but few American films are being shown in Germany due to the embargo against foreign films.

In France the American picture maintains its firm hold on the public but the tax situation is becoming so acute that all picture houses may shut down on January 1 as a protest. In Czechoslovakia American films are very popular and the theatre situation is good, due primarily to the fact that money there has depreciated less than in other European countries.

Italy is making many pictures, fully half of which are spectacles, but the cost is becoming so great that production may be curtailed. Few American films are shown there. Russia is doing nothing either in production or distributing, aside from a few German films, taken in exchange for goods and a rare American film smuggled into the country. In England the American film retains its popularity and conditions have improved as a result of the inroads made on the block and the advance booking systems.

Wichita Convention

Announcement is made that the next convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, of Kansas, will be held at the Broadview Hotel in Wichita. The convention was originally scheduled to be held at Salina on September 25 and 26. The change was decided upon by the executive committee, at its meeting at the headquarters in Kansas City, last week.

Conference in Toledo

Musicians and other employees have submitted a tentative wage scale to the Toledo theatres and managers asking a slight increase in wages and different working conditions this season.

The Toledo managers withheld details of the schedule submitted by the employees, pending a conference with them. They admit, however, that a counter proposition has been submitted to the unions by the managers, and they expect to reach an agreement with the employees before Labor Day and avoid a strike.

J. W. Brady Dead

The funeral of James W. Brady, well known in the amusement business of Philadelphia for fifteen years, was held Saturday, August 19. Mr. Brady died suddenly Wednesday, in his office in the Century Theatre, Philadelphia. He was 49 years old. He was a member of the M. P. T. O. A., and the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

More Music Troubles

Cleveland musicians, seeking an increase in wages of about 35 per cent, will probably walk out or be locked out the early part of September. Cleveland exhibitors have definitely decided to reject their request, claiming that they cannot meet an increase at this time, owing to business reverses during the last year. The musicians are now receiving an average of $47 a week for afternoon and evening sessions.

If there is a walkout or lockout, the managers will run their shows without music as was done two years ago when the musicians went out.

Lease Criterion

The Cosmopolitan Corporation, presenting Cosmopolitan productions, has leased the Criterion Theatre, New York, from Paramount and will take over the house on September 10. The first attraction will be "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, which is said to have cost over a million dollars. It will remain at the Criterion indefinitely.

A row of boxes will be built around the balcony and the entire interior changed. The orchestra pit will be enlarged to accommodate fifty-two musicians.

Reverts to Shuberts

Universal's lease on the Central Theatre, Broadway, New York, expires next week when possession of that house reverts to the Shuberts.

Burke's Hustling

Barry Burke, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, is an exhibitor who doesn't wait for the grass to grow under his feet. For instance, he's actively pushing his plans for "Show You Month" (September), despite the fact that in Texas the weather is far from favorable for films that time of year.

This is what he says in a letter to Moving Picture World: "I am not waiting until the sun rises on the morning of August 31, but have already started my movements for September. I have the 'Go to the Movies Often in September' slogan on the screen, and am announcing the 'Greatest Array of Pictures' for that month.

"We are talking it to every patron, we are beginning to use it in our advertising, and are selling it so hard that I cannot see how it can keep from being the best September since we opened."

News from the Producers

By C·S·SEWELL

Negri's First

Pola Negri's first Paramount picture to be made in this country will be "Bella Donna." George Fitzmaurice will direct the famous Polish star and Ouida Bergere is now at work on the scenario of the widely read novel by Robert Hichens. The picture will be made in California. Miss Negri will arrive in this country about September 13 and remain in New York just long enough to see the town before entraining for the West Coast. Mr. Fitzmaurice plans to start the production about September 23.

Fox Names Fine Cast for Picture

"Penzie," the title of the screen adaptation by Paul H. Sloane of Florence Bingham Livingston's widely read novel, "The Custard Cup," which Fox Film Corporation will release as a special for the current season, will be marked by one of the finest casts of children ever used by a motion picture producer, it is stated.

Director Herbert Brenon, who is making the photoplay, has gone to considerable expense and delay in his endeavor to secure the best possible talent for this big special and in addition to the well-known children actors has also obtained a notable cast to support Mary Carr, whom the story features.

Miriam Battista, who scored success in "Humoresque," and who has been featured in other successful productions since that time, will play an important part in the new Fox picture. Miriam is eight years old. Others who will have prominent roles are Jerry Devine, Ernest Hilliard and Peggy Shaw.

Lupino Lane Finishes Four for Fox

Completion of the first series of four special, two-reel comedies by Lupino Lane, the famous English comedian, under the Fox banner, comes with the arrival of the merriment-making star in New York en route to his home in London, where he will remain for a number of weeks before returning to the West Coast.

His recently completed productions are "The Reporter," "My Hero," "The Pirate" and "Friend Husband," the first of which was released August 20. Release schedule for three others will be announced in the near future. They were directed by Jack Blystone.

To Release Three Super Attractions

Three "Big Time" First National Attractions are among the releases scheduled by that organization for September, the month that marks the opening of the 1922-23 amusement season. These are Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame"; Hope Hampton in "The Light in the Dark," and "Skin Deep," a Thomas H. Ince special, in which Florence Vidor, Milton Sills and Marcia Manon appear.

According to executives of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., these specials have been heavly booked for first runs throughout the United States, and this fact, it is said, bears out the statement made several weeks ago by J. D. Williams, manager of First National, that the "big pictures" would be the ones in demand during the forthcoming season.

Of these Big Time First National Attractions, Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame," is scheduled for National release Sept. 4. This picture, said to be the best of the many powerful productions in which Miss Talmadge has starred, is presented by Joseph M. Schenck. Adapted by Frances Marion from Balzac's "Duchesse de Langears," "The Eternal Flame" was directed by Frank Lloyd.

Supporting Miss Talmadge as the Duchess de Langeais is Conway Tearle, who plays the role of General de Montriveau. Also in the cast are Rosemary Theby, Adolphe Jean Menjou, Wedgewood Nowell and Kate Lester.

In "The Light in the Dark" Hope Hampton has a play that is something new for the screen, First National says. It is scheduled for release Sept. 11. Adapted from William Dudley Pelley's powerful story, it is said to be notable not only for its originality and remarkable cast, but for a colored reel sequence, made under the new Eastman process, such as picture goers never before have witnessed, it is alleged.

"Skin Deep," the third First National attraction for this month, is scheduled for release Sept. 25. In it are Milton Sills, Florence Vidor, Marcia Manon, Frank Campeau, Joe Singleton, Winter Hall and Gertrude Astor. "Skin Deep" is the first of the eight Ince specials to be released through First National.

Big Campaign on "Slim Shoulders"

One of the biggest advertising and exploitation campaigns in the history of New York's Capitol Theatre is being conducted this week in conjunction with the opening on September 3 of the new W. W. Hodkinson released production, "Slim Shoulders," starring Irene Castle, and the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade.

The exploitation campaign, which is being conducted jointly by the Hodkinson publicity department and the Capitol publicity department, consists of special posters on elevated stations, car signs in the subways and surface lines, special heralds, extra newspaper space and a number of window displays on Fifth avenue, Broadway and Forty-second street.

Second in importance to "Slim Shoulders" on the Capitol program for the week of September 3 will be the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade which is staged in conjunction with the picture.

Ethel Clayton in F. B. O. Production

"If I Were Queen" is the title selected for Ethel Clayton's first picture for release through the Film Booking Offices of America which was made under the working title of "The Three Cornered Kingdom," being a screen adaptation of the magazine story by De Vernet Rabell of the same name. This picture, states F. B. O., will take its place with the biggest and most fascinating productions of the year.

"If I Were Queen" will give Miss Clayton an opportunity to appear to more picturesque advantage than any previous picture, it is stated. It is a colorful drama, it is stated, telling of the adventures of an American girl in a mythical Balkan principality.

A New Star

First National says it will surprise few but delight many to learn that the beautiful Phyllis Haver, having served her apprenticeship, has received her diploma from Mack Sennett, and will henceforth be seen at the head of her own company as the star in a series of full length comedy drama productions to be released through First National.

From the galaxy of screen beauties known as the Sennett Bathing Girls, Miss Haver rose, and successfully worked her way to the enviable position of a star. Her first starring vehicle, not yet given a title, will be ready for production within a few days.

Urban Is Making a New Series

A new series of Urban Popular Classics is receiving finishing touches at Urban Institute at Irvington, N. Y., where James A. FitzPatrick is putting into shape his twelve one-reel subjects on "Great British Authors." This is a companion series to the "Great American Authors."

Mr. FitzPatrick has just returned from England, where he went early in the year to procure the material for the series. The first reel in the series will be entitled "The Brownings." Besides its biographical contents it will contain dramatizations of "Pippa Passes," by Robert Browning, and of "The Romance of a Swan's Nest," by Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Alfred, Lord Tennyson, is the subject matter of the second reel in the series. The third reel is devoted to Robert Burns. Sir Walter Scott is the fourth reel's subject.

Others to be in the series are Robert Louis Stevenson, Shakespears, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Charles Dickens and Oliver Goldsmith. Three more will be chosen from the following. John Milton, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Alfred Noyes, Robert Bridges, George Eliot and Rudyard Kipling.

Book Sport Review

"Western Stuff," one of Weiss Brothers' single reel Sport Reviews released through Goldwyn, is being shown at the New York Capitol during the current week and another one of this series has been booked for a two weeks' showing at the New York Strand. "Western Stuff," "Red Man Sport," "A Vacation Cocktail" and "Mass Play" are the newest of the Sport Reviews.

Good Cast for New Hamilton Film

Lloyd Hamilton can, it is stated, boast of one of the largest and best casts he has ever used in a comedy in the second of his series of feature laugh-makers for Educational. Having delivered the first of the new Hamilton Comedies, "The Speeder," which Educational will soon release, Hamilton has plunged into work on the next subject, which he has tentatively titled "No Luck." Heading Hamilton's support in the second picture is Ruth Hiatt, who played in "The Speeder."

Two among the best known "kiddies" in motion pictures, Coy Watson, Jr., and Bobbie DeVilbiss, contribute largely to the fun. The first little boy will be remembered for his work in the Campbell Comedies released through Educational, and the latter for his work in support of Lloyd Hamilton in "Rolling Stones." Others in the cast are Lloyd Bacon, Tom Kennedy and Tom McGuire.

Hurn Promoted

H. H. Hurn, formerly branch sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at Cincinnati, has been appointed to the position of central division sales manager, and W. F. Seymour, formerly central division sales manager, has been made eastern division sales manager.

The Hodkinson Sales Control Board is now composed of six members: Vice President and General Manager F. C. Munroe, who is personally in charge of the western division; Vice President and Treasurer Raymond Pawley, Advertising Manager Foster Gilroy, Eastern Division Sales Manager W. F. Seymour, Central Division Sales Manager H. H. Hurn and Southern Division Sales Manager L. W. Kniskern.

"The Graphic" to Issue Every Week

Announcement was made at the home office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week, of the forthcoming issue of a magazine for the screen to be called "The Graphic." There will be fifty-two issues a year, and release will begin October 1.

This new screen magazine, which is to be produced by Educational Films Corporation, will be a departure from the accepted standard of short reel magazines in several respects, Educational says. Instead of confining itself to scenic shots, stunt photography and odds and ends from news reels, "The Graphic" will put into pictures dramatic and appealing short stories taken from life itself.

All stories that go to make up this magazine will be from specially prepared material, and will be photographed by cameramen specially trained for this work. "The Graphic" will not be content with merely showing the outward aspect of material things, but will seek to have a more deeply human touch that will show the trend of people's thoughts and hopes and desires.

Broadly speaking, this magazine will parallel to some extent the function of the better Sunday magazine, inasmuch as its subjects will contain elements of appeal that are fundamental, and interest all classes of people regardless of their particular callings or their particular limitations and tastes.

The stories carried in "The Graphic" will be primarily stories about people—people who in one way or another have a legitimate claim on the public interest. They will not necessarily be prominent people in the sense that they are rich or powerful, but they will always be picturesque characters in whom the public will be interested, it is stated.

Doug Works Fast in Making Latest

Statistical stories usually are boresome, rather than instructive and entertaining. In the case of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," Mr. Fairbanks forthcoming production, an exception can be noted, due probably to the fact that every record ever made in connection with the making of a motion picture production was shattered in its making.

The unbelievable speed with which this gigantic production was "shot" was due to the remarkable organization with which Mr. Fairbanks surrounded himself. He put at the head of each department the most thoroughly competent man obtainable, regardless of price. And at the head of the whole directorial force he placed Allan Dwan, reputed to be the most thorough and swiftest director of productions of magnitude.

Here are some cold figures which tell the story of the making of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood":

Thirty thousand calls issued through casting department to players.

Eighteen hundred players used in the biggest scene.

Three hundred horses used in a single scene.

Total scenes shot, eleven hundred and eight.

Maximum number of scenes in a day, thirty.

Minimum number of scenes in a day, two.

Titling and editing, which has been going forward under the personal supervision of the star himself, is now practically complete, but in all probability "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" will not be given its premiere and be ready for United Artists Corporation release until late in September or early in October.

Fox to Release Film October 15

October 15 is the date set by the Fox Film Corporation for the release of "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," the sixth of the special productions announced by the Fox organization for the present season. The picture, which is scheduled to open at the Lyric Theatre, New York, September 4, is a heart story along the lines of the successful domestic dramas that have been shown by this company on Broadway and then made a triumphant progress in the picture houses of the country.

Following such important and highly esteemed productions as "The Fast Mail," "A Fool There Was," "Silver Wings," "Monte Cristo" and "Nero," it was necessary that "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" should be able to stand comparison with its predecessors. Everything points to a flattering result of the test. Two more specials that will soon be placed in the hands of the exhibitor are "Lights of New York" and "My Friend, the Devil." This last-named picture, which is a screen version of George Ohnet's celebrated novel "Doctor Rameau," has the well-known Charles Richman in the leading role

Paramount believes that its Fred Niblo production, "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentino, is destined to eclipse the box-office success scored by "The Sheik," and bases its opinion upon the great record which the picture has set up in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago during its pre-release engagements in those cities.

In New York, "Blood and Sand" played to capacity throughout the past three weeks at the Rivoli and for a simultaneous week at the Rialto.

In Los Angeles where the picture opened four weeks ago at Grauman's Rialto with, it is said, the most sensational premiere ever recorded at that house, it has taxed the seating capacity at all performances, Paramount states.

In Chicago, where "Blood and Sand" played the Roosevelt, the picture received the most unanimously flattering notices from the newspaper critics that have been accorded any picture in that city in more than a year, Paramount says.

"The Kick Back" to Be F. B. O. Film

"The Kick-Back," the first Harry Carey production to be issued through the Film Booking Offices of America, is the current release of that company, following close upon the Emory Johnson police drama "In the Name of the Law."

Carey's first F. B. O. production brings the star to the screen in a story of the West, which is certain to satisfy all those who demand action in their screen entertainment, F. B. O. states. One of its pre-season runs was at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where it was booked by Samuel Rothafel as a mid-summer attraction. Its cast includes Ethel Grey Terry as the leading woman, and Henry B. Walthall in the role of the "heavy." Val Paul, who has sponsored Carey in past productions, directed the picture.

Special Pre-release in Los Angeles

American Releasing Corporation announces that "The Queen of The Moulin Rouge," produced by Pyramid Pictures and directed by Ray C. Smallwood, opened August 26 at Mack Sennett's Mission Theatre in Los Angeles for an extended run.

This production, based on Paul M. Potter's celebrated play, is the most spectacular thus far made by Pyramid. It is confidently expected that the picture will surpass on the screen its success on the stage when, after its solid year at the Circle Theatre, New York, ten companies toured the country with it.

An F. B. O. Film

The Film Booking Office of America will distribute "The Hound of the Baskervilles," a picturization of one of the most popular Sherlock Holmes' stories of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. It is one of the three Sherlock Holmes' detective stories which has been published in novel form, being sufficiently long to occupy an entire book. The film version is a feature in five reels. Eille Norwood plays the role of Holmes, and Rex McDougal plays the juvenile role.

Lavish Sets for "Broadway Rose"

One of the most distinctive features of Robert Z. Leonard's forthcoming presentation of Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose" is the beauty of the settings, it is stated. Careful attention has, it is said, invariably been expended on artistic settings for all of the Mae Murray photoplays, with the idea of making them not only beautiful but accurate from the point of view of nationality. Thus, in "Peacock Alley" were required scenes with Normandy and Paris as their locale; and in "Fascination" a great deal of the action takes place in Spain. In both these films, it is said, the highest praise has been accorded by press and public alike to the genuine magnificence of the artistic backgrounds.

Elaborate as have been the former Mae Murray releases, those who have had an opportunity of witnessing her latest, "Broadway Rose," at its recent private showing, are reported to be convinced that it excels anything that this star has ever attempted. The story, it is said, provides ample opportunity for lavish and spectacular settings and the work of the Tilford Cinema Corporation, which executed the sets for "Broadway Rose" is, Metro states, certain to prove a revelation to the exhibitors, even to those who are accustomed to expect gorgeous settings in Miss Murray's photoplays.

"Broadway Rose" is presented and directed by Robert Z. Leonard. The story and scenario are by Edmund Goulding, who wrote the story of "Fascination." It is a Tiffany Production, released exclusively by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Initial Offering

Dependable Pictures Corporation, of which Morris Kohn is president, has placed its first production, "Till We Meet Again," with Associated Exhibitors for release. Positives and negatives were delivered to Associated a few days ago and a date early in October probably will be set for the release, according to President Arthur S. Kane.

The production is in six reels. Both story and direction were by William Christy Cabanne, well known as author and director. The cast includes Mae Marsh, Norman Kerry, Martha Mansfield, Walter Miller, Julia Swayne Gordon, Cyril Chadwick, J. Barney Sherry, Tammany Young, Danny Hughes, Fred Kalgren and Dick Lee.

"Our Gang" Is to Be Out Sept. 10

Added exhibitor interest, Pathe says, attaches to its schedule of releases for September 10. On that date the first of the long-heralded, novel Hal Roach two-reel series called "Our Gang" comedies and dealing with the familiar, and so often highly comic, relations existing between children and their animal friends, will make its appeal to picture patrons. The "Our Gang" release announced for September 10 is called "One Terrible Day."

The Pathe serial, "The Timber Queen," with Ruth Roland, reaches its ninth episode, entitled "Horned Fury." It carries the hero and heroine to Argentina. "The Landlubber" is the Hal Roach comedy featuring Paul Parrott. The Aesop's Film Fable offering is called "The Boy and the Bear."

"Si Senor," is the Harold Lloyd re-issue for Sept. 10. Lloyd is supported by "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels. In Pathe Review No. 172, are seen the New Jersey fish hatcheries and other interesting material. Screen snapshots in this release schedule present a studio scene with "a million dollar cast," including Mary Miles Minter, Bessie Love, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Wanda Hawley, Bert Lytell, Conrad Nagel, May McAvoy, Director Paul Powell and Antonio Moreno, staging a movie for visitors.

Selznick Resumes Filming in East

Selznick Pictures Corporation resumed production in the East immediately upon the arrival of David O. Selznick from the West Coast studios of the company. Mr. Selznick, who will have complete charge of the special featuring Theda Bara, is making preliminary arrangements for the actual studio work.

The choice of stories has come down to three which were selected out of a vast amount of submitted material. When the final choice is made, which will probably be some time during the coming week, Mr. Selznick will name the director and start casting. It is thought that the studios on Forty-eighth street formerly occupied by Selznick in the East will be used for the Bara production.

The Theda Bara production is not, as is generally believed, David Selznick's first production work. He was in active charge of the studios while Myron Selznick was in England the earlier part of th year. During that period he supervised the production of "Reckless Youth." To this experience he has added a long stay at the West Coast studios co-operating with Myron Selznick on current productions.

It's Booming Along

Fred Miller, managing director of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, reports that Charles Ray's "A Tailor Made Man," his first United Artists feature, is still booming along to big business at Miller's Theatre, despite exceptional summer weather. "A Tailor Made Man" is now in its fourth week. After playing two weeks at the California to capacity business, it was transferred to the Miller Theatre for an indefinite run.

Fox Puts Over Unique Publicity

Fox says that blasé New York was in eruption this week as a result of the most unique exploitation affair ever on Broadway.

"Monte Cristo," the giant Fox special which is enjoying the second week of an indefinite Broadway run at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, was the subject of an unusual publicity stunt.

For days advertisements in the various dailies heralded the coming to New York of the famous Count of Monte Cristo, who was to share his vast fortune with the people of the metropolis by distributing certificates of different denominations in many nooks and corners within 300 feet of the theatre building. Those finding the certificates, which represented sums of $1, $5, $10, $15, $25, $50 and a grand prize of $100, were to cash them in at the box office of the theatre.

Promptly at noon Friday, August 25, the Count of Monte Cristo, attired in the regal costume in which he appears in the picture, drove up to the front of the Forty-fourth Street house and announced to the large throng awaiting him that the money certificates had been hidden and that the "gold rush" was on.

Within less than five minutes more than 15,000 treasure-seekers were engaged in the scramble and more than 100,000 others were interestedly witnessing the rush.

NOTICE

"The sole and exclusive right for the exhibition, exploitation, lease and hire of the serials, 'THE GREAT CIRCUS MYSTERY,' 'THE JUNGLE GODDESS' and 'A DANGEROUS ADVENTURE' has been assigned and transferred by us for the territory of India, Burma, and Ceylon, to Messrs. More Shorts

September will see the first big expansion of the short subject program of the Film Booking Offices. During that month the first of three series of comedies will be available for exhibitors. They are: "Their First Vacation," the initial Carter DeHaven comedy; "Pop Tuttle's Movie Queen," the first Plum Center Comedy starring Dan Mason, and "Sweet Thirteen," which will introduce Gloria Joy in a series of Sherwood MacDonald two-reel children's comedies.

Heretofore the short subject program of the F. B. O. has consisted of two single-reel short subjects, Hy Mayer Travelaughs and Starland Revue. Both of these subjects have proved unusual money-getters for exhibitors who find them among the most distinctive novelists on the market.

Special Programs for the Blind

The programs in raised lettering, used by the audience of blind persons at the special showing of Metro's "Forget-Me-Not" at Loew's New York Theatre recently, have proved one of the most interesting exploitation features in connection with this unusual event. As a response to the interest which has been displayed in these programs, the Metro officials have had a sufficient number of them printed to enable the various exchanges throughout the country to distribute them to exhibitors who may desire to carry out the same exploitation stunt which has aroused so much attention in New York.

Making New Film

Tom Mix's next picture for William Fox will be "Do and Dare." Mix's last production was "Just Tony," a horse story. "Do and Dare" is a story of Mexican revolutions.

Promises Well

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation states that since the announcement of the order and date of release of the first eight of its twenty big super-features for the new season, the requests for bookings in first run theatres of the first release has been very heavy.

The first of the releases is the new Rupert Hughes' "Remembrance," a photoplay of intense human interest, of which Goldwyn expects a record that will surpass that of its companion picture, also by Mr. Hughes, "The Old Nest." The cast includes Claude Gillingwater, Patsy Ruth Miller, Cullen Landis and Kate Lester.

Paramount Has Fine September Schedule

September holds promises of big things from Paramount, for that month will see the release of seven productions which include two of the biggest specials of the year, Fred Niblo's "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentino, and Cecil B. DeMille's "Manslaughter," with Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy and Lois Wilson.

September 3 marks the opening of the fifth annual Paramount Week when approximately 7,000 theatres will show Paramount pictures exclusively throughout the week. More elaborate preparations are said to have been made this year than ever before for this sales and exhibition event. Preceded by a double page announcement in the Saturday Evening Post and many of the leading monthly publications, the week will be ushered in by a tremendous smash of advertising in more than 1,300 newspapers in 900 cities and towns.

Introducing Paramount Week will be released on the 3rd Gloria Swanson in "Her Gilded Cage" and William DeMille's production, "Nice People," each of which has been booked day and date in nearly 250 houses. "Her Gilded Cage" is a Sam Wood production, the story being written by Elmer Harris, who based it upon the play by Anne Nichols. David Powell is Miss Swanson's leading man and Anne Cornwall, Charles Stevenson, Walter Hiers and Harrison Ford are seen in support. William de Mille is said to have constructed an excellent screen drama, with the assistance of Clara Beranger, scenarist, from Rachel Crothers' stage play, "Nice People," which features Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Conrad Nagel and Julian Faye. "Blood and Sand," the Fred Niblo production starring Rodolph Valentino, which has just finished a record-breaking run at the New York Rivoli and Rialto, is scheduled for the 10th. This story of a bull-fighter's life, was adapted by June Mathis from the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, and the play by Tom Cushing. Lila Lee, as leading woman, and Nita Naldi, in the role of a Spanish vampire, are featured with Mr. Valentino who is here seen for the first time as a star.

The other feature due the 10th is the Cosmopolitan production, "The Valley of Silent Men," with Alma Rubens. This is from the novel by James Oliver Curwood and was directed by Frank Borzage. Lew Cody is seen as an officer of the Northwest Mounted and others in the cast are Joseph King, Mario Majeroni, George Nash and J. W. Johnston.

On the 17th comes an Irvin Willat production, "The Siren Call," with Dorothy Dalton supported by David Powell and Mitchell Lewis. This, too, is a story of the far North, from an original by J. E. Nash. For the same date is scheduled Jack Holt in "While Satan Sleeps," from the novel, "The Parson of Panamint," by Peter B. Kyne. Albert Shelby LeVino wrote the scenario and Joseph Henabery directed. It is the story of the regeneration of a wayward son of a clergyman.

In "Manslaughter," adapted by Jeanie Macpherson from Alice Duer Miller's sensational novel and scheduled for release the 24th, Cecil B. DeMille has produced his greatest masterpiece, according to Jesse L. Lasky and other Paramount executives who have seen it. Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy and Lois Wilson are featured with other prominent roles in the hands of John Miltern, George Fawcett, Julia Faye, Edythe Chapman, Jack Mower, Dorothy Cumming, Gasson Ferguson, Mickey Moore, James Neill, Sylvia Ashton, Raymond Hatton, Charles Ogle, Guy Oliver and others.

"Grandma's Boy" Is Cleaning Up

"Grandma's Boy," the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors' super-attraction, produced by Hal Roach, is now in the sixteenth week of its record-smashing run in Dr. H. B. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, already surpassing by two weeks the longest previous run of any picture, of whatever length or nature, in that city. The Los Angeles record for the continuous showing of a comedy, established by Harold Lloyd with "A Sailor-Made Man," was shattered nine long weeks ago.

When Calvin Heilig on August 21 started "Grandma's Boy" on its third week in the Heilig Theatre, Portland, Ore., the high-water mark for the showing of a photoplay in the Oregon metropolis was passed. The picture ran fourteen days in P. Mortimer Lewis's Bijou Theatre, Atlantic City, which is three days longer than any film ever played in that seaside resort town before. Until "Grandma's Boy" appeared simultaneously in Homer Ellison's Princess and Rialto, each of them a large downtown theatre, no picture ever had divided its first run in Denver between two houses.

A telegram from Eddie Zorn, owner of the big Temple Theatre, Toledo, tells of the triumph "Grandma's Boy" is scoring in that city and of the upset it has occasioned in his booking arrangements.

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand, is making elaborate preparations for the opening of the first New York run of "Grandma's Boy," Sunday, September 3, which is Labor Day week.

A Great Start

The week beginning August 27 saw two releases of the new Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation playing representative theatres in Greater New York, day and date.

J. Stuart Blackton's "The Glorious Adventure," the first Prizma color photoplay, featuring Lady Diana Manners, started a run at the Brooklyn Strand, following an engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and Max Linder's burlesque, "The Three Must-Get-Theres," opened at the Strand, New York.

After its run at the Strand the Linder film goes to the Keith-Proctor-Moss circuit, where it will feature the bills.

Alexander Absorbed by Levey

Through contracts signed this week the entire non-theatrical activities of the Alexander Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, are absorbed by the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., of which Harry Levey is president and Arthur James is vice-president.

By the terms of the agreement 150 subjects, including William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Norma Talmadge, Charles Ray, Frank Keenon, Ray Stewart and a number of specials will be marketed non-theatrically solely by the National Non-Theatrical Company.

Christie Co. Service for Theatres

In order to better serve the theatres which advertise comedy attractions in newspapers and house organs of their own, the Christie Film Company has inaugurated a special cut, photograph and mat service on all the new Christie Comedies beginning with "That Son of a Sheik" which is to be released in September through Educational exchanges.

All of this material is being prepared by the Christie studios, under the direction of the exploitation department and will be available through Educational exchanges before release dates on all pictures.

Production Started

Emmett J. Flynn has started the production of "Without Compromise," in which William Farnum will be starred. It is being made in the William Fox West Coast studios. Lois Wilson will be opposite Farnum and Robert McKimm will play the "heavy." Tully Marshall also will have a prominent part in the production.

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Paramount Accessories Man Is Pinched But Gets Exploitation Job As a Result

BECAUSE H. C. Eagles, who has been handling the accessories in the Paramount Seattle exchange, went up to Bellingham and got pinched, he got a job with Claud Saunders, of the exploitation department. Saunders got a hectic telegram from Fred Walton, of the American theatre there, and in return wired Eagles to blow his accessories job and turn exploiteer.

Eagles has been keen on exploitation for some time, selling his accessories on exploitation ideas and otherwise trying to prove what he could do in the exploitation line. Recently Walton took over the Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Bellingham and turned them into Paramount patrons, asking Eagles to come up and start something.

Right on the Job

Starting something is Eagles' middle name, and he went up to Bellingham and stuck up ten thousand door knobs and auto tags for "If You Believe It, It's So," He had done similar stunts before, but this time he got a ticket to call at the police station. Instead he made the Mayor's office and got the case called off, also obtaining a permit for further stunts.

With this out of the way he felt he would have time to pull something really big. The biggest thing he could find was Mount Baker, the local Mount Ranier. That seemed big enough, even for Eagles.

The Big Idea

The Pacific fleet was in those waters and Eagles talked the officers into loaning him a detail of marines to scale the face of Mount Maker and plant an American flag on the summit, to help recruiting. As long as it was flag day, he carried along a flag with the Paramount trade mark, as well.

There were 126 marines in the party, as well as a number of civilians, and the idea was supposedly to help recruiting.

Because of an unusually severe storm, the men were unable to reach the summit and planted the flags some 1,200 feet short of the top, but the storm added to the news value of the story, and Eagles not only got the first column on the front page of the Bellingham Herald, but a streamer across the top of the sheet. In addition there will be a long story in the Sunday issue, illustrated by a staff photographer who made the climb.

Not a Picnic

The trip was not precisely what you might call a picnic. The men were taken to the foot of the trail the night before and were soaked by a drenching rain, and then started the climb with a snow storm imminent. This soon broke and the guide was unwilling to make the trip, but was over-persuaded and led the way. Only ten lasted to the highest point and two of these fell into crevasses and narrowly escaped death, but the flags were planted and the story of the Marines—and Paramount—was told all over that section, so Eagles is not only happy, but now he is a full fledged exploiteer and no longer has to sell heralds and six sheets save as a side line.

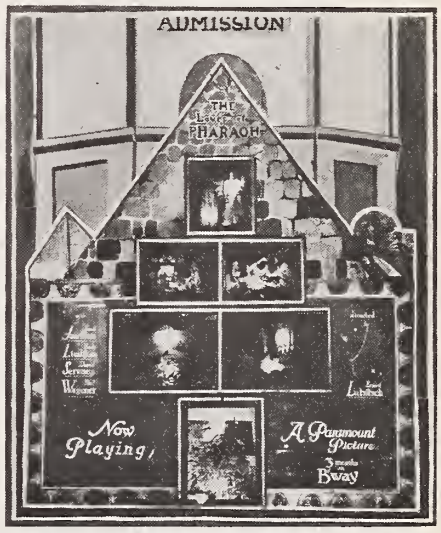
And he put the change to Paramount over with a bang.

Two In One

Working two titles on one stunt was the accomplishment of McKivett, of the Bijou Theatre, Racine. He tied the paper to a contest for the best smiles to advertise "Smilin' Through" and then sent out Klansmen in an automobile to photograph the smiles, which gave "One Clear Call" a starter. The contest won something more than 200 inches of pure reading and aroused unusual interest.

Transparency Frame Helps Coney Island

Playing "The Loves of Pharaoh" as a pre-release, Henderson's Theatre, Coney Island, borrowed the still frame designed by M. A. Bootsford, Paramount advertising manager, for the New York exchange.



A Paramount Release

THE PHARAOH FRAME

The design is as shown in the cut, with six glass transparencies made from the scene stills and colored. They are lighted from behind. Standing before the box office, this fine display arrested the attention of the pleasure seekers as well as the resident vacationists, and appreciably increased the receipts.

Lem Stewart's Word

Lem Stewart is still looking for a word; a single word, which will be the reverse of "good advertising." Several suggestions have come in, including "Ballybad," as the opposite of a ballyhoo, or "ballybloomer." Several offer "flivver" as the best, and "nixad" has been brought forward. "Negative" is another offering, but these are none of them just what Lem seems to want.

Try and think of a word that will connote all forms of advertising which repel patronage.

Then send it in.

Ralph Ruffner, please write or wire.

DISPLAY OF CURIOS HELPS "NANOOK OF THE NORTH"

This display was made by the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, but was erroneously credited by one trade paper to Los Angeles. A kiyak, stuffed Arctic animals and hunting implements and clothing beat even the snow lobby for a pull. Try it this winter.

Battered Cuts of Leading Citizens

In addition to a large clean-up on the voting for leading citizen to put over "Our Leading Citizen," which has made fancy profits for Southern Enterprises, B. B. Garner, of the Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Fla., got out a new angle.

He tied the merchants to a double truck, each space carrying the battered cut of one of Lakeland's leading citizens. Each merchant offered a prize for the identification and the best letter telling why his contestant should be regarded as the leading citizen.

This local angle formed one of the best points in an exceedingly good campaign and is offered for general use.

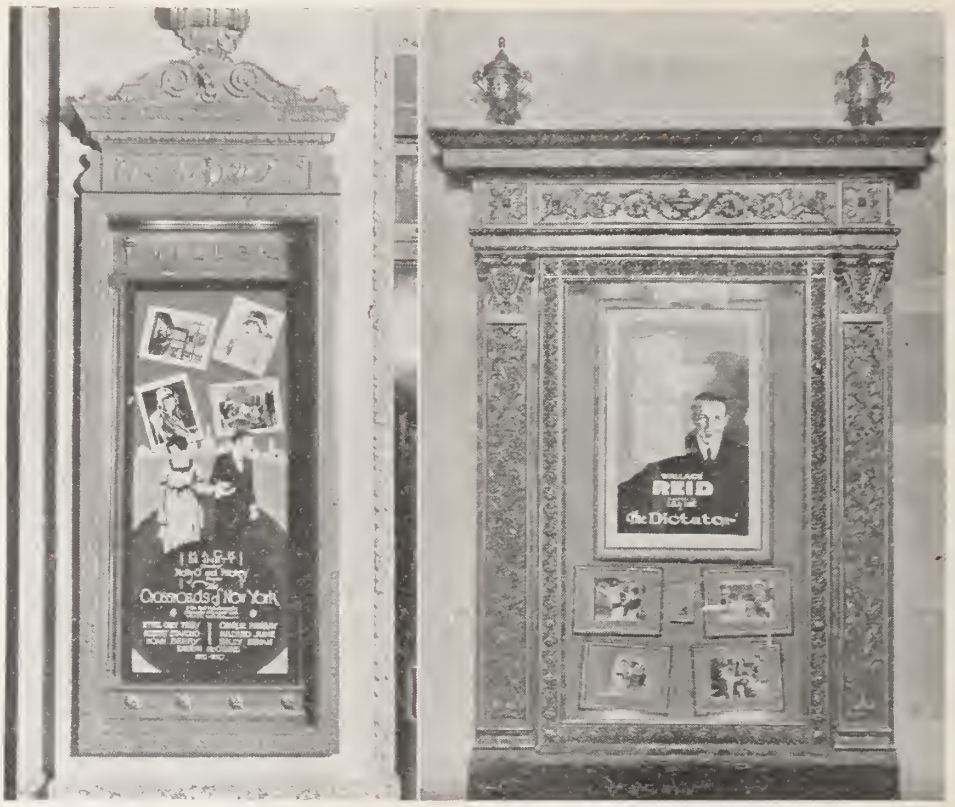
Duluth Exhibitor Makes Own Inserts

Walter Eberhardt, of the First National publicity, went on a vacation a couple of weeks ago and landed in Duluth, among other points West. He came back with an unusually interesting window and insert card used by F. P. Schwie for the New Garrick. It will be found reproduced upon this page as an example to others.

The sheet is coated stock, 36 by 14 inches, printed in red and black, with a good halftone ink for the black, which brings up even the coarse screen cuts as they are seldom brought out.

Mr. Schwie could find nothing in the accessories which gave him just what he wanted, so he makes his own from the cuts supplied by First National, and gets enough printed to permit him to bill windows as well as his insert frames, getting a sheet which gives him much more space in a window than a half sheet card, which looks better than a whole sheet and which sells in every line.

The card is useless unless it is made thoroughly attractive, but when they are well put together they are well worth their cost in the additional business they bring in. Mr. Schwie is careful to make them as different as possible. "One Clear Call," which is reproduced here, gives the featured players and a scene cut. The week before, for "Trouble," he had nothing but some interesting cuts of Jackie and a very little talk around the big red one-word title. Get them so much alike that they look the same and you lose effect. Make a distinctive change weekly and they will bring in the bacon.



TWO OF THE LOBBY FRAMES FOR THE MILLER THEATRE

Not Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles, but the Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kans., presided over by Stanley N. Chambers. They are in keeping with the elegance of the house in general, and we don't blame Mr. Chambers for being proud of them.

Elegant

Johnny Friedl, who Paramounts for Des Moines, has just pulled a classical stunt.

He has notified the chiefs of police in his territory asking for extra protection for picture theatres the week of September 3 to 9, as this will be Paramount Week and it is feared that the extra receipts induced by the super shows will tempt the thieves to direct their attentions to the theatres that week.

And the glorious part is that several chiefs have responded in all seriousness that they would co-operate to the utmost, and some of them even went into executive session with the local Paramount exhibitors, which is something not even Johnny dared hope for.

Ain't life wonderful!

Chicken Wire Now

Collaborating with House Manager C. F. Creslein, of the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., Manager of Theatres Frank J. Miller worked out a new one for the title stunt. He put the cutout letters on chicken wire stretched across the lobby. This will also permit the use of florets or other ornamentation, on the lines of the lattice lobby.

The stunt was used on "The Girl With a Jazz Heart" and this display was augmented by a phonograph playing the latest jazz records, and with a shimmy doll actuated by the turntable. These are carried by most phonograph stores.

The stunts brought normal business on an exceptionally rainy day.

ONE OF THE INTERESTING INSERT CARDS USED IN DULUTH FOR WINDOW WORK AS WELL

F. W. Schwie, of the Lyric and Garrick theatres, Duluth, prints his own insert sheets to get precisely what he wants, and they not only dress his front, but he can land in stores where ordinarily he could not get half this area. The house name, title and the "night riders" lines are printed in red, the rest in black on coated stock and the result is really handsome even when coarse screen cuts are used.

A CLEVER ADAPTATION OF THE SCHENECTADY IDEA

Here the painted pavements were used for detour warnings during a session of street repair. The stunt was adapted by G. T. Spofford, of the Liberty Theatre, Madison, N. J. It reached the home folks as well as the tourists.

Painted the Detours

Madison, N. J., is one of those commuting towns where you eat your breakfast and dinner at home and earn them in New York. Work on one of the streets necessitated a detour for a few days. G. T. Spofford, of the Liberty Theatre, offered to paint the detour signs free if he could do a little advertising.

He was told to go as far as he liked, and presently the streets blossomed out into signboards, and you could go "Smilin' Through" to Morristown or to the Oranges, or wherever you happened to be headed for, if only you followed the arrows.

It did not bring in much motoring trade from the through traffic, but most families own cars, and they got the message and bought tickets.

Turned Turtle

Some time ago an exhibitor in Newark turned a lot of turtles loose in a window, each with a letter painted on the shell. If anyone caught them spelling "Tol'able David," a pass would be forthcoming.

No one got the free tickets, so Manager Hendricks, of the Arcadia Theatre, Reading, Pa., thought it was a cinch and he started it for "Molly O."

Either the Reading turtles are better educated or else the word was easier, for almost the first shake out of the box the turtles formed the title and there was a rush on the box-office for tickets for Mabel Normand.

At that Hendricks got his money back, for the story was told all over town and the advertising brought in real money.

One on Bill

Something happened to Bill Johnson's stenographer the other day. Bill handles the western section of Southern Enterprises exploitation for Lem Stewart.

A recent report states that "between eight and ten people saw this stunt, and as a result, business on this picture was phenomenal." The word "thousand" after the "ten" would make a heap of difference.

Brought Patrons to Admire His Display

Major I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., did something from a new angle when he ran slides several days in advance of his showing of "Over the Border," urging his patrons to come and see his lobby display. He made something of a mystery of it, and they all came down.

Then he built a slab structure about the box office, chinking the cracks with cotton, and putting a sign above with "U. S." and "Canada" on the opposite ends.

A Hanging Forest

On a platform above the lobby he built a pine forest with whitewash snow on the branches, and used blue lighting throughout to get the cold effect he desired. There was more hard work than material and the actual cost was estimated at six dollars. It brought a 35 per cent. increase in the business, but this is not entirely due to the lobby, for Betty Compson is now the clean-up woman star in the South.

Major Holloway had "I Am the Law" immediately following, and he left the display standing, but changed the sign to read: R. N. W. M. P. and added a scale with the law weighting down the man, all of it being dressed in cotton. He also added cotton snow to the whitewashed branches, to intensify the effect.

The additional material cost $7.50 and the receipts went to 50 per cent. above the summer average.

Labor Saving

Recently we showed a banner with the ornamentation cut from figured wall paper. John C. Evins of the Odeon Theatre Savannah, Ga., uses wall paper as the material for his banners. He picks out an attractive small-figure design and paints over that. By picking up odds and ends from the paper hanger, who may have part of a roll left over from a job, his stock costs almost nothing.

For "Our Leading Citizen" Mr. Evins had a political parade with a brass band, and the candidate riding in a Ford He borrowed the car, and the band cost 50 passes, his only expense being for the banners. You can't beat that much.

Local elections next November will give another lease of life to this title. Try and use it then.

Recalled the Can

Getting a hook-up with two titles permitted Manager Struble to put over both to better than usual business at the Bear Tooth Theatre, Red Lodge, Mont.

Booking in Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through," he changed the slogan to read: "Let's tie the can to 'Trouble' and start Red Lodge 'Smilin' Through' 1922."

That worked nicely and when he announced "Trouble" a couple of weeks later, he came out with "We spoke too soon. We're not through with 'Trouble' yet, but you will be if you see Jackie Coogan's latest picture at the Bear Tooth Theatre this week."

Everyone laughed because they supposed that Struble had been stung, but the clever comeback sank in and they forgot that Struble books better than two weeks ahead.

SIX DOLLAR LOBBY BROUGHT 35 PER CENT INCREASE

Not only that, but Maj. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., brought people downtown to see the front he had been advertising on his screen, and it looked so cool, they all went in, and he used the stand for the next picture.

Played a Lone Hand Until the Legion Saw the Value of a Big Voting Contest

DOWN on the Canal Zone they have a live wire in the Bureau of Clubs and Playgrounds in the person of J. C. Searcy, who has charge of the motion picture activities of this department of the Administration. He has sent in several good ideas in the past year or so, but we like best his story of his participation in the Fourth of July campaign.

This year the celebration was to be held under the direction of the American Legion, and Mr. Searcy suggested to them that they elect a Miss Columbia to be queen of the festival, along the familiar lines. Not being practical showmen, the Legion officials could not see the value of the suggestion and turned it down.

Played It Alone

This did not bother Mr. Searcy. He knew that a queen was a part of every well regulated festival, and he went ahead and played out his hand alone. At least he started it as a solitaire, but a little later the Legion men came tumbling in, feeling the need for something with which to arouse interest and finding in the once despised scheme precisely the thing they wanted, just as Mr. Searcy knew they would. He had worked up more interest in his campaign than the Legion could in the celebration, and when they found the tail wagging the dog, the dog backed up to the tail and at least looked as though he had a proprietary interest in the appendage.

How It Was Done

Mr. Searcy had voting slips printed up and then persuaded some members of the Legion to act as Judges of Election. They were asked to get as many candidates as possible, and fifty of the prettiest girls on the Zone qualified. A vote was given with each ticket and the leading contestants had campaign managers and all the political trimmings.

Twice a week the vote was counted and announced in the paper, which also carried frequent stories of the contest. The paper sometimes did a little too much, for the reporter was interested in one of the candidates and was inclined to be a bit partisian.

Building Up

The stunt grew so rapidly that Mr. Searcy felt he would have to make it more important, so he added the thirteen original colonies and the Legion allowed him a hundred dollars for a float. Mr. Searcy made a splendid showing for the money, but unfortunately the photograph was shipped without protection and it was too badly crumpled to be reproduced.

In addition Mr. Searcy got the local dancing teacher to stage a pageant for the colonies.

Meanwhile the Legion had arranged a couple of balls, at which all of the contestants were the guests of honor and this pulled between four and five hundred dollars for the fund.

How It Was Worked

On the morning of the Fourth Miss Columbia, in the person of Miss Phyllis Milliken, arrived at the docks and was escorted to her float Then the float led the parade to the stadium, where the field sports were staged and the Declaration of Independence read.

At two o'clock the play was staged at the picture theatre in addition to a good feature, and at four the aquatic events were held at the swimming pool, with fireworks at half past seven and a ball at the Mosque of Abou Saad Temple of the Mystic Shrine an hour later.

The authorities contributed an escort of soldiers and marines and also contributed four bands, and the entire Zone was in. The stunt cost Mr. Searcy about $90, which the Legion paid out of the excess funds, and the pictures are more solid than ever.

What did you do for your town last Fourth?

Ran a Colyum

Eli M. Orowitz, of the Paramount exploitation staff, turned colymn conductor for the Allentown (Pa.) Record, to help put over "If You Believe It, It's So."

He assumed the signature of Emo and wrote a set of smart paragraphs, most of which were hinged on the Meighan play then running at the Strand Theatre. Most of it consisted of humorously impossible statements ending with "If You Believe It, It's So."

One, for example, about doubled the town's population and added the catchphrase, and another told that he had sat in a picture theatre the night before and observed that the boys and girls sat with their hands folded in their laps. Of course, no one believed that, but it helped to get a laugh.

If you can't get a paragraphing Paramounteer, you can at least get someone to write you a set of stingers to wish on a kindly local editor.

THIS SHEIK IS A SHRIEK, BUT HE CASHED IN

He looks more like Uncle Tom driving over to Legree's plantation, but it brought real money to the Rex Theatre, Remus, Mich., and just ruined the day for a tent show which drifted into town. It's funny, but it is just as good as more costly stunts, because it paid.

Made Arctic Relics Sell "Nanook" Seats

Working on the lines of general publicity, the Pathe exploitation department made a display of Arctic relics in a Brooklyn store window for the benefit of the exhibitors who were using the picture in that territory.

A Pathe Release

THE NAMM DISPLAY

The store was that of A. I. Namm, and the window was one in which the dresser aims to make unusual displays. The exploitation department loaned some of the material brought down from the Arctic by Robert J. Flaherty, and it made so interesting a display that it not only helped the exhibitors, but it brought people to the store. The store supplied its own backing and did all of the display, and asked for another as good.

Softsoaping

Because First National's "Hail the Woman" might be mistaken for a play appealing to women only, the Strand Theatre, Lansing, Mich., arranged with a drug store having an allotment of sample tubes of a new shaving cream to distribute them to men patrons during the run of this picture. It helped the house and at the same time gave more importance to the sample distribution.

Whiskered Sheik Was Poison to Opposition

This is one of the funniest Sheiks we ever expect to see, and we regret that the photograph is so poor that you cannot get from the cut the full effect of those bird nest whiskers and wind-tempting hair, but you can at least enjoy the suggestion of the dashing Sheik, whose love was as hot as the desert sands, plodding over the prairie in this bull wagon.

It's funny; as funny as we have had, but it just naturally took all the life and laughter out of the day for a tent show manager who drifted into Remus, Mich., to make life miserable for the Rex Theatre. In spoiled the tent business and brought them over to the Rex in droves, and if it did that, it was good exploitation, no matter how funny it may look to those who can spend a couple of hundred dollars on a stunt.

It's funny, but it marks the manager, whoever he may be, as a live wire, who refuses to lie down and let his legs be tied by every traveling trick on the road, and if all exhibitors had the same willingness to do the best they can, instead of bewailing their limitations, the business would be in a more healthful condition.

We have a lot of respect for the Rex management. It did the best the town permitted

HIDE USHERS BEHIND MASK IN A BEAUTY CONTEST

Some of them should hide, but this brought a lot more publicity to the State Theatre, Minneapolis, than more pretentious and expensive schemes, for the girls got out and worked and even the bow-legged one had some following.

Made His Guarantee Sell First National

Getting solidly behind "Tol'able David," Major I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., assured his patrons that "Tol'able David" was a really fine picture, then added: "If it has not proven all that our advertising claims it to be, then you can disregard our future advertisements. Do you think we would say that if we were not sure of our grounds?"

Building on this, he used the Jacksonville idea of dooryard exploitation. Five hundred cards were used, reading: "Good morning. Just wanted to say 'Tol'able David' starts at 1 p. m. today, at the Rialto." In smaller type was "We would be foolish to work while you sleep to advertise something which was not worth-while, wouldn't we?"

These were mounted on sharpened sticks and placed in the yards during the night to face the houses. Many persons who were not visited walked into someone else's yard to see what it was. The stunt cost $4 and helped to increase business by a third.

During the run a card in the lobby told the patron to see the play and pay or not when he came out, according to his satisfaction. Very few failed to purchase their tickets in advance, but some tried out the scheme and paid on the way out, just to be different.

Something Different

Johnny Friedl, Paramounteer for Des Moines, knows that the cut-up photograph with ticket prizes is getting old enough to vote, but he put a goat gland in the old idea by trying to throw contestants off the track when he used a hashed still of Meighan and wished it on a clothing store. The store announced it was a picture of "Our Leading Citizen," and the salamanders who live in Des Moines were trying to make it look like some local celebrity until they noted that the prizes were tickets to the Strand and that Meighan was there in "Our Leading Citizen."

Old, But Good

E. R. Cummings, of the Fort Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, broke a window to advertise Jackie Coogan in "Trouble," explaining on a card that this was the broken pane which got Jackie into "Trouble."

The break was made with soap zigzags. It's old stuff, but lately we saw hundreds of business men anchored in front of a New York store looking at a baseball which apparently had stuck in the break.

This was done by cutting the ball in two and gluing one half to the inside and the other to the outside, matching it accurately. The same thing can be done with a wooden brick or a papier mache stone, lettering the window around the break with water color, the brick or other object providing the focal point for the display.

Capping for Gish

One of the accessories on Dorothy Gish in "The Country Flapper" is a paper hat made of stout kraft paper which can be shipped flat and pasted up by the house or the recipient. The dunce caps on "School Days" and similar headgear have been clean-ups, and the flapper hat can not only be used for advertising, but can be copied by milliners for sale in fabrics.

It is doing a lot to help the picture make money and is being very generally used.

Masked the Ushers in Beauty Contest

All cats are alike, grey in the dark, according to an old Spanish proverb, and any girl is good looking behind a mask, but masking the ushers and then staging a beauty contest brought more tangible results to the State Theatre, Minneapolis, than a lot of expensive schemes.

It was a stunt to put over Guy Bates Post in First National's "The Masqueraders," and the ballot box was labeled: "Vote for the Masquerader you think is the prettiest.

Most of the girls had regular patrons who were interested in their regular usher, and the interest was worked into a real contest, with the partisans getting out and hustling among their friends, and they could not talk of the girls without telling about "The Masquerader."

Raffles Now Rides as The Masquerader

Street workers for the Raffles stunt still prove husky exploitation, but the Capitol Theatre, St. Paul, has refined the idea for Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader." This picture is of a class to appeal to a better clientele than the average and should be handled with nicer discrimination. The auto stunt seems to supply the idea.

The car was driven about the streets by a chauffeur in the livery of the Capitol Theatre, and the newspapers announced that prizes would be given those who guessed his identity. This is not easy in a city the size of St. Paul, with Minneapolis right alongside, but the stunt gained interest, for hope rises eternal, and a lot of people thought they recognized the well dressed chap who sat back in the rear seat.

A Capitol Leaser

The chief value of the idea, however, is the teaser angle, for the stunt was opened before the newspaper advertising broke and got the people interested in the title before its announcement. It brought extra business to the Capitol through this angle. In a small town the straight guessing idea will prove a stronger pull, but it will work in places of any size for this First National.

A RIDING RAFFLES WORKS FOR THE MASQUERADERS

St. Paul was asked to tell who the man in the tonneau is. This is not as easy in St. Paul as it would be in a smaller town, but it has the makings of a new idea to put over Guy Bates Post in this fine First National production.

Get Behind Serial for All It's Worth

The Regent Theatre, Indianapolis, believes in starting a serial right if it is a good one, and it took 135 lines, double, to put over Ruth Roland in "The Timber Queen," starting it off with the comment that it is the first serial in years strong enough to run the week. Picture Gallery Is Lacking in a Punch"

We have seen Jewett Bubar do a lot better work than this sketch for Ethel Clayton at the Imperial. Possibly this may mean something when you have seen the story but the time to make the impression is before the patron has seen the picture and we do not believe that Roth and Partington's customers are going to be particularly impressed by three persons looking at Miss Clayton with no particular expression. The picture is meaningless and therefore uninteresting so it will not sell tickets. A single head of Miss Clayton looking terror stricken would have meant much more in the way of interest. This much has been drawn in one of Bubar's off days. Were we Milt Samis we would leave him off the display the following week as a punishment or better still can the sketch and use all type. It is a waste of space to put in a meaningless set of portraits, no matter how good the portraits may be, and for that matter Bubar has put freckles all over

Miss Clayton's nose and the man has an eczema of the forehead. Bubar at his best is remarkably good, but this is quite the reverse of his best. We think it is one of the worst he has ever turned out. Even his lettering is bad. Milt might at least have routed the cut for type.

fense." The idea is that the black background will carry the white letter through the scene cut and that an outline is needed only in the white space at the right. The theory is all right, but it does not work out in practice because the half tone screen does not give a full black. This could be vastly improved by outlining each letter, whether it seems to need it or not. You cannot always tell just how the thing is going to look in the cut and then it is too late to correct errors. It looks all right in the copy, where the white paint stands out against the half tone or photograph like a 24-sheet against a church wall, but what the public sees is what the cut yields, and only that. This is the reason there is so much ineffective work done. The artist and manager both judge from the cut copy and not from what the cut will yield. It may seem an excess of caution, but an india ink line around each letter of the title would have improved this to several times its present value. Artists seem to give no heed to color and reduction. If a space looks all right in a dead black against a dead white, they shoot it through in the blissful belief that it will come out all right. The wise manager will not pass copy that looks all right unless he has reason to believe that it will be all right when it finally comes to the reader. What the artist shows him sells no tickets. What he shows his public is what counts. It is important to smash a good title home at the first glance and not trust to its sinking in gradually. Here the difference in color is so marked that the line does not sink in as a whole. This is probably more apparent in the original newspaper advertisement than it will be in the cut shown here, since the latter will have the double advantage of a better black and a reduction that will close up the halftone and give a stronger color. Apart from this the example is well done and the artist has not hogged all the space from the copy writer. He gives room for four lines of type sales and the addition of the smaller features.

Howard Hooks in to National Ads

About the best hook in to the Paramount national advertising is found in this annoncement from the Howard Theatre, Atlanta. It might look a lot prettier all dolled up with a pretty cut but it would not have the selling force of this direct hook to the Paramount program for the opening year. the coming 41 Paramount productions and have aroused interest in the string of releases. In announcing "the first of the 41." the Howard crystallizes all of the interest the magazine has excited in the single release with which the program starts and puts the full force of the drive directly behind "While Satan Sleeps." For this reason the title is held down to give greater prominence to the real sales argument. Ordinarily the title would call for a better display; possibly through the use of more space between the lines, but the title here is secondary to the appeal of the 41 and this is given all the best of it, and then thrown over to the single title. If we had been setting this space we think we would have put the word "overture" in a light line to let the title of the selection get the prominence, also cutting down "Howard orchestra" and the leader's name. As it is, the top and bottom detract from the title —which is the principal sales point. Oustide of that we like this composition very well.

Spacious Setting Helpful to an Ad

South Bend, Indiana, has a compositor who knows how to get display, and the Blackstone has a manager who knows how to profit by this advantage. You read this space because there is so little to read and because reading is made so easy, and when you are through you are pretty apt to be sold on the proposition of seeing Connie in this little play. It's a bit late to be playing "Polly of the Follies," but we do not know of a picture better suited to the summer season. You don't want to sit through heavy plays. You want something light and frothy and Polly answers the bill of requirements to the last item. It's not heavy entertainment—it is thin and unburdened by much plot, but it gets over. The copy is good, but the display is even better, because it stands out so well. It is rather large—165 by 3—but space is probably cheap in South Bend, and they get a lot back for their investment in publicity because they use it so well. It may seem to carry the point to excess to argue that summer advertisements should carry less type and more white than winter spaces, but try it for a time and sees if it does not bring you results.

A GOOD TALMADGE ARGUMENT

Los Angeles Artist Avoids Usual Error

Earle Hall Payne sends in a couple of displays from the California Theatre, Los Angeles, in which his artist demonstrates that he can get out a straight illustration without the usual fussy ornamentation which detracts from the display without excuse. That for "The Dust Flower" is particularly good; not that the figure under the tree means anything but it at least does not destroy the selling value of the space. The mortises are nicely planned and the selling box, alongside the girl's skirt, is well phrased to connect the author in the reader's mind with Earthbound, upon which his screen fame chiefly rests. The display is by no means an ideal layout, but it is far better than the California average, and that applies to the State and not merely to the house. California has some of the finest houses in the country, but some of the poorest advertising. It seems to be a matter of geography, rather than individual incapacity, for the agents are hustlers, but not one seems to have the spirit to cut loose from an archaic style and do really effective work with an open display. The Los Angeles California seems to be coming closer to it than the others, but Milt Samis still leads, in spite of Bubar's occasional slump. Perhaps Mr. Payne will point the way for Los Angeles, but it would pay agents in both cities to get and study the Washington, Baltimore and Indianapolis Sunday papers.

A Goldwyn Release

Spoiling the Title with Useless Lines

The Garden Theatre, Baltimore, has produced an excellent advertisment in this display for "Yellow Men and Gold," other than that the title is largely obscured by a design supposed to be gold coin, but which really is a camouflage for the lettering. The bottom sketch is interesting and artistic, but the odd title, which would sell of its own weight, does not stand out on the space but must be puzzled out, letter by letter. It is a mistake to hide so good a title behind a cloud. The clinch sketch does not help matters much, and this space might better have been used to play up the well known author, who is now relegated to the space between the ship and the wreck in unimportant eight-point lines with little more value than six point. The sketch is not needed. It will not help to sell. You know that there is going to be a last-reel clinch and the pictured information does not thrill you. On the other hand, Gouveneur Morris has a popular following which can be sold on his name alone. Of the two the name is much to be preferred to the sketch. That would have value only as an attractor and the bottom sketch does all the appeal required to get the space over. The selling is well done in "Conflict! Fight! Treasure! Explosion! Danger! Love! Could anyone ask more in a picture?" You'll fall for that more quickly than a man and woman in the same old possessive grab.

Tall Devil Used While Satan Sleeps

One of the features of the campaign on "While Satan Sleeps" at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, was a cutout figure of "His Majesty," forty-two feet long, lying on the ledge of the cornice above the theatre, while the still frames for lobby display were caldrons presided over by cutout figures of the devil. Red lights were burned in back of the caldrons, and in the foyer was a miniature hell with streamers of red and yellow chiffon to suggest the flames. These were lighted from below by lamps screened by the groundpiece. This was flanked by small churches with illuminated windows.

At each performance the preceeding week two of the ushers were projected on the stage in clouds of gunpowder smoke. One carried a banner for the production and the other a similar announcement for the prologue. The ushers were dressed in close-fitting union suits dyed red, and were permitted to roam about the lobby and foyer when not required on the stage.

A special showing was held for the ministers and a better films club of women, and considerable use was made of their opinions.

The special stunting had a distinctly good influence on the week's business.

Newsy Bits

J. F. Cubberly, head of the new F. & R. Exchange of Minneapolis, announced this week that he will release one feature every other week. He has signed for the entire Al Lichman output. Warner Brothers' product, four Affiliated Distributors' specials, "The Love Slave," and many other pictures. The personnel of the F. & R. Exchange includes Tom Burke, formerly manager of the Midland Exchange, and Mark Ross, formerly with First National in that city.

Joe Horwitz, who is making Hotel Wolverine in Detroit his headquarters is planning on a big drive in that territory. Business in that territory has been far from what it should have been, but reports from Detroit lately indicate a change that indicate more prosperous times.

Messrs. Saxe and Hurlbutt, who comprise the Favorite Film Company, Detroit, this week celebrated their second anniversary as Detroit exchangemen, having gone to that city from Minneapolis. Their exchange has made rapid progress and they are now negotiating for several big productions.

A definite and complete announcement concerning the policy to be carried out by the new Balaban and Katz exchange in Chicago is expected to be made the latter part of this month.

Warner Brothers this week officially verified the exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World last week relative to their joining the producers' division of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., the Will Hay organization.

Morris Schlank, president of Anchor Film Corporation of Los Angeles, left New York this week for a trip back to the Coast. He will visit all exchanges en route. On Friday and Saturday of this week he stopped in Philadelphia and Baltimore. Next week he stops in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Cleveland.

Quite a few independent film men in New York this week went to Rochester to attend the opening of the luxurious Eastman Theatre in that city on Saturday. The party was scheduled to leave Friday night.

R. D. McDonnell has jointed the Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, Inc., of Atlanta, as salesman. He will travel out of Charlotte. S. E. Montgomery, a former newspaper man, also has joined Mr. Bromberg's forces and he will cover Alabama and Tennessee. Others who had joined Bromberg are F. L. Burkhalter and Fred H. Kirby.

H. Rattin, representing the Western Pictures Exploitation Company, traveling out of New York, is making a tour of the exchange centres of the country.

Harry Raver is no longer the active head of Torino Films, Inc., the company's affairs now being administered by Bert Wheeler, who was recently elected president of the corporation, filling the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Raver.

A new exchange opened its doors in New York City when the Atlas Film Distributing Company announced that it was prepared to do business with exhibitors in northern New Jersey and New York City. Rudy Becker is sales manager and I. Brody general manager.

The Week in Review

IN the vernacular of the street, Abe Warner of Warner Brothers, said "a good mouthful" when he said that "independent pictures are the saving grace for both the motion picture theatre owners and industry." This statement he made in the course of an interview he gave out in a western city recently. And because it is so brimful of interesting data, we are reproducing the interview in its entirety:

"There still seems to be a doubt in the minds of theatre owners about independent productions as to their value as box-office features," continued Mr. Warner, "and that is because these men are depending entirely too much on the big distributor. Despite this fact, the truthful theatre-owner will at once admit that the majority of the greatest box-office features during the past season have come from the independent producers. And by the greatest I mean those pictures that have actually made big money for theatre owners.

"In spite of all that has been said and written about the independent picture, in spite of all the discouragement that has been placed in the way of the independent exchange man trying to market his pictures, the theatre owners have yet to realize that only by encouraging the independent picture will their enterprise be saved for the future. The trend of the times indicates in no small measure why a great many producers once allied to the big distributing organizations are seriously considering the independent market, and the day is coming when the independent picture will dominate the field.

"A great many exhibitors have booked independent pictures and they have found them to be more profitable than the regular, formularized product they must accept, whether they want to or not. But there are still a great many theatre owners who feel that when an independent picture is offered to them, they can book it for practically nothing. Them days are over.

"Just because a picture has been independently made does not necessarily signify that it's a piece of junk, to be sold at junk prices. Certainly, no sane person expects to go into a high class tailoring establishment to purchase a suit priced at three figures and talk the manager into the idea that the suit is only worth a third of the price cost. The same thing applies to independent pictures. If they are big pictures, a fair and just price should be paid."

THE exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World last week relative to Warner Brothers' affiliation with the producers' division of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc., aroused much comment in the trade. Since publication of that announcement this department has been besieged with numerous questions concerning the Hays organization and independents. So far as this writer is able to ascertain, under provision of the laws of that organization, independent distributors are ineligible. This statement came from an official of that organization. The Warners, because of their wholesale production activities, were eligible to membership in the producers' division of the M. P. P. D.

CHALK up another scoop for that wide-awake and progressive producer-distributor, Charles C. Burr, head of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc. Following publication in this department of reports from exhibitors who feared that the production of Johnny Hines features meant the end of the popular "Torchy" comedies, Mr. Hines reconsidered his plans and, after much searching, succeeded in lassooing Ray McKee, whom he signed to continue characterizing the character made so famous by Johnny. But C. C. didn't stop there, for information of an authentic nature reached this department this week that he had signed Mary Anderson and Charles Murray, the latter a Mack Sennett comedian, to appear in the same cast. Unfortunately, however, this department further learns that this series will not be available through State rights exchanges.

THE value of a director is decidedly underestimated by most folks in this market. Nevertheless, the fact remains that he is a most important factor in this end of the business. A good director should be encouraged and this department, for one, will give him every credit to which he is entitled, for, after all, he is the big man behind the guns. We recall many famous stars who stepped outside the bounds, believing they could direct their own pictures. And without exception all flopped.

GOOD titles may increase the value of satisfactory pictures but certainly they should not be accepted as constituting any pardonable reason for the release of conceded impossible junk. Yet, we notice that a number of distributors are resorting to just such tactics.

Federated Is Ready for Its Fall Drive

Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., announced this week another two-reel comedy release that is to be known as the "Federated Radio Comedies," which are being produced by Ben Wilson at his coast studios, the first subject being entitled, "Family Affairs," which has just been completed. Wilson is now busy preparing for his second subject—the work entitled, "Money or My Life."

The Federated Monte Banks Comedies stars Monte Banks, who is megaphoning his second picture, the title of which will be announced shortly.

The Federated Jo-Rok Comedies are being directed and the cast is headed by Joe Rock. The first release will be called, "Ali Baba," and the second, "Aladdin."

Burr Signs Charley Murray and Others

C. C. Burr again stepped into the limelight this week and added another feather to his cap when he succeeded in including Charley Murray and Mary Anderson to affix their signatures to a long term contract. These players will appear in an all-star company that Mr. Burr is organizing to produce a series of "Torchy" Comedies starring Ray McKee. Moving Picture World exclusively announced the acquisition of McKee by Burr several months ago, but pending production on the second Johnny Hines feature, "Sure-Fire Flint," that producer-distributor temporarily held up further negotiations for the comedy series.

Last week he again took up the new "Torchy" matter and after much dickering succeeded in bringing Murray and Anderson to terms. Charley Murray is a Mack Sennett protege, who has recently been touring the vaudeville houses, while Miss Anderson has been starring in a number of independent features, the last of which was Ivan Abramson's "The Wildness of Youth."

News that Warner Brothers would have a total of 18 productions available for state rights distribution stimulated much interest during the past week.

Constance Joslin, formerly with the D. W. Griffith forces, this week signed with Bruce Mitchell of T. R. Coffin Productions to appear in a series of pictures that that director will make.

Production on the second of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., "Big Six" program, starring Johnny Hines, is expected to be started late next month. "Sure Fire Flint" was completed last week. Dell Henderson, director.

Clarence Bricker, the Coast producer, formerly with the Louis Mayer forces, is in town and made it known that he will make a series of two-reel comedies starring Frankie Lee, the "American boy."

Rose Coghlan, the veteran actress, is doing some splendid work as a "hag" in the feature, "Secrets of Paris," that C. C. Burr and Whitman Bennett are jointly turning out at the Whitman Bennett studio in Yonkers, N. Y.

Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, who wrote and produced "What's Wrong with the Women?" which Equity is State righting, is busily engaged writing the story for the next production he will place in the hands of Equity officials for distribution.

A solicitor for a "yellow sheet" last week visited the various studios in New York with the rankest holdup proposition ever submitted to anybody. Fortunately, so far as this department is aware, no one tumbled.

Judging from reports from Gloversville, N. Y., where Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., is turning out "Lost in a Great City" for Arrow Film Corporation distribution, that feature will be ready the latter part of October.

Miss Dorothy Phillips, who has charge of the Star series that C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is producing for R-C Film Corporation distribution, is lining up some excellent material in the way of prominent stars.

There are now seven big independent producing companies working in studios in and around New York City.

A persistent rumor was circulated in various circles that Joe Plunkett, managing director of Strand Theatre, New York, was to make a series of independent features. There is nothing to this report, and it was denied in its entirety by Mr. Plunkett this week.

Manager R. S. Moore, of the Gem Theatre, Snyder, Okla., is one of those showmen who finds a reason for everything. Short while ago he booked Arrow Film Corporation's special, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," but lost money on the engagement. But he adds: "A wonderful production, much better than book or play. I lost money on it on account of having the first tent show of the season for competition."

"Lone Hand Wilson," starring Lester Cuneo, proved the snake's hip inso-far as Manager Artie Pearson of the Auditorium of Melrose, Mass., is concerned, for the picture didn't live up to expectations artistically and flopped at the box office. He bought this one from an exchangeman, but says that hereafter he'll look at everything before booking.

"I Am the Law," C. C. Burr's special Edwin Carewe production dealing with a Northwest subject, is breaking records right and leftt, judging from reports from exhibitors.

Auerbach Sees Big Scarcity of Serials

Louis Auerbach, vice president of the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., in commenting on business prospects, predicts that there will be a scarcity of good serials this fall.

"The lengthy depression," says Mr. Auerbach, "scared producers for a long time with the result that until a short time ago it looked as if there would be hardly any new independent product this fall. Signs of business revival brought the motion picture men into activity again, with the result that the independent market is at the present time better equipped for record business than ever before. National distributing companies have less product to offer, whereas the independents have more features of the big-picture class now in production than at any time previously.

"The one type of picture which has been overlooked," opines Auerbach, "is the serial. There are but few serials on the market at the present time. It is the smaller houses which make up most of the serial business. It was the smaller houses which felt the depression worst of all. Serial business therefore slumped greater than other business. But conditions are now changed.

"'The Jungle Goddess' is the only new serial offered to independents.

Warner to Have Eighteen Features During 1922-23

One of the most ambitious producing plans attempted by an independent organization for the season of 1923 was made known by Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers. The Warner organization at this early date have planned to produce eighteen pictures for next year, and it is declared that when the titles of the eighteen stories are made known they will startle the industry.

With this announcement the Warner Brothers will become one of the largest producing units in the industry. To formulate the plans for 1923, Abe Warner left last week for the Warner coast studios to confer with his brothers, Sam and Jack, both of whom are at present producing several well known novels.

According to Harry M. Warner, the productions will be made by a group of prominent directors, assisted by a corps of well known scenario writers and screen players. Sam and Jack Warner will head the producing units.

"We are not ready at present to divulge the nature of the stories we plan to produce for next year," said Mr. Warner. "But we will say that the titles of these stories, when they are finally made known, will startle the industry.

"In the production of these pictures we will spare no expense in maintaining the highest production standard possible. And we will engage the best brains and ability that money can buy—as far as directors, scenario writers and players are concerned."

For this season the Warner Brothers will release seven productions, three of which are being made by Harry Rapf at the coast studios. The seven pictures include "The Beautiful and Damned," F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel dealing with the flapper, "Main Street," the novel by Sinclair Lewis, "Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce, "Rags to Riches" and "Heroes of the Street," both featuring Wesley Barry; "Little Church Around the Corner," by Marion Russell, and "A Dangerous Adventure," a wild animal picture featuring Grace Darmond.

The directors for these productions include E. Mason Hopper, Sidney Franklin, Wallace Worsley, William Beaudine; and the scenario writers are Julien Josephson, Monte M. Katterjohn, Olga Prinzlau, Edmund Goulding Mildred Considine and Isabel Johnston.

LIVE NEWS

Business in Canada is still unsettled, according to reports brought to New York by various buyers.

That independent exchanges are looking forward to a big season is evident from the extensive exploitation drive some of the bigger firms are conducting.

S. J. Rollo, treasurer of Clark Cornelius Corporation, figured in an automobile accident in New York last Sunday and sustained painful injuries. Latest reports had it that he was recovering rapidly.

Ivan Abramson announced this week that the first shipment of prints on his initial feature, "Wildness of Youth," which he made for Graphic Exchanges, Inc., was sent out to the exchanges this week.

The Reliance Film Exchange of Washington will absorb the Rialto Productions, Inc., in that city. Nat Sauber of Rialto will be retained as general manager.

Harry Levey is now handling the non-theatrical pictures that Alexander Film Company of New York have been releasing in the past, according to announcement made this week.

Balaban & Katz of Chicago this week signed a contract with Warner Brothers, whereby the former acquired the rights to "Your Best Friend" in Northern Illinois. A. H. Blank Enterprises of Omaha bought the same picture for Nebraska and Iowa.

Edward Grossman, according to a despatch from Chicago, has been appointed the Windy City manager for Al Lichtman Corporation. Grossman is making his headquarters with Celebrated Film Players Corporation, of which Joe Friedman is the head, the latter holding the Lichtman franchise for that territory.

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, announced this week that he had completed the titling of his initial Maciste picture, which he will release as "The Unconquered."

Special Representative Jossey, of Arrow Film Corporation, in a chat with a representative of this department this week, expressed it as his opinion that conditions in the South are improving faster than any other section he has visited. The South was particularly hard hit by the industrial depression.

"Fatty" Karr Signs with T. R. Coffin

Los Angeles (Special).—"Fatty" Karr, who has attracted much attention of late from various producers, who aspire to land him the laurels forfeited by "Fatty" Arbuckle, this week signed a three-year contract with the T. R. Coffin Productions, which will star him in a series of two-reel "human interest" comedies, the first of which will be ready for release about the first of November, according to exclusive announcement made to the local representative of Moving Picture World this week. Bruce Mitchell, who has been directing the Monte Banks comedies and who is now in New York, will produce the comedies. In fact, Mitchell signed him this week through his local representative.

Production will be at the Cosmos Art Studios in Hollywood. Mr. Mitchell is expected back in this city the latter part of September and production will be started immediately. Late this week Mr. Mitchell wired his Coast office that he had completed releasing arrangements with Franklyn O. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, Inc., of New York, which will dispose of the comedies on the State rights basis. Karr is best known for his work in Universal's "Human Hearts," "Big Stakes," and "Omar the Tentmaker."

Joe Brandt, director general of Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., arrived in this city this week. He had lengthy conferences with the various Federated producers here. Ben Wilson, one of the producers who is making two-reel comedies for Federated, is very much enthused over future prospects of Federated.

Lou Baum, recently promoted to the Vice Presidency of Equity Pictures Corporation, is in California. The early part of the current week he spent in Los Angeles, going to San Francisco from here. He is on the road selling territorial rights to Equity's feature, "What's Wrong With The Women?"

Harry Rapf, having completed two pictures for Warner, is now busily perfecting plans for "Brass," which he will make at the Warner studios, which right now are being extensively altered and enlarged.

Ben Wilson is buying original stories for William Fairbanks, his new Western star. He already has turned over the first William Fairbanks feature to his distributor, Arrow Film Corporation.

Clarence Bricker, of Clarence Bricker Productions, Inc., who is in New York, wired this week that he had signed with East Coast Productions, Inc., for the distribution of his new series of two-reel comedies starring Frankie Lee, the American boy.

Marie Prevost will be starred in two more pictures that Harry Rapf will make for Warner Brothers' distribution at the Warner studios.

Lon Chaney will be starred in a series of special independent pictures as soon as he has completed his next big picture, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," for Universal, according to reliable reports.

"Only A Shop Girl," the next melodrama on the "Bix Six" schedule of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, is scheduled for release the early part of October. Production is virtually completed.

The local exchanges are looking forward to an unusual year, the exchangemen being of the belief that if they don't make money this coming season they'll never cash in.

Eddie Lyons has started work on the first of the new series of two-reel comedies that he will release through Arrow Film Corporation.

One interesting development at studios where independent productions are being made brings forth the impression that the independents are leaving nothing undone in the way of getting the proper sets. Some of the pictures here have unusually big sets.

"The Country Flapper," with Dorothy Gish, a Producers Security Corporation picture, opens at the Alhambra here on Labor Day.

The exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World last week that Warner Brothers had joined the Will Hays organization has created much comment among independent producers.

"Why Do Men Marry?" Gets Press Praise

The first special production o Unity Pictures, Inc., "Why D Men Marry?" was screened for th staff at the Unity offices, 723 Seventh avenue, New York, Monday afternoon, the final cutting, titling an editing having been completed las week. The picture had been show a number of times before, but th first formal screening of the com pleted film was given on Monday.

The work of Edy Darclae, wh heads the all-star cast in this pic ture, was regarded as good, no only by the members of the Unit organization, but by all who wit nessed the screening, and several o these men prominent in the in dependent film field. It is believe that Miss Darclae will score a even greater success in this pic ture than she did in the Fox film spectacle, "Nero," in which she play ed a prominent female role.

"Why Do Men Marry?" is modern story of society an domestic life. The society atmos phere presents a logical opportunit for lavish sets and gowns. A new creation is worn by Miss Darclae i practically every sequence of th picture.

John J. Hayes Signs Bertschy

To fill the vacancy created b the resignation of Julius Singe President John J. Hayes, of th Pacific Film Company, Inc., o Culver City, Cal., announces th appointment of Robert Bertsch as eastern representative.

Mr. Bertschy was formerl manager of Warner's Alban (N. Y.) branch and is well-know in State rights circles. He wi have his office with Willia Alexander. According to M Hayes, Mr. Singer resigned t formulate a consolidation of Stat rights exchange managers fo booking purposes.

Famous Players, Ltd., Gets Equity's Goodman Film

"What's Wrong With the Women?" Daniel Carson Goodman's production for release on the independent market through Equity Pictures Corporation, will be issued to Canadian exhibitors through the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada. This sale was consummated recently between Abbe Cohn, of the Canadian exchange, and Louis Baum, vice president of Equity, who is now on a tour of exchanges in the interest of the Goodman picture.

The opinion of Mr. Cohn on this unusual production coincided with those of Mr. Sam Zierler, of New York; Sam Grand, of Boston; Joe Friedman, of Chicago, and Ben Amsterdam, of Philadelphia, four leading independent exchangeman, who have already purchased the picture for their respective territories. "It is seldom," stated Mr. Cohn, "that I have agreed so perfectly with the trade paper critics in their opinion of a picture. The reviews I had read on this picture naturally lead me to expect one of the biggest independent productions of many years and I entered the projection room thoroughly convinced that the production would have to be 100 per cent. from every standpoint in order to enthuse me. I found it just that. Seldom have I seen a picture that shows such a keen knowledge of box-office values on the part of its producer. There is an appeal here for every class of people, and people of every age. It is a story which leaves a profound impression upon the mind, yet first and foremost it is entertainment, not preachment."

Mr. Baum, vice president of Equity, is now in San Francisco. According to latest reports from him, many sales are pending on "What's Wrong With the Women?" which, when consummated, will come near to establishing a sales record on the independent market. In every case where the picture was screened, the opinions were unanimous, especially on the point of its universality of appeal. It has never been characterized as a "man's" picture or a "woman's" picture, or a "small town" or "big city" drawing card, but rather as a special of general appeal.

"The need of big special productions," states Mr. Baum, "is just as acute in the independent market as it is in the national distribution field. The State right exchange looks upon a production that can be conscientiously offered as a 'special' as a life-saver and this is the reason that 'What's Wrong With the Women?' has been so well received by the exchangemen who have seen it. There is a plentiful supply of mediocre, 'program' pictures, but they are the curse of the independent market just as they are in the national distribution field."

While Mr. Baum is touring the exchange centers, the Equity Pictures advertising department is getting into full swing with their advertising and publicity campaign which will launch the picture with a publicity impetus seldom equalled in the history of the independent field.

Big Staff at Work on New North Feature

A special staff of six has been engaged by L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North to assist Will Nigh and Ben Behrens, his associate, in cutting the 100,000 feet of film shot on the director's latest picture — "Notoriety." Closed quarters in the film room adjoining Weber & North's offices were assigned for the work.

The job of eliminating footage from the thousand reels down to seven—which will probably be the finished length of the picture, is nothing unusual in Nigh's life as director. The independent director has always made it a point to over-shoot, as it assures him a wide latitude of choice for the final form of the picture. He took excess footage on "Why Girls Leave Home" and "Schooldays," and his wisdom in filming 100 times the necessary footage was proven in the finished product.

Will State Right "Madame Sans Gene"

Announcement was made this week by Producers Security Corporation that it will release "Madame Sans Gene" on the State rights basis. This statement virtually sets aside certain rumors relative to the intentions of several program companies releasing such a picture.

"Madame Sans Gene" ranks as one of the most famous stories and also one of the best book sellers. In Europe Sarah Bernhardt immortalized the character, while in America Amelia Bingham made that role famous.

Producers Security Corporation contends this feature will rank among the best of the year. Aubrey Kennedy produced this picture while Margaret Mayo titled it.

Sam Werner of St. Louis has completed his plans for the ensuing year and right now he is taking a trip through his territory, personally interviewing exhibitors to whom he is submitting a novel booking proposition.

News of the expansion of the Sol Lesser-Mike Rosenberg production activities on the Coast cheered the New York offices of the Western Pictures Exploitation Company, whose forces have been working overtime, but have been quietly delivering the goods.

A rumor was circulated in New York this week that C. C. Burr was about to launch an independent exchange in that city. However, there is absolutely no truth whatsoever in this canard, for Mr. Burr is perfectly satisfied with the releasing arrangements he has with Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation. Sam Zierler is one of the most aggressive and progressive exchangemen in this country and it would be folly for any national distributor doing business with Zierler to attempt to handle the distribution in the metropolitan district.

Just what has happened to M. H. Burnside's plans relative to the State rights distribution of "Yankee Doodle Jr.," one of the best bets on the market, is still a mystery, for several exchangemen who have sought to buy the picture during the past week were unable to even get in touch with Mr. Burnside.

"Rich Men's Wives," the first of the Al Lichtman Preferred Pictures, will have day and date showings at the Liberty Theatre, Portland, and the Coliseum, Seattle, September 16. The Lichtman product is distributed through De Luxe for the four Northwest states. Al Rosenberg is the local manager.

The Seattle Educational should be flying a pennant from the roof these days, with the bookings of the entire 1922-1923 product for first runs, in all key cities in the Pacific Northwest. J. A. Gage is the live wire manager of the local exchange.

L. N. Walton, manager of the Butte Exchange, Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle, since its opening, has found it necessary to return to the Coast on account of his health. He has been given charge of the Oregon territory, with headquarters in Portland. Paul Schulz, an old time theatre and exchangeman, formerly manager of three downtown houses in Seattle, and more recently salesman for one of the larger national distributing corporations, will be the new manager in Butte.

Equity Sale

"What's Wrong With the Women?" Daniel Carson Goodman's production, will be distributed in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia by the Columbia Film Service, of Pittsburgh.

Chicago House Books First S. R. Feature

That the biggest and best theatres are opening more and more to good independent features is proved once again this week with word that the premiere of "More to Be Pitied" will take place at the Randolph Theatre, Chicago. This C. B. C. feature has been booked into the Randolph for a run, starting Sunday, September 3. This is an important move in the independent field, the Randolph being one of Chicago's best long-run houses at the present time, playing program features. It is the first time in its film history that this theatre has booked an independent feature, the management booking "More to Be Pitied" on its merits as a box-office picture, because it was convinced that this is one of the big pictures of the season, and good for a big first run.

Booker Mitchell of Loew's Metropolitan circuit, booked Producers Security Corporation's "The Country Flapper," starring Dorothy Gish, on the tip given by this department. And he's darn glad he did, for when that picture played the New York Theatre and Roof on Tuesday, Aug. 28, there was a heavy turnaway. As a consequence, the picture will play the entire Loew circuit.

Arthur Whyte, who is booking pictures for the B. F. Keith houses, is giving the independent pictures the once-over and grabbing all the good lookers in sight.

Lou Berman of Independent Film Corporation of Philadelphia, after considerable dickering, finally got a Boardwalk theatre to show Warner Brother's Harry Rapf feature, "School Days," in Atlantic City, N. J. With the weather break in favor of theatre patronage, the picture jammed the house, despite the opposition of "Blood and Sand" at the Virginia Theatre, and at the Colonial Theatre, in the immediate vicinity.

The Jack Dempsey-Georges Carpentier fight was fought in Jersey City a year ago last July 2, but that apparently doesn't mean a thing, for the reason that the pictures of that fight are still drawing big houses, particularly in the South, where it is being road-showed with great financial success to distributor and exhibitors.

"Ashamed of Parents," a Warner feature that wasn't put down as likely to break records, is proving a big surprise everywhere, for it is getting big money at the box office and is entertaining to the point that the folks go out talking about it. Anyway, that's the experience of Jack Kairns in Detroit.

"Rich Men's Wives," the Ben Schulberg feature which Al Lichtman Corporation is distributing, showed to wonderful business at Peter Adam's U. S. Theatre in Paterson, N. J., last week, business holding up all week.

Backer Closes Big Deal with Mitchell-Bricker

Three important deals were consummated this week by Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, Inc., involving three series of two-reel comedies. The final contracts were not signed until midnight on Tuesday in the spacious offices of East Coast Productions, Inc., in the Times Building. Involved in the deal were Bruce Mitchell and Clarence Bricker, two well-known comedy directors from the coast, who came to New York purposely to close this deal. As a result of the deal, East Coast will distribute, on the State rights basis, a special series of two-reel Crescent comedies with all-star casts, and a new series starring "Fatty" Karr, who is being boosted for the laurels formerly possessed by "Fatty" Arbuckle, and the Frankie Lee series, starring Frankie Lee, the "American Boy."

Mr. Mitchell, who has been producing the Monty Banks comedies for Ben Wilson, will direct the Crescent and Karr comedies, which will be produced by T. R. Coffin, of Los Angeles. This series will include six pictures, four of which are already completed. These are "Easy Pickin'," "The Colorado Knight," "Nobody There" and "Follow Suit." "Fatty" Karr, who has appeared in "Human Hearts," "Omar, the Tentmaker" and other specials, was signed in Los Angeles this week by a representative of Mr. Mitchell, according to a telegram received by this department. He has been placed under a three-year contract and will make a series of pictures that will be released at the rate of one a month.

Mr. Bricker is also well-known as a director of comedies and in landing Frankie Lee, one of the cleverest boy actors on the stage or screen, he has scored an effective scoop. Franklie Lee will be remembered for his splendid work in "The Miracle Man." He has appeared in many pictures. He is 12 years old. The series will constitute 12 two-reelers, the first of which will be released on November 15.

Aronson Launches New Organization

News of interest to independent producers of motion pictures is contained in the announcement by Alexander S. Aronson of the launching of an extensive business organization devoted entirely to important services which were, it is said, heretofore not available in any company to the independent producer seeking adequate distributing arrangements.

Mr. Aronson resigned as general sales manager and vice president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation earlier in the year to perfect the details of his own company to render service to independent producers in placing product for distribution, controlling sales, auditing and field selling.

In addition to arranging distribution this organization will control all sales by the approval of contracts, by enforcing play dates and through a competent auditing staff in the field it will check up local exchanges so that the independent may secure what is coming to him from each booking.

Mr. Aronson states that his organization will work actively in the field watching every first run situation and conferring with the distributor's selling force in the exchanges so that product may be placed in the theatres with the maximum benefit to the producer and so that unsold territories may be followed up.

A capable foreign department will look after the disposition of world rights on independent product. Other departments of the new company include exploitation and booking of stars or featured players.

Lesser Will Produce on a Big Scale

One of the biggest independent production deals of the year has just been consummated by the Principal Pictures Corporation, by which this organization will produce and release eight features during the year. Michael Rosenberg, secretary and Western manager of the organization, has arranged with Irving Cummings to produce a series of three big features, starting with "Chicago Sal," an original story by Harvey Gates, author of "Hell Morgan's Girl," "Hurricane's Gal" and other well-known screen stories.

Elinor Glyn's story, "The World's a Stage," directed by Colin Campbell, and featuring Dorothy Phillips, Bruce McCrea and Kenneth Harlan, will be the first of the series of eight productions to be distributed.

Al Lichtman to Tour Three States

Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, and vice president of Preferred Pictures, Inc., will be the guest of honor at a series of exhibitor gatherings to be held in three states early in September.

The meetings are being arranged by Harry L. Charnas, president of the Al Lichtman exchange and of the Standard Film Service Company, to inaugurate the Lichtman service in Western Pennsylvania, Southern Michigan, Northern and Southern Ohio.

At these meetings, which will be held in leading theatres of the cities visited, "Rich Men's Wives," the initial release of the Al Lichtman Corporation, will be screened.

Mr. Lichtman plans to leave New York Saturday, September 9.

Weber-North Will Build New Studio

It was learned this week that the independent producing and distributing firm of L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North are receiving estimates and blue-prints from architects and contractors on plans for a studio to be exclusively used for Weber & North productions during the coming season. The ownership of their own studio was considered an advisable step by the producers in view of the extensive program of releases planned.

The step suggested itself after Will Nigh completed his latest special production, "Notoriety," for Weber & North. An Eastern studio was rented for more than two months. The studio was fully equipped for an average feature, but inadequate for the extra demands of an ambitious production like "Notoriety." Special sets and effects were necessary, as Nigh's property plans on the picture called for original settings. A huge courtroom scene in particular, which carries one of the big moments in the action was the first special job that confronted Nigh's staff.

Arrow's September Plans Ready; Sales Drive Begins

The plans for "Arrow Month"—September—have now been perfected and Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the organization, and his associates expect to have the sales drive well under way within the next few days.

The first big event of "Arrow Month" will be the premier presentation of "Night Life in Hollywood" at Woods Theatre, Atlantic City, which will be backed up by an extensive advertising and exploitation campaign. Arrow's department of advertising and exploitation will assist Dave Starkman, manager of Woods Theatre, and it is said to be expected that big results will be achieved. Following the engagement of "Night Life in Hollywood" at Woods Theatre, it will play an equally important engagement at H. C. Horater's Alhambra Theatre in Toledo, where once again the house management will be assisted by Arrow's staff of exploiteers.

September will also see the beginning of the campaign on the William Fairbanks series, recently acquired by Arrow Film Corporation. The first of this series—"Peaceful Peters"—has been completed by Ben Wilson in his Hollywood studios, and a print is now on the way East. Camera work has begun on the second picture—"The Sheriff of Sun Dog"—under the direction of Lewis King, who also wielded the megaphone for the first production, and who, it is expected, will direct the remainder of the series.

A trade paper campaign has been mapped out for the William Fairbanks series, which is said to be possessed of strong appeal and which is expected to create great interest in the production. Arrow has also prepared, in conjunction with this campaign, a brochure of exceptional merit, it is said.

This brochure, which will be mailed to every independent exchange man in the United States, will be followed up by a novelty mailer and this in turn will be backed up by an extensive campaign of direct sales letters, both to the exhibitor and to the exchange man.

Another feature of "Arrow Month" will be marked by the beginning of active production work on "Lost in a Big City," which, under the direction of George Irving, will represent Blazed Trail's second important contribution to the Arrow release list. "Lost in a Big City" will be made at Gloversville, New York, and Arrow expects that it will prove as great a box-office attraction as did "Ten Nights in a Barroom," which was created by the same organization, also for Arrow release. It has the benefit of the same scenarist, L. Case Russell, the same star, John Lowell; and a cast made up of many popular favorites.

Buy Series

Harry Thomas, of the Thomas Film Company, Washington, D. C., has purchased from East Coast Productions, Inc., the rights of the J. B. Warner series for Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia and Virginia.

Blumenthal to Bring New Foreign Film

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export & Import Film Company, and also the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation, is now on his way to America after a four months' stay in Europe. Pola Negri, the famous continental star, is coming over with him to make her first American production for Paramount.

Louis Auerbach, of Export & Import, has just received a cablegram from Blumenthal advising him of the purchase for United States, of a super-feature, a print of which he is bringing along.

What an exhibitor pays for a picture counts a lot when he sits down to give his opinion, judging from the statements that have poured into this department from the theatre owners. And the criticisms should be viewed from that view.

"Go to the Movies" week in Minneapolis and adjacent territory proved a humdinger for State rights exchangemen in that territory. Some recorded the biggest week in the history of the business there. The campaign was cleverly exploited locally and went over strong.

Arrow Film Corporation, in pushing "Arrow Month" (September), is cooperating with the local exchangemen and getting out a line of accessories that are proving good pullers.

Abe Warner of Warner Brothers left this week for the Warner studios on the Coast, where he will confer with his brothers, Sam and Jack, relative to production plans for the coming season. Elsewhere in this section appears Warners Brothers' announcement that they will release 18 productions in 1922-23.

Joe Brandt Finds State Right Boom

Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, this week completed a trip westward which consumed an entire month, arriving at the West Coast production centre where C. B. C.'s feature and short program releases are being made.

Mr. Brandt left the New York office a month ago with the intention of so prolonging his trip westward as to give him an opportunity of stopping over enroute at all the principal cities and discussing there with exchangemen, exhibitors, and other members of the industry, just what the Fall outlook is and what are its real needs.

All this with the purpose in view of going through to the Coast and spending sufficient time there to go over in detail with Harry Cohn, in charge of C. B. C.'s entire production forces, the results of his observations and applying them to future production.

Mr. Brandt found in almost every city he visited a marked optimism, and, according to word received from him, all branches of the industry—producers, exchangemen, exhibitors, trade paper men—seem to feel that the coming season will be one of the biggest and most successful for some time past. Apparently the tide has turned, he says, to so marked a degree that big plans are afoot for this season, buyers are lining up big independent product—and exhibitors seem to be convinced to a greater degree than ever before that it is to their advantage to leave a sufficient number of open dates for the booking of big independent product.

Throughout the Middlewest he reports an ever-present need for two-reel comedies, but adds that standards in these are growing ever higher and that buyers are demanding "class"—good stories, continuity, sets, players with real popularity, and good direction. The day of the comedy "when anything is funny" is definitely past, he says. Buyers convinced him that the same thought must be given to production of comedies and other short releases as to real features.

Big independent productions are in demand, he says, and he had proved to him one of the things he set out to substantiate—namely, that melodramas are wanted. In Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Milwaukee, all the cities he visited, in fact, he found that it was the melodramas with titles with a real box-office pull, that were cleaning up—"Ten Nights In a Barroom," "Why Girls Leave Home," "Where Is My Wandering Boy" and that for this reason interest was high in "More To Be Pitied" and in the other of C. B. C.'s "Six Box Office Winners." He met the highest praise everywhere for this feature.

He also found a great demand for good single reels along novel lines and these, too, must be of a high-class calibre. In fact, the entire tone of the independent field is such, he found, as to warrant the highest optimism, because it is ever more toward the basis that only the best "goes" and for that reason is winning the co-operation of the best exhibitors.

He secured several specific hints on production, distribution, and exploitation, and, on the coast is now engaged in using them in a practical way in the production Hallroom Boys Comedies, the popular C. B. C. two-reelers, and on "Only a Shopgirl," the second of C. B. C.'s feature series.

'Changemen Plugging "Sure-Fire Flint"

The manner in which C. C. Burr intends exploiting Johnny Hines' latest, "Sure-Fire Flint," was disclosed this week when it was announced in the Affiliated offices that all exchanges who had contracted to distribute "Sure-Fire Flint" had arranged to engage special exploitation men.

This arrangement of special exploitation experts to devote their time exclusively towards the selling of the picture to the public was specifically agreed to because of the wealth of exploitation possibilities that "Sure-Fire Flint" possesses, and also because of the many novelty tie-ups that Burr is putting out for exhibitor distribution. These include 14-inch Walking Dolls, which bear the imprint: "Ima Walker says take a hint and see Johnny Hines in 'Sure-Fire Flint;'" feather jacks, which explode when hurled to the ground; specially prepared matches and match-boxes also bearing suitable imprint.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

Associated Exhibitors

MARRY THE POOR GIRL. About what one would expect from the DeHavens. Not a bad light comedy. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

F. B. O.

FIRST WOMAN. Title misleading, although a very good picture, pleased 90 per cent. Star well liked here. Advertising; sixes, threes, one sheets, slide. Patronage; usual. Attendance, fair. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

GAY AND DEVILISH. Doris May very good, also supporting cast. Photography good. Story full of laughter. Advertising; sixes, threes, ones, slide. Patronage; usual. Attendance; good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre Baltimore, Maryland.

First National

GOLDEN SNARE. One of the best Curwoods, although not as good as "River's End." Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

HAIL THE WOMAN. A film classic in every particular. Attendance excellent. Patrons pleased. Advertising, mailing list, ones and threes. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, as above. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MY BOY. Patrons liked this one and it pleased 100 per cent. Advertising, newspaper, billboard, herald. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. H. L. Bennett, Victoria Theatre, Parsons, West Virginia.

MY LADY FRIENDS. Very good comedy drama, light in construction, but that's just what you want for hot weather. Advertising, usual posters. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

ONE CLEAR CALL. Seven reels of finest entertainment released for some time. Stahl has produced another excellent feature in this one, and while Milton Sills did his part fine, H. B. Walthall and Irene Rich must have credit for some of the best work they ever did. First National is sure giving us some fine ones and it will help bring back some absentee patrons. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

PEACEFUL VALLEY. Bear down on this one, boys, for it's there from the first sub-title till the last fade-out. It pleased them and played to best business in last six weeks. Consider it best picture Ray has made for First National. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. This comedy is good in spots; the "Julius Caesar" incident is very funny and some of the titles are laugh getters. The producers are billing this one a special. My advice to exhibitors, not to do this, the picture is not sufficiently good to stand up under increased exploitation. It can be sold as average Talmadge comedy. Advertising, usual. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THE ROSARY. A picture that should please both Protestant and Catholic. Productions of this nature are healthy for the industry. Advertising, extra. Patronage, better class. Attendance, extra good. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

R. S. V. P. Rather weak effort on Ray's part, but will please Ray fans. Merely a good program picture. Advertising, lobby, newspaper. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fairly good. L. O. Hoover, reported at Paris Theatre, Santa Fe, New Mexico, while Mr. Hoover of Roundup, Montana, is on a trip.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. If theatre patrons would not like this one I would feel like going out of the business. It's human. Advertising, extra. Patronage, better class. Attendance, fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Fox

CHASING THE MOON. Not as good as some of the other Tom Mix pictures, but has lots of fun and action. Our people seem to like Mix and come regardless of the picture. Support is good and picture pleases those who like Mix. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. This is an excellent picture but hardly worth the price asked for it. Where the cost comes in, in making such a picture, is more than we can see. Advertising, posters, mail, newspapers. Patronage, very best. Attendance, good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

FIGHTING STREAK. A good one. Book it. Tom Mix will pull them in. Mix always liked here. Not as good as "Rough Diamond." Advertising, threes, ones, slide, photos. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

LADY FROM LONGACRE. Russell gets back into action in this. Points of mystery kept them guessing. Good cast. Advertising, ones, cards, slide, monthly program. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

LAST TRAIL. Believe me, a good one; drew better than any other I've shown for a week. Advertising, ones, cards and photos. Patronage, general. Attendance, extra good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

MOUNTAIN WOMAN. Good program picture. Advertising, lobby and daily paper. Attendance, fair. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

NIGHT HORSEMEN. Another Mix bet. Play it. Patronage, fair. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

ROUGH SHOD. The title of this should be, "He gave me violets." Charley makes a real dashing hero and two or three times almost gets ungentlemanly rough. He is not the old "Buck" Jones any more. Picture is average good Western. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

SHAME. All reported a splendid picture; it will please any class of audience. Advertising, ones, photos, three sheet. Patronage, general. Attendance, good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

SKY HIGH. Have seen better Mix's, but the scenery in this is well worth the price of admission, and if you will play up the wonderful scenery and dangerous feats I see no reason why you can't cash in on this, and please your patrons 100 per cent. to boot. It will get the money, so go to it. Advertising, ones, threes, mailing list. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

STAGE ROMANCE. Not half as good as Wm. Farnum's "Perjury." Here he's all right in the first half of the picture but the latter part seems to fall down quite a little. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

THUNDERCLAP. The most thrilling picture we have shown in many a month. Pleased everyone. Boost it big. It is worth it. Advertising, posters. Patronage, rural. Attendance, good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewiston, Ohio.

TRAILIN'. Poorest Mix in months. Crude and jumpy. Advertising, newspapers, heralds, ones, twos and threes, photos. Patronage, general. Attendance, rotten. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

VIRGIN PARADISE. Some exhibitors say this picture is no good, but it stood two days and pleased 90 per cent. The humor is A-1. Advertising, ones, sixes, slides and heralds. Patronage, small town. Attendance, excellent. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

WESTERN SPEED. A good one. Book it and advertise as you never have done before; you will clean up. Wish I could play Jones six days a week. Advertising, six, three, ones, photos. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

Goldwyn

DUST FLOWER. A better picture and a different kind of one than you would think from the title. They will go out telling you, as they did me, "fine picture." Cast well selected; Claude Gillingwater is very good. Chas H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

GLORIOUS FOOL. Very good story; Miss Chadwick and Richard Dix are both liked very much. Pleased 100 per cent. Advertising, lobby, billboard. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

PRISONERS OF LOVE. Betty Compson is good in this picture; a rather sad picture, but pleased 75 per cent. Advertising, posters, slide, newspapers. Patronage, better class. Attendance, fair. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THEODORA. We have shown practically all the big ones but this far outshines them all. If one has an eye for art, beauty, wonder things, this has them all. Most elaborate film ever made or ever shown, in the opinion of people here. You cannot advertise it too highly. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

WATCH YOUR STEP. Very clever comedy. Pleased well. Did not draw on account of weather. Advertising, lobby, newspaper, billboards. Patronage, mixed. Attendance poor. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

FOOLISH MONTE CARLO. The poorest piece of junk in a long time. Don't let them sell it to you at any price. Have used three of the entertainment out of ten, and if the other seven are like these, I'll be glad when it's all over. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

Hodkinson

FRENCH HEELS. Very good. Patrons well satisfied. Exhibitors can't go wrong on playing this feature. Advertising, regular, newspaper, billboards. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. John F. Carey, Liberty Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

Metro

FASCINATION. Not any better than "Peacock Alley." It takes a good one to surpass "Peacock," but "Fascination" will hold your audience from start to finish, and it is worthy of an increased admission. Played big rain storm of over seven inches of rain. Advertising, cut-outs, posters, street bally-hoo and newspapers. Patronage, best. Attendance, poor. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

FOURTEENTH LOVER. Corking good vehicle for Dana, and she puts a lot into it. A good hot weather comedy drama. Nothing to bend the intellect or strain the emotions. Should please any audience anywhere. Advertising; posters, newspapers, slide, lobby, etc. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good for hot day. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre, Redding, California.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

September! Show You Month! It's here.

Now's the time to get together all possible exploitation to sell the idea of going to the movies.

Now's the time to get together the crowd—in your theatre.

That means GET GOOD SHOWS together so that the folks will be glad to come again and again.

And THAT means—now's the time to tell every exhibitor about the good pictures—here.. And about the bad pictures—here.

"Show You Month" starts "Get-Together Year." Exhibitors have always been great factors in helping other people—War Relief work, civic betterment, and so on. NOW, come on, all, and help each other to the finest year's profits ever. You are the boys who can do it. VAN

I CAN'T EXPLAIN. Personally talking, I consider this pretty good, but at the same time its a weak play. It has certain novel twists, but lacks the human touches necessary to be a sure-fire success. Its appeal is to the sophisticated. Think it will please the average fan. It has good directing coupled with trig acting. We find Metro very good. Advertising; newspaper and billboards. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

POLLY WITH A PAST. Very good comedy drama. Entertainment value 90 per cent. No unfavorable comments. Advertising; newspaper and lobby. Patronage; general. Attendance; poor. Smith & Carroll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. Good Reid feature, enjoyed by all fans. Advertising; newspaper, billboards. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Stanley N. Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. This has a real, all-star cast which will get by alone; that is not all it has; it has a good story and the acting is good. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. Screen's two greatest lovers, Valentino and Swanson. It gets the women. Originally made as a Swanson picture, with Valentino in supporting cast. Did not go over as good as "The Sheik" but it cost us the same price. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

THE CRIMSON CHALLENGE. Picture pleased pretty well, as it was a Saturday exhibit. Full of pistols, fast riding, and where they like westerns, I see no reason for its not being well liked. Exploit Dorothy Dalton as playing a "different role." Advertising, usual. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DON'T TELL EVERYTHING. Stars drew very good. Owing to warm wave and street exposition, picture only a program picture, but nevertheless it pleased and that is half the battle. Might have made a dollar for myself had the price been right. Even though the picture is quite old I had to pay good money for it, but it's the same story they tell me, I'll make it up on the next one, etc. Advertising, street, heralds, window, newspaper. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, better than usual. J. S. Kallet, Strand Theatre, Rome, New York.

DON'T TELL EVERYTHING. I did not see this one, but did not have any complaint. Advertising, lobby, heralds, one sheets. Patronage, best. Attendance, poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

DUCKS AND DRAKES. Very light comedy drama, so light, in fact, I think most of my patrons considered it bunk. Very weak story and the star does not go over in my town. Advertising, ones, threes, sixes, newspaper, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

EVERYTHING FOR SALE. Have shown most of MacAvoy's and this is one of the best. Scenery and settings very good. A very delightful play. Play this Realart stuff on Wednesdays and most always have a good house. None of it is for the Rufneck. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

EYES OF THE MUMMY. The foreign actors are terrible. Don't see how Paramount has nerve enough to put their trade mark on this class of picture. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, poor. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

FIND THE WOMAN. Good mystery picture with a cast which includes Norman Kerry and Harrison Ford. Well staged and production up to Paramount standard. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK. Accepted as good entertainment but nothing to rave about. Photography, direction, etc., good. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

HUSH MONEY. Fair picture; a little better than Brady's average. Have never been able to see much ot this star. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; put on bargain night at 5 and 10 cents, packed house. A. L. Middleton. Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. Good picture. Well liked. Advertising, newspaper. Patronage, general. Attendance, good. Stanley N. Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. Has story value, star value and production value. Three stars, Dalton, Sills and Hawley. A first rate picture, well up to the standards of Melford's productions. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. Just a regular feature sold as a special. Second day's business just half of first day. Advertising, mailing list, programs, extra paper. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair; but disappointed. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. Where do they get the "special" stuff? The picture is not as good as the regular Reid pictures, yet they ask a special price. Advertising, extra. Patronage, better class. Attendance, fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Selznick

CLAY DOLLARS. Eugene O'Brien not liked very well here but this surely did surprise the kickers. A really, interesting story with the usual country town elements. Enough humor to hold it above average. Advertising, usual ones, and slide. Patronage, small manufacturing town. Attendance, fair. M. V. Cousins, Peoples Theatre, Pineland, Texas.

PLEASURE SEEKERS. A very good picture. Elaine Hammerstein does not draw for us in this town but personally I like her pictures. Advertising, newspapers, billboards. Patronage, better class. Attendance, poor. King .Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

REPORTED MISSING. Certainly this is the best thing Owen Moore ever did. The comedy by the big fellow was simply a scream. We know of no better picture than this one. Best of all, we bought it right and made money. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

REPORTED MISSING. The sort of picture that makes you forget there is such a thing as time A shrapnel shell of high explosive comedy, loaded with laughs and

A Demon for Work

C. Wesley Jennings is with the highly reputed Southern Amusement Company, Victoria, Virginia. He's with this department, heart and soul. How does he show it? BY SAYING "YOU MAY SEND ME ABOUT FIFTY REPORT CARDS." Next!—

vertising, sixes, threes, ones, photos, heralds, window cards. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. G. D. Hughes, Liberty Theatre, Heavener, Oklahoma.

United Artists

THE IRON TRAIL. Better look this one over before you show it to your patrons; it failed to please here and after looking at it I was bound to say it's tiresome and the poorest Rex Beach picture I ever saw. It's no special; if you buy it cheap, run it. Advertising, special. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, very poor second day. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. It takes us all a long time to find out if certain stars get us any money or not, and I am now convinced that Mary is all caught up, and if I gave away goldfish with each ticket I could not do business with Pickford. Not an audience picture. Advertising, billboards, newspaper, window. Patronage, a few of better class. Attendance, poor. J. S. Kallet, Strand Theatre, Rome, New York.

RULING PASSION. George Arliss a real actor. Story good. Our patrons enjoyed it and told us so. Doris Kenyon female lead. On seven reels. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

THREE MUSKETEERS. High class and amusing farce, extremely well done. Doug deserves credit. But it's held down by being ancient stuff. Public demands 1922 subjects. Only the highbrows came. Advertising, fifty ones, ten threes, two sixes, 1,500 heralds, two newspapers. Attendance, extremely poor. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Bellville, Kansas.

WAY DOWN EAST. A splendid audience picture, very well done. Has wide appeal. Advertising, sixes, threes, ones, 1,500 heralds. two newspapers. Attendance, poor; too hot. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Bellville, Kansas.

Universal

CONFLICT. A very fine picture that sure aught to please everywhere. Advertising; small town. Patronage; good. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

DANGEROUS LITTLE DEMON. Very pretty picture that will please everyone. Everybody seemed to enjoy this picture and asked for more of Marie Prevost subjects. Universal improving right along on their subjects and I do hope they will not improve on the rentals. Advertising; ones, mailing list. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

DR. JIM. Say boy, this was a great picture, but why does a star have to get in the limelight at the height of his career when we are pulling so hard for clean pictures. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

FALSE KISSES. Take my advice and lay off. Absolutely rotten. I have never seen her in a good picture. Probably she would make good if Universal would give her a good story. Advertising; ones, slide, photos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

NO WOMAN KNOWS. A very fair picture, but did not go over in this town. I can't see where they get this special stuff on a picture of this kind. I lost plenty of money on it, but it was not all the fault of the picture. Farmers were all making hay and had no time for the movies. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very rotten. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

OUT OF THE SILENT NORTH. Good story of the north that pleased 90%. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

OUT OF THE SILENT NORTH. A good picture with beautiful snow scenes. It will please any audience and can be bought at the right price. Advertising; billboard and newspaper. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. John A. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

THE ROWDY. Fine show. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

SECOND HAND ROSE. Gladys Walton, the star, was liked by all. Advertising; lobby, newspaper, handbills and slide. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fine. Thomas Clark, Electric Theatre, Maryville, Missouri.

THE SCRAPPER. Some action and a good picture of this kind. Attendance; good. H. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

THE SCRAPPER. Better than lots of super-specials I have run and pleased 100%. Made money because the price was right. You will always get a clean deal and good service from Universal. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

TRACKED TO EARTH. A very good western program picture. The photography excellent and our patrons were all satisfied. Advertising; three sheets. Patronage; rural. Attendance; good. D. B. Rankin, Cooperative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

THE TRAP. Lon Chaney's acting and scenery and photography good, but type of story is gruesome and is not one which your patrons will thank you for having shown them. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin. thrills. Seven reels of chain lightning. Ad-

Comedies

MACK SENNETT COMEDIES (Paramount). "His Last False Step," "Speak Easy." Our first Mack Sennetts and the last if they are all like these. Nothing to them, but two reels of rough house. Patronage; rural. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

MY WIFE'S RELATIONS (First National). Buster Keaton has scored again. This is as good as he ever did. He always pleases here. It seems he always has a new angle to the plots and stunts in his comedies. People thoroughly enjoyed it. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

NEVER WEAKEN (A. P.). Fair comedy, not by any means Lloyds best. Got the laugh and people satisfied. Advertising; paper. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

THE PLAYHOUSE (First Nat'l). This Keaton comedy is pretty good, especially the second reel. The trick photography in the first reel is no longer a novelty. As a whole, though, the comedy will please. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SHOULD WATCHMEN SLEEP (Universal). This one starts off with a laugh, ends with a laugh, and has many laughs in between. Will please most audiences. Advertising; paper, newspapers. Harold Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

Short Subjects

LEATHER PUSHERS (Universal). Best short reel subjects I have ever run. You make no mistake in booking this series. Attendance; good. Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

Reports Not Used?

If you don't see your reports as soon after you send them as you think you should, please remember these pages try to give an even break to all pictures, sections of the country, producers and exhibitors. Sometimes they are ready for press before your tips arrive; sometimes reports older in time of arrival must be used up. Anyhow, every honest comment coming in IS USED.

THE MILKY WAY (Ford Ed. Wkly). Almost as good as Chas. Ray. Clean and wholesome. Advertising; newspaper and posters. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. Arthur G. Pearson, Melrose Auditorium, Melrose, Massachusetts.

MOVIE CHATS (Urban). Every exhibitor will create a regular patronage on the night "movie chats" are used. They're excellent. Patronage; general. Attendance; increasing when "movie chats" are used. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

State Rights

HERO STUFF (Standard). Picture in fair shape, end of third reel somewhat cut. As a whole the picture is good. Pleased all, something different. They went out talking about it. Lots of good clean comedy in it. Run it. Patronage; middle class. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

JUDGMENT (Rialto). Well acted German production, depiciting decadent England of the fourteenth century. Not popular and lost us money. Advertising; more than usual. Patronage; best. Attendance; poor. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

THE PARISH PRIEST (Garfield). A wonderful production. Will go over in any community theatre. Advertising; regular newspaper. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. John F. Carey, Liberty Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

SCHOOL DAYS (Warner Bros.). A sure money getter. Excellent matinee, standing room only, something unusual in this town in summer. Advertising; regular newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; excellent. J. F. Carey, Liberty Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

SO THIS IS ARIZONA (W. M. Smith). A good western that ought to please anywhere. Advertising; poster and press. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall Theatre, Grand Gorge, New York.

TAKING CHANCES (Enterprise). Good. Richard Talmadge has some good stunts. This picture will please. Business only fair. Star not known. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; fair. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM (Arrow). I starved to death with this one at ten cents admission, but I ran it after opposition house who turned them away. Picture very good. Advertising; sixes, threes, ones, lobby display, window cards. Patronage; usual. Attendance; poor. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

THINGS MEN DO (Schlesinger Film). This was one of the worst pictures we ever played. Don't book it at any price. It disappointed everyone. Advertising; billboards and newspapers. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. J. S. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Blood and Sand

(Rodolph Valentino—Paramount—7,235 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture has box office advantages that need no recounting, and at the same time is an artistic and entertaining achievement.

N.—Valentino, Ibanez, title and production value can not conceivably but carry the picture to an enormous success throughout the country.

T. R.—A sure-fire box office asset.

F. D.—Fine entertainment and undoubtedly a big box office find.

E. H.—It is the type and character of a picture that practically takes the gamble out of the business. It offers as much assurance of being a great success, everywhere that it is shown, as any picture ever published. It places Fred Niblo in the very foreground of the best directors of the screen.

Her Gilded Cage

(Gloria Swanson—Paramount—6,249 feet)

M. P. W.—High entertainment value.

E. H.—Will please a lot of people.

T. D.—Too much money expended for elaborate production of poor story.

N.—Subtract the gorgeous sets and costumes from this picture and it wouldn't carry a single item of interest.

T. R.—Passable entertainment.

What's Wrong With the Women?

(All-star Cast—Equity—6 reels)

M. P. W.—State Right offering that will make box offices jingle with record-breaking grosses.

T. R.—Ought to find a welcome on any screen in the land.

N.—The picture looks to us like a knockout.

E. H.—Sufficient number of people are interested in the question asked by the title of this picture to make it an attraction, even if Daniel Carson Goodman, had produced it with less merit and with a cast less favorably known.

F. D.—An up-to-date story with situations that will appeal to many.

Forget-Me-Not

(Feature Cast—Metro—6 reels)

M. P. W.—This Metro presentation, deeply tinged with pathos, takes rank as one of the foremost productions of its kind.

N.—An exceptionally human interest story. Nothing has been forgotten in emphasizing the heart touch.

F. D.—Sure fire appeal for those who like human interest stories.

T. R.—Will surely win equal favor with old and young It is intensely human.

E. H.—Here is one of the best entertainment features offered to exhibitors in a long time.

The Bonded Woman

(Betty Compson—Paramount—7,178 feet.)

M. P. W.—Marine melodrama that has all the elements of a popular success.

F. D.—Betty Compson has interesting sea story in latest production.

T. R.—This production should please in a locality where romance and sentimentality hold sway.

E. H.—This is a strong, virile story of the sea containing sufficient love interest and suspense, human appeal and thrills to make it a pleasing attraction, and cause spectators to overlook the illogical sequences.

N.—Will be liked for its romance and sea stuff.

Fools First

(Featured Cast—First National—5,773 feet)

M. P. W.—A thrill in every foot of film holds the audience spellbound.

E. H.—This is a straight crook melodrama, rather gruesome in places, but with a wealth of incident that holds the attention all the way through.

F. D.—The best entertainment of the kind so far this year.

T. R.—A picture that is likely to please all admirers of crook melodrama.

N.— Marshall Neilan has scored again. He has given to screen literature another masterplay. "Fools First" is a page from life itself.

"East Is West"

Stage Success Makes Picture Having Enormous Entertainment Value—First National Release.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

"East Is West," as a play, was a prodigious success. "East Is West" in film form should equal if not exceed the stage version in popularity. The picture has everything the play had, and a little bit more. It is 200 horse-power audience appeal, for any type of theatre, anywhere, the bigger the better.

It is not at all surprising that "East Is West" is the unusually fine screen entertainment it is. Nor has such audience appeal. The original furnished material that, on the face of it, could be translated into a sure-fire film success, providing it received intelligent, showmanlike treatment. This the producers of the picture have most certainly done, and a little bit more. The result is an artistic achievement that has every possible element for unusually wide popularity.

Beginning with Frances Marion's scenario, down through each step in the production, embracing Sidney Franklin's direction, capable editing and titling, extraordinarily fine performances by the star and supporting cast, and artistic photography by Antonio Gaudie, there has been brought to bear a technical ability and keen perception of showmanship that makes "East Is West" easily one of the outstanding pictures of a year marked by many big box office successes.

Constance Talmadge is delightful as Ming Toy, realizing every possibility, latent or obvious, that the unusually rich role contains. For sheer sparkle she exceeds anything she has done before in comedy dramatic work, and a large percentage of the picture's wide appeal is derived from her winsome personality and the manner in which she draws the character of the indominable little Chinese girl who finally turns out to be an American. One of the finest character performances ever reflected on a screen is contributed by Warner Oland in the extremely difficult role of Charlie Yong, the "50-50 American-Chinaman." He is superb. His work leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. The other members of the cast are all excellent, but E. A. Burns deserves special mention for a sincere, natural performance that is gratifyingly unactorish.

It could be possible to go on and on picking out the high spots of the production and comment on them at the great length they deserve, or to reiterate over and over again the tremendous audience appeal in the picture as a whole. But it can be summed up in one phrase that possibly will suffice.

"East Is West" is a clean-up.

Ming Toy, oldest of the family of Hop Toy's numerous children, shows a preference for the white man's God. When the story opens she is seen in a Chinese shoe shop, where the owner finds it impossible to fit her feet. Ming Toy, in a fit of resentment against Chinese custom, hurls the celestial shoes right and left and runs into the street, where she meets Billy Benson, an American. Returning to her home she tries to shield the children from punishment for a prank they have performed and Hop Toy, in a rage, tells her she shall be sold at auction on the Love Boat. Ming Toy runs to the Christian Mission to save herself, but is taken away by her father. While she is on the auction block on the Love Boat Benson saves the girl and sends her to America with Lo Sang Kee.

In San Francisco's Chinatown Ming Toy, kneeling before a Chinese joss, prays to the white man's God to send Billy Benson to save her from being married to Charley Yong, a "fifty-fifty" Chinaman, so-called because he dresses as a white man and at heart is a celestial. Charley Yong calls for his bride. Ming Toy repulses him. He threatens to kill her kindly protector, Lo Sang Kee, unless she weds him and, as an act of self-sacrifice she consents.

Then Billy Benson appears, Ming Toy tells him her tragic story, and he outwits Charley Yong by spiriting Ming Toy out of Chinatown to the home of his parents. There he declares his love to Ming Toy. The Chinese girl is enraptured but realizes that "East is East and West is West" and decides to return to Chinatown. Then Charley Yong and a band of Chinese gangsters visit the house to kidnap her. Charley Yong is on the point of shooting Benson when Ming Toy, to save Benson, tells the Chinaman she will go with him. At this point Lo Sang Kee appears with Hop Toy, who confesses that Ming Toy is an American child who had been stolen from her parents. American missionaries in China, when she was an infant. Charley Yong thereupon decides that he doesn't want a white wife and Billie Benson takes Ming Toy into his arms.

Exploitation Angles: With Miss Talmadge in one of the best plays ever given her, cleaning up should be merely a matter of making known your offering. Use every possible angle, with newspaper work, window street stunts and lobby displays, with the Chinese atmosphere. Play it all over the place, and don't stop until you feel that the last woman and child knows all about it.

Novel Comedy Effects the Outstanding Feature of F. B. O. Picture Starring Doris May

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Out-of-the-ordinary comedy effects mark this Doris May feature as one that is especially good where the star is popular. It is a consistent frame for her talents, and has some extreme touches quite in keeping with the untrammeled spirits of the popular young comedienne. It has plenty of snap and individuality and should score high.

The scenes in the art shop are the rare achievement of the piece. Here are some exceptionally clever farcical effects in connection with bringing the pictures to life and reducing animated figures to pictures. The idea, the directing and the performance successfully create a series of surprises that will meet with hilarious receptions from the public.

Doris May has a nonsensical part to which she responds with her usual vivacity. In close attendance to her, as the he-flapper, is Hallam Cooley, splendidly cast and giving an amusing performance. Her fat and fond papa is played by Otis Harlan with charming naivete. Good judgment has been shown in selecting the entire cast.

Length, 4,580 Feet.

THE STORY

Barbara Jackson wearing the chauffeur's uniform is driving her father's car. She picks up a passenger who believes he is getting into a public conveyance, and learns that he is bent upon robbing Bob Everett, collector of famous paintings and rival of her father. The robbers mistake her for a detective and force her to assist them in the theft. She alone is discovered by Everett after the robbery, but succeeds in winning him over for the time being. Meantime, her father buys the stolen picture from the robber and Everett and Barbara arrive in time to warn him that the agent is a thief. The agent leaves as they enter the father's house and find Everett's picture, but father has been too clever for the thief and has him trapped at the front gate. Barbara and Everett decide to fight their battles together from then on.

"Three Must-Get-Theres"

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

There are entirely too few satires and burlesques of big, popular pictures. For obvious reasons they present box office advantages of considerable value and if well done provide entertainment that is appreciated anywhere and of a sort that might be said to be the highest achievement in film farce fare.

The latest in this sparsely populated class is Max Linder's burlesque of the Doug Fairbanks' production "The Three Musketeers," under the slightly revamped title. The quality of burlesque comes under the head of broad, and the amusement it furnishes will undoubtedly promote anywhere the large volume of spontaneous laughter it did at each performance during its week's showing at the Strand Theatre, New York. The delicacy of the subtle satire the original might inspire may be lacking in the broad strokes with which this burlesque is painted but the picture nevertheless carries out its original intent in providing fun of a hearty, wholesome sort that will be appreciated with gusto. It is a real laugh-provoker.

Max Linder does some neat work in his imitation of Fairbanks. In drawing the caricature the French comedian exceeds anything he has ever done in his unusually long career on the screen. His buffoonery has an idea behind it, which makes it doubly funny. Comedy is much funnier when brains are used as well as acrobatic ability, which a few of the minor comedians fail to recognize. The star is assisted by a competent company that individually burlesque the famous personalities in Dumas well known story in genuine comedy style.

Linder adapted the "plot" of the piece and supplied in the boiled down version of Dumas tale a more connected story than is usual in farce pictures. This he directed himself and beside exerting his talents in arranging the comedy situations nas mounted the production with quite a show of magnificence. Thomas N. Mirand has injected his quota of the laughs in some cleverly written titles.

It should be said that "The Three Must-Get-Theres" will be a success even in theatres that have not as yet played "The Three Musketeers."

King Louis XIII.....Frank Cooke
The Queen.....Catherine Rankin
Connie .....Jobyna Ralston
Walrus .....Jack Richardson
Octopus ....Charles Metzetti
Porpoise .....Clarence Werpz

Dart-in-Again .....Max Linder

Scenario and Direction by Max Linder. Length, 3,800 Feet.

Dart-in-Again, son of a Gascon peasant, goes to Paris to win his fortune. His father presents him with the family sword, and tells him there are three things he must fight for—"breakfast, dinner and supper."

On the way he meets the "Man of Meung" and fights a duel, but loses. He rides on the capital astride his donkey, Jazbo. Arrived in Paris he meets the chief of "The Three Must-Get-Theres"—Walrus, Octopus and Porpoise. Within thirty minutes Dart-in-Again has half a dozen duel engagements "behind the cemetery." There is one eacn with Walrus, Octopus and Porpoise. As they are about to fight guards of the Duke of Rich-Lou surprise them. Dart-in-Again joins forces with "The Three Must-Get-Theres" and they come out victorious over the Duke's guards.

Dart-in-Again then meets Connie, seamstress to Queen Nannie, who tells him the Queen's honor is in peril, and that he must go to England and get from Bunkumin, the Queen's lover, a brooch the King had given to her and which she in turn had given as a love token to Bunkumin. Dart-in-Again calls Walrus, Octopus and Porpoise and together they outwit the Duke of Rich-Lou's pursuing guards who are aroused by field telephones and who pursue on motorcycles.

Dart-in-Again sees Bunkumin, gets the Queen's brooch and returns just in time to present it to Queen Nannie at a royal party the King is giving in the castle. On the return trip his steed is "doped" and Dart-in-Again just barely arrives in time. He is rescued by Connie from attacking guards of the Duke of Rich-Lou; joins in the frantic search for the brooch which he pretends to find and Queen Nannie is saved. As a reward by the King he is made a full member of "The Three Must-Get-Theres"; is wed to Connie, and receives permission to give a present to the Duke of Rich-Lou.

Color photography will have a new significance to you after seeing "The Light in the Dark." In this, First National has taken a peculiarly favorable theme to demonstrate the new process and the result is novelty, beauty and a fine strength. The colors are exquisitely defined and add greatly to the appeal.—M. K.

"That Son of a Sheik"

Christie Comedy Co. Inaugurates New Season With Clever Burlesque Farce—Educational Release.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

The Christie Film Company, justifiably noted producers of comedies, starts off its 1922-23 season with a bang. The initial releases are sure-fire laugh manufacturers. They are "wows," and the comedy is cleverly derived, and zippy. Needless to mention they hold high promise for what is to follow.

The first two of a series of twenty two-reel Christie productions to be distributed through Educational during the amusement year just commenced were shown for review and displayed a standard in laugh promotion that if adhered to will result in a succession of comedy productions that exhibitors will find extremely valuable in augmenting programs. Those viewed were "That Son of a Sheik" and "Pardon My Glove," the former, which is concerned in this comment, featuring Neal Burns and Viora Daniel.

"That Son of a Sheik" is a clever satire, burlesquing that currently large class of feature productions known as "sheik pictures," and pokes fun at the female element that flock to them in well known droves. It starts off with these two ideas and sticks to them to the finish, and consistently furnishes screen material that will tickle the risibilities of any class of patronage.

Also there is story value in the plot that embraces the love affair of the young lady who is a constant attendant at sheik pictures and her fiancee who won't make love to her with the ardor she witnesses in the Arabian stuff. He isn't very sheik. But he is clever enough to stage a sham sheik episode that teaches her the hot stuff over the burning sands is better on the screen than in real life. She's cured, marries him and settles down to love in a cottage instead of the tent she thought she desired. The director has staged a succession of comedy situations so that their many possibilities are realized to the full. And the title writer has supplied reading matter that furnishes a great many of the laughs. The cast works hard and successfully.

"Through the Storm"

It could have been possible to make the title of "Through the Storm" read in the plural number. The heroine passes through a couple of storms—thunder and emotional —and the latter is as severe as the meteorological. Convincing pictorial expression of an emotional storm experienced by a character necessarily calls for an amount of fine acting. In relation to this it can heartily be said that Edith Stockton, the star of the picture and the storm traveller comes through with flying colors, even if a little damp. Miss Stockton pulls the onlooker with her through her stress, so convincing is she. And she never resorts to broad methods.

The theme of "Through the Storm" is as familiar as moving pictures, but the dignified and entirely interesting treatment it receives in a fine production retains the spectator's attention. Also it is a theme that film devotees seem never to tire of. True it is that the long arm of coincidence is inched out a little, but it is done with justifiable dramatic license and could hardly be omitted in the exposition of this particular plot. Frequent new situations and incidents have been developed by the scenarist and director which at times gives the story a fresher appearance.

The director has exerted good taste in the arrangement of his interior sets, giving the picture a tone of gratifying, unobstrusive lavishness, and has included in his exteriors some scenes of remarkable beauty. The action that takes place within both of these is set at the right tempo for good dramatic development. Miss Stockton is supported by a cast that includes two subordinate players that are outstanding. One is the rich aunt. The othr is Mary Worth in a part that could well have sunk into oblivion but for Miss Worth's ability as an actress. Some day someone, in this oft stated wild scramble and frenzy for new talent, will give Miss Worth a role of the prominence her decided talents and personality deserve. Her work in the many bits she has played seems to call for it. Her work on the stage certainly does.

THE CAST

Helen Stone.....Edith Stockton
Dr. Bruce.....Louis Kimball
Lillian Atterbury.....Mary Worth
Jeremiah Blackstone.....Leanord Mudie
Sally.....Gladys Stockton
Samuel Drake.....James Cooley
Jack Henderson.....Regan Stewart

Story, Scenario and Direction Not Credited. Length, 5,905 Feet.

THE STORY

When lightning strikes a building where two girls, strangers to each other, have sought shelter and kills one of the girls, identities become mixed. Helen Stone is taken for an orphan who was on her way to make her home with a rich aunt whom she had never seen. Helen, bitterly humiliated by her father's disgrace and the knowledge that she has failed at making her own living, accepts the new personality.

She is affectionately received by the supposed aunt, and a young surgeon falls in love with her, but she is recognized as the forger's daughter by an architect, who uses his knowledge to blackmail her and force her to marry him. He is responsible for a shock that paralyzes the aunt. Helen is overcome by the knowledge that her dishonesty has led to such a misfortune, and is further tortured by the realization that the man she loves admires truth above all other virtues. Finally she confesses and wins forgiveness and love

Exploitation Angles: Play up Miss Stockton's fine emotional work and then sell on the main situation of the impersonation, asking what the reader would do in a similar circumstance, selling on the interest thus aroused.

"The Light in the Dark"

First National Picture of Wide Appeal Introduces Beautiful New Color Photography—Stars Hope Hampton

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In introducing the new process of color photography, Associated First National has made doubly secure an offering that from the standpoint of material and treatment promises to give wide satisfaction. "The Light in the Dark" strikes an appeal that goes deeper than the average. It has a penetrating theme and symbolic beauty that has been emphasized just enough to keep the picture within easy understanding of all, at the same time lending that something to the scenes that warrants calling it entertainment plus. For many reasons it should bring big returns to the box-office.

The success of the new color photography is striking. It has resulted in a perfection of outline that offsets the most frequent criticism attached to some other processes. It has been used only in scenes where it will be most effective and only in rich, soft shades chosen with the best of taste.

More pleasing because they are introduced at the psychological moment, the colors avoid any effect of being cheaply spectacular and seem to have an actual purpose in visualizing the story. They are first used in connection with the history of the Holy Grail. Here they are a beautiful aid in transporting the spectator back to the ancient and picturesque period of knighthood. Later, when Tennyson's story of Lancelot and Elaine is touched upon, the colors are again employed and to fine advantage.

Hope Hampton, who is the star in an excellent cast, has never been so favorably seen. She is charmingly equal to the demand for versatility and as Tennyson's famous heroine she makes a beautiful and lasting impression. Lon Chaney has the type of role in which he has proven exceptionally skillful. His is a real sympathetic contribution.

The picture has been well directed and realizes the art of trifling with sensationalism without being in any sense, cheap, and has already given substantial indication that it will meet with success.

THE STORY

Bessie MacGregor, coat girl in a popular cafe, is struck down by Mrs. Orrin's limousine one night. Mrs. Orrin desiring to atone, offers her a place in her beautiful home for a time, and Bessie falls in love with Mrs. Orrin's brother, J. Warburton, Ashe. He proves to be a trifler, however, and when she sees him making love to another woman, she leaves Mrs. Orrin's home in great unhappiness, leaving no word as to where she can be found. Meantime, Ashe has gone to England, and while on a hunting trip comes across an ancient cup. He is unable to forget Bessie and in response to an urgent message from his sister to help in tracing the girl, returns to New York. He is visited by a stranger in Tony Pantelli who demands money for Bessie. Ashe refuses as he distrusts the man. Tony knocks him senseless and steals the cup. A rapid drama follows, in which the cup is found, returned and stolen again and by reason of its peculiar characteristic of shining in the dark is regarded as a high treasure. It eventually reunites Bessie and Ashe.

"For Your Daughter's Sake"

Grace Darling the Star in J. W. Production With Nita Naldi and Virginia Valli.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Its pleasing array of feminine charm and talent is the leading merit of "For Your Daughter's Sake." Grace Darling, the star, is one of three screen favorites who appear, any one of whom is self-sufficient in holding the attention. The others are Nita Naldi and Virginia Valli. While the roles for these two latter are not prominent nor especially flattering the use of their names in exploitation should not be omitted because both of them have at present an assured drawing power.

The material limits the cast to some extent. There is not much novelty in the story of the girl who sells herself in marriage to the highest bidder, so as to repair the family fortune. Furthermore the directing is somewhat at fault. There is not sufficient action to make the performance vivid, but rather a tendency toward posing that seems to be deliberate, as all members of the cast show it.

Grace Darling has a sympathetic part which she handles with poise. Nita Naldi gives a glowing performance and excites interest as to what she could do if the part were more elastic. Virginia Valli, too, leaves a desire to see her in a less limited role. The most effective masculine characterization is that of James Cooley as the crook.

THE CAST

Needa Searles.....Grace Darling
Hugh Stanton.....Rod La Rocque
John Davis Warren.....Anders Randolf
"Mrs." James T. Barnes.....Nita Naldi
Frederick Searles.....Stephen Grattan
Mrs. Searles.....Alice Gordon
Ethel Searles.....Virginia Valli
Toppy Harlan.....James Cooley

Story and Scenario by Willard Mack.
Direction by Burton King.
Length, 4,963 Feet.

THE STORY

Needa agrees to marry her father's business rival so as to save the family bank roll. She is in love with Hugh Stanton, a young engineer, but gives him up for her father's sake and becomes the unhappy wife of John Davis Warren. After a time life becomes unbearable with him, because Warren is jealous of her past due to some false reports which Mrs. James Barnes, an adventuress, has given him. Warren, however, is still in love with her and calls for her at her home to take her back. She refuses, and he goes to Mrs. Barnes. Stanton is lured there by a false message just as Warren is shot, but an unexpected witness saves Stanton's reputation and with the death of Warren he is free to marry Needa.

Exploitation Angles: Play heavily on the names and finish off with the title. To get the names over a good scheme would be a voting contest between the three favored players, with the announcement that the result will be wired to the winner.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

The Story of a Man Who Was a Trifler and His Discovery of a Precious Treasure—the Cup With the Ancient Legend—Its Remarkable Effect Upon His Life and the Girl Who Loved Him.

Exploitation Angles: Play on the novelty of the production even above the excellence of the cast. Make a side appeal to those who love Tennyson's Idyls of the King and hook in to his work and to Thomas Mallory for a book angle. Don't slide this over with the usual advertising. Make them realize it is something higger and better.

"The Curse of Drink"

This One Revives Exciting Moments of "Nigger Heaven" and "Thriller" Days

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"The Curse of Drink" is just what you expect it to be—thrilling melodrama with a drunken dad and a bootlegging combination thrown in for good measure. It makes no pretense at being a "problem" picture—and it isn't. Neither does it aim to please the highbrows. It's just melodrama that recalls happy days when for a dime one could occupy a front seat up in "nigger heaven," cheer the good-looking hero, charming heroine and hiss the villain. And there is that rotund comedian one looked for so carefully in the old days. But it's melodrama and you get it in this one.

Bobby North is nobody's "daddy." He's in this business for what money he can make. He knows what the market wants and he's had his eyes wide open as to what the public flocked to see. And he has taken this picture that Export & Import Film Company, Inc., are presenting, but which Weber & North is State righting, and brought it up to the point where it is bound to please those who like melodrama and judging from what is transpiring within trade circles, the public is demanding such entertainment, for that class of pictures are by far in the majority. Revivals are common these days and with the bootlegger gag thrown in, the showman can do a lot of things with this picture. It's propaganda for nothing and nobody. It's a melodramatic picture with plenty of thrilling moments and a cast of names that should draw.

"The Curse of Drink" has a novelty twist that the alert showman will grab. There are a hundred one exploitation angles on this picture—and none of these need touch on the prohibition question in any way. There is a chase involving two trains that is the genuine thing. They didn't overlook a bet.

Harry Hoyt, who cleverly directed this one, didn't overlook a single melodramatic "come-on." He grabbed all the tricks, modernized them to the extent where any audience, delighting in the revival on the screen of sure-fires of years ago, is bound to be satisfied by this one. The stuff is there in every quantity, but mark well these words: it's distinctly a showman's picture.

The cast includes Harry T. Morey, who scores a distinct hit as the drunkard engineer. Edmund Breese hasn't much to do, but he's in the cast. Marguerite Clayton, as the heroine, is a success. Miriam Battista again registers big, grabbing every scene in which she appears. George Fawcett, Brinsley Shaw and the others work hard.

THE CAST

Bill Sanford.....Harry T. Morey

THE STORY

Ruth Sanford, a stenographer, is in love with her employer's son, Harry Rand. The latter's father opposes the match because of the fact that Ruth is the daughter of the village drunkard, a victim of modern bootlegging. In a squabble over Rand, the drunkard's child is rendered unconscious. Crazed by bootleg liquor, Sanford sets out to kill Rand. But a surprising turn in a situation that promised to bring unhappiness to two families brings about an understanding that results in the reconciliation of the two sweethearts, the reformation of Sanford, and the arrest of the bootlegging "ring."

"Dusk to Dawn"

Florence Vidor Shines in Double Role—Associated Exhibitors Release.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

Souls have and always will furnish interesting dramatic material for screen transference. Also dreams. Both seem to intrigue the average theatre patron, and it cannot be said that authors have neglected them. Such pure fiction may be introduced under the head of plausibility when the story or film is commenced with the direct question asked if you believe in metempsychosis or that dreams have reality. Everyone knows that the spectator, thirsting for entertainment, will answer "yes"—with the qualification that it might be for the time being only, or to help out the dramatist. Then proceeds fictional drama the quality of which is determined, of course, by the manner in which the soul or dream theme is treated.

Both dreams and souls come into the limelight in "Dusk to Dawn," when the onlooker is asked to accept the premise that the heroine's soul, habiting her body here in America in the daytime, jumps to India when sleep overcomes her and enters the mortal person of a young beggar girl. The American passing through a hectic story herself daily then nightly dreams the story of the Indian beggar maid. This business has enabled the producers to tell what is really two stories, both of them rather familiar in essence but given an entirely new appearance in the soul-dream treatment. And the manner in which they are worked out will firmly retain the interest of the spectator who has a penchant for such pictures, and they are legion. The lavishness of the mounting, showing good taste in the local scenes and a highly picturesque investiture in the incidents in India, is one of the strong points of appeal.

But for this Florence Vidor must receive the greater portion of the credit for holding the attention. In her performances of the two roles, the American and Indian girl, she exerts such a gratifying amount of technical ability in acting and displays such an ingratiating personality that you are led to accept in good faith the peculiarities of the story. She is assisted by a capable company in support, and the director has accomplished much in the staging of the production.

Marjorie Latham has never told anyone about her nightly dreams, in which she takes up the continuation of the life of Aziza, a beggar girl in India. To save her brother from imprisonment for forgery, Marjorie promises the bank's president to break up the affair between the president's son, Phillip, and Babette, a notorious dancer. She and Phillip fall in love, but she breaks their engagement when, in her dream, Aziza weds the Rajah.

Marjorie learns that her brother loved Babette. By a ruse she gets the evidence that clears him of guilt. At this time, in India, the Rajah is killed while lion hunting. His widow offers herself as a living sacrifice on his funeral pyre. Marjorie has fainted. The soul that was hers and Aziza's remains and restores life to Marjorie and freedom from a double life.

Interesting views from everywhere make up short subjects of value in the Urban Movie Chats and the Urban Popular Classics. A series of the "Classics" now being shown giving intimate views around New York City, will bring before New York citizens, themselves, many subjects of interest with which they are not cognizant, and give to the great masses outside New York interesting sidelights on the metropolis such as always prove entertaining in every section of the country.—T. "A Ring Tail Romance"

The comedy in this Educational release is for the most part mild and painstaking. It will be appreciated more for the value of the monkey's clever performance. It seems to indicate a not altogether practical use of a good-sized cast, as their efforts are scattered and not in every case contributory to the whole. The monkey is an unusually adept performer and his dramatic part in saving the child's life will surely come in for applause from the youngsters. The automobile accident raises another question and in its effect of seriousness may appear to some to be a false note when comedy is uppermost.—M. K.

"Ma and Pa"

The laughs in this number are mostly confined to situations and stunts typical of earlier Mack Sennett comedies. This does not mean that they are no longer funny as for instance the scenes of the burlesque on the stage melodrama. Here some of the old tricks are worked with hilarious results. The earlier part of the picture is crowded with familiar foolishness as for instance the career of a paperhanger depicted in a style that will amuse those who enjoy slapsticks. Considered as a whole the subject gives the impression that if one particular line had been followed instead of scattering the interest, the comedy would be more effective. Billy Bevan and Mildred June are featured. A First National release in two reels.—M. K.

"The Landlubber"

This is the best of the recent Paul Parrott single-reel comedies distributed by Pathe. There are several humorous situations which should bring laughs from any audience. The hero rescues an heiress from drowning, but has a hard time letting her know about it. Finally he starts to elope with her, but father has other views. All sorts of complications ensue and finally father and the other suitor are shanghaied as a crew for the hero's yacht. The life preserver stunt and the one with the mannikin are particularly clever.—C. S. S.

"Adventures of Roving Thomas"

This Urban Popular Classic takes the spectator on a sight-seeing tour around New York giving different views of the city and showing the inhabitants at work and play. One of the "shots" shows the inhabitants of the East Side congested district still staying in their homes while repairs of magnitude are going on—for instance the tearing down of whole fronts of their dwellings, leaving the occupants in full view from the street.—T. Little Stories on Big Pictures

MANY CRITICS believe that Sinclair Lewis's "FREE AIR" is just as big a story as his record - smashing "Main Street." It was one of the most popular stories ever run in the Saturday Evening Post, and the picture is a masterpiece of good, wholesome out-of-doors entertainment—an ideal picture for hot weather showing.

From the moment the shiny new roadster is rolled off a flat car in the St. Paul railroad yards, the action never slows up a second. Straight across the Northwest it flies, with Milt Daggett's weird "bug" in hot pursuit, and amid the vicissitudes of mud-holes and road bandits, there develops one of the most appealing love stories of the screen.

Awe-inspiring shots of action in Glacier Park vie with a rattling good yarn in holding the beholders' attention.

You won't have to exaggerate the aucience-appeal of "FREE AIR." It blazes its own trail of popularity. "A thoroughly enjoyably comedy-drama," says the Exhibitors' Herald, "that makes excellent hot weather entertainment."

"Because it is a very good picture," declares the Moving Picture World, "and affords exceptional chances for exploitation, 'FREE AIR' offers double security to the buyer."

"The Valley of Silent Men"

Curwood Story of Mounted Police, Made by Cosmopolitan, Is Stirring and Effective Melodrama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Mystery, strong dramatic situations, straightforwardness of plot and unusually effective scenes of snow-clad mountains, are the outstanding points of the Cosmopolitan production, "The Valley of Silent Men," distributed by Paramount. It is based on a James Oliver Curwood story and has the virility and red-bloodedness characteristic of this author's work.

Because there have been so many stories dealing with the Northwest Mounted Police, you are liable to be prejudiced in the beginning, but you soon find that the picture which is melodramatic, has a real theme; almost immediately you are faced with a dramatic situation which involves a mystery. With this holding you, you are made aware of the big theme of the picture; that is the assumption of the crime by a member of the force who believes he has been mortally wounded, only to find that he will live and must free himself from this terrible situation. There is a girl who also knows he is innocent and wants to save him, this begins to spell romance. Then there is the strong situation where the hero's best friend has to find and arrest him for murder, though believing him innocent.

The working out of the story holds the interest throughout, though the coincidence of the three vital characters meeting in the cabin is its weakest point. There are several situations that will grip the spectator.

As was to be expected from Frank Borzage, the direction is excellent; he has struck closely to the main theme without running in any diverting outside matter, and has held the suspense and mystery well. Aiding the straight-forward handling of the story is an unusually small cast, only one woman and about seven men appear in the picture, even in minor roles, and there is an entire absence of aggregations of people or even a person who is not vital to the theme. This small cast is unusually well-selected and every member does excellent work, fitting right into their roles.

Though some may feel that she dresses too picturesquely for the surroundings on the outpost of civilization, Alma Rubens, who is featured, gives a fine performance as the only feminine character. Particularly effective is her repressed work when she finds that despite her vigilence a third murder has been committed under circumstances which point to her. Lew Cody, better known for his work as a heavy, also proves excellent in a straight heroic role.

Particularly striking are the scenes and action on the sides and summit of snow-covered mountains. Not only are they scenically beautiful, but are backgrounds for effective and dramatic work. You feel that the struggle to cross the glacier and the fall of the two leading characters on opposite sides, is very real.

While the production will undoubtedly appeal to Curwood fans and admirers of stories of the Mounted Police and Far North, it should also prove a good box-office attraction in any type of house.

THE CAST

Marette Radison.....Alma Rubens
Corporal Kent.....Lew Cody
O'Connor.....Joseph King
Pierre Radison.....Mario Majeroni

Length, 6,491 Feet

THE STORY

Corporal Kent of the Mounted, wounded in discharge of his duty, and believing he will die, confesses the guilt for a mysterious murder to pay a debt of gratitude. About this time a girl appears and installs herself in the inspector's home. She knows who has committed the murder. Kent recovers and is arrested. She daringly effects his rescue, and hides him over night in the inspector's home. In the morning the inspector is found to have been strangled with a rope of woman's hair, as were two others before him. Realizing their love for each other, the girl and Kent flee. Attempting to reach "The Valley of Silent Men" by crossing a glacier in winter, the rope breaks and they are separated, but Kent finally wanders into a cabin in which he finds the girl and Pierre Radison. Radison reveals the fact that he is the girl's father and has killed the three men in revenge for their having murdered his wife many years before. O'Connor, sent to "get" Kent, his best friend, arrives in time to hear the confession. Radison dies, and Kent and the girl find happiness.

Exploitation Angles: Play hard on Curwood's name, making the cast secondary. Then sell the mystery angle and play up the rope of woman's hair with which the three murders are committed

"Stick close to your theme, cut out all unnecessary characters as well as action and scenes, hew to the line and centralize your interests."

This appears to have been Director Borzage's idea with the result that the Cosmopolitan production "The Valley of Silent Men" will hold the interest of an audience throughout. Even the strikingly beautiful views of the Canadian Rockies are backgrounds for vital dramatic action. —C. S. S.

"The Unconquered Woman"

Lee and Bradford Present Rubye De Remer in a Picture That Follows Style of Other Successes.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"The Unconquered Woman" offers a variety in the way of settings and action in a style that has proved pleasing in other pictures. From the wastes of the frozen North to Greenwich Village haunts it runs the gamut of locale and keeps up a similar pace, emotionally.

For the most part it is a woman's picture. Rubye de Remer has a sympathetic role as the woman who seems destined to never quite realize the experience of real love, but is victimized by misunderstandings and deception. At times there seems too much effort to make her condition constantly pitiful. Her own performance could be improved if she were less melodramatic. As it is her work suggests more the old-school methods and is effective in a spectacular, strenuous way. Her sincerity, however, is a strong feature and her costumes, like the settings in the latter part of the picture appeal because of their elaborateness.

The picture follows a pattern that has been used successfully many times. In exploitation, the theme is worthy of emphasis and will make a positive appeal to women if handled in a way to arouse their sympathies.

THE STORY

Helen, trying to get money to replace what her brother has stolen, enters a gambling den in the Far North and offers herself in marriage to the winner in return for the money. Antonio, the half-breed, is the winner, but to save her from such a miserable marriage, Bruce Devereaux, a stranger, bets with him and wins her himself. He marries her, so Helen believes, but discovers that the parson was a fake. She leaves the country, and, coming to New York, meets her old music teacher and marries him. He proves faithless, and her small son is her only comfort. Finally, when he has fooled her once too many times, Bruce comes back, and she finds that he, like herself, believed that the parson who married them was on the square. Helen's husband has become so deeply involved in his love affairs that he is afraid to face those he has harmed. He takes his own life, and Helen is free to marry Bruce.

"Top o' the Morning"

Universal Offers Gladys Walton in Pleasing Irish Story That Follows Familiar Lines.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

One of the most simple little pictures that makes the average theatregoer or the man who drops in to the movie for an hour or so feel that his time has been pleasantly spent, is "Top o' the Morning" a Universal production starring Gladys Walton. After you get into the story, you have no trouble in following the action or in deciding just how it is all going to turn out, for it runs true to type, but at the same time there is a feeling of satisfaction when it turns out as you figured it would.

The story is melodramatic and coincidences play a large part in the working out of the theme, but despite the improbabilities of the story, the charm and appeal of Gladys Walton hold your sympathy and interest. The photography is deserving of special mention, some of the scenes, particularly those depicting rural Ireland, for of course with this title it must be an Irish story, are really beautiful examples of soft-toned camera work.

The work of the supporting cast is satisfactory throughout. Harry Myers plays opposite the star and while he is entirely satisfactory he does not have as much opportunity for his talents in this "straight" role as he has had in light comedy ones. Altogether it is well up to the standard of recent Universal releases and should satisfy the average audience particularly in neighborhood houses, for although there is a crook in the picture there is no gun play, sex problems, or anything of that kind.

THE STORY

Jerry O'Donnell while getting ready at her home in Ireland to come to her father in America, is nearly run over by an auto belonging to John Garland, an American millionaire. Immediately she and Garland's little daughter became great pals. Later in America, inhuman treatment by her stepmother causes her to leave home. Meeting Garland she is engaged as a companion to his little daughter. Her brother is employed in Garland's bank and becomes the innocent dupe of the crooked cashier. He goes to Garland's home at night to steal an important letter, is recognized by Jerry who helps him get it. She is sent to jail but Garland has her released though he has lost faith in her. The boy returns the letter unopened, everything is cleared up and Garland declares his love for Jerry.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Fireproof Room

From Indianapolis, Indiana, comes the accompanying photograph of the projection room of the Apollo Theatre of that city. The sender says:

Here is photograph of the projection room of the new Apollo theatre in Indianapolis. From the fire resisting standpoint the booth (you said projection room a moment ago. Ed.) is said to be the most modern and complete in the United States. The room was designed by Vonnegut, Miller & Bohn, Indianapolis, Indiana, architects, in collaboration with the fire engineers of Stone, Stafford & Stone, an Indianapolis insurance concern.

The booth which contains all latest improvements as to construction and safety devices, as recommended by National Board of Fire Underwriters, is concrete throughout. It has one door only, leading up from the theatre proper. This door is of standard metal, which automatically closes by a chain and weight arrangement.

The openings in front of the booth ("Booth," a house or shed built of boards, boughs of trees, or other slight materials, for temporary occupation. Webster. Ed.) are protected by 3-16 inch solid steel plates, which automatically close in case of fire. Above each projection machine (Projector. Ed.), is a fusible link which, in case of fire, melts and causes the steel shutters to close all openings, thus cutting off the room (it's a room again now, Ed.) from the theatre.

At the side of each machine (projector. Ed.) is a hand extinguisher placed near the door of the room. All films when not in use are kept in approved metal cases in the booth (it's a booth again. Ed.)

Metal Rewind Table

The table on which the rewinding of film is done is of metal. Fresh air is supplied the operator (projectionist is meant. Ed.) from a 10-inch electric fan, which brings the air through a specially constructed stack through the roof of the theatre, insuring a current of cool air throughout the booth at all times.

There is not a piece of wood in the booth. The machines (projectors. Ed.) are Simplex, Type S. They are equipped with Peerless arc controllers.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Free Criticism

I shall freely criticise this room, and not only offer space for the refuting of my criticism, but invite its use by those claiming the room to be a model, by the theatre management, by the projectionist, by the National Board of Fire Underwriters or by any one else. That is fair enough, is it not?

In the first place, the describer says, it is "fire resisting." The walls, and presumably the ceiling, too (though it is not so stated), being of concrete, we may assume that if the ceiling be properly supported, as it doubtless is, the statement is evenly and exactly correct. The room is "fire resisting," but once we pass that fact, the builders of this room and I reach a parting of the ways and I am not in any degree influenced by whether the N. B. of F. Underwriters sanction the things we see in this room or not.

First and foremost, that "ten inch fan" would condemn the installation if nothing else were wrong, and when we consider that it is presumed—I doubt it, but it is so set forth—to pump air INTO this room it is all the worse, unless it pumps it into the room near the floor line, and there is a very much larger fan to suck it out through the ceiling. And even this would be unsafe unless there be TWO exhaust fans, one of which is kept CONSTANTLY RUNNING DURING THE TIME PICTURES ARE BEING PROJECTED—unsafe because if there be but a single fan it might be out of order at the time a fire occurred.

The Port Shutters

And now let us examine those port shutters and their means of suspension, concerning which there is very evident pride. Firstly, the lens port has not been reduced to the actual size of the effective beam, so that all the halo light is passing through, reaching the screen and injuring the definition of the picture. This, of course, has nothing to do with "fireproof," and is entirely the fault of the projectionist himself.

Examine the projection circuit outlet location. How many of you would approve of them, though this, too, has nothing to do with fireproofing. Next examine the master cord fuses. NOTICE THEIR LOCATION! Note that there are METAL FUSES ONLY, located at least two feet from seat of fire. MENTALLY ESTIMATE THE PROBABLE TIME, IN SECONDS, BEFORE THOSE FUSES WOULD MELT. Do you see any evidence that there is a fuse over and NEAR the rewinder?

Let us visualize a fire in that room, which we all hope will never occur. It starts at the projector aperture. WHAT HAPPENS?

Why just about this: The show stops. There probably has been a smudge on the screen, and maybe even a photograph of the blaze was projected. It is a matter of fractions of a SECOND NOW TO AVERT A STAMPEDE, AND THOSE FUSES WON'T GO FOR FIVE OR SIX SECONDS AT THE VERY LEAST—maybe a much longer time. The attention of the audience has been directed directly to the projection room.

If only the stoppage of the show has been apparent there nevertheless will be those who will turn and look. THOSE SHUTTERS MUST DROP WITHIN ONE OR TWO SECONDS OF THE START OF

THE BLAZE IF THERE IS TO BE CERTAINTY OF AVERTING A PANIC. Once let Mr. or Mrs. Solid Ivory Top get a glimpse of smoke at or through a port and it's all off. "FIRE" they scream and sprint down an aisle, and they and the rest of the S. I. Top family pile up in a heap.

What Constitutes Protection

Fire resisting walls alone do not, therefore, constitute protection for an audience. Also fire resisting walls plus quick dropping shutters do not either. What is needed to protect an audience adequately are three (3) elements, viz: (a) Fire resisting walls. (b) Port shutters which will drop automatically (because we may not depend with certainty on the projectionist to drop the port shutters manually. He is, I am sorry to say, very often at some distance removed from the projector and might not even know of the fire within from one to four or five seconds) within not to exceed two (2) seconds of the start of a fire. (c) An exhaust fan running, of sufficient size, to pump out all the smoke and gases generated fast enough to suck air in around the crevices surrounding the port shutters and door. This fan must not be directly in the exhaust pipe, but removed therefrom so as to be thoroughly protected from the heat of the fire, operating the exhaust on the injector principle. The whole point is to prevent Mr. or Mrs. Solid Ivory Top seeing any fire or smoke at all.

The quick dropping of port shutters, automatically, may ONLY be secured by installing FILM fuses where the fire will strike them instantly it starts, with metal fuses, if desired, elsewhere. Projector manufacturers could serve the industry a good turn by devising a film fuse which would enter the upper magazine at the fire trap, the master cord of the port shutters to be attached thereto. It is practical and can be done, and done cheaply and efficiently. There should also be a film fuse immediately over the rewinding table, and not more than one foot above the rewinder; also one over the film cabinet and every other probable seat of fire, all in one master cord, of course.

No Harm in Wooden Table

The absence of wood in a projection room (tables, etc., I mean) amounts to nothing in safety to the audience. Wooden shelves and tables do no harm at all, especially if soaked in fireproofing solution, because by the time wood would begin to burn the audience would either be out of the theatre or damaged all it could be. A projection room fire in itself injures no one outside its walls. All danger comes from the PANIC.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters is a most estimable and able institution, BUT it approves of some things in connection with projection rooms which show it has things yet to learn about fires in projection rooms, and what constitutes the danger therefrom, and its disapproval of a wooden table or shelf, therein, when the room walls, etc., are fireproof, verges on nonsensical. If any Underwriter official, or any one else, can point out wherein a wooden rewinding table or shelf adds appreciably to the fire danger in a modern projection room I will most humbly apologize and retract my statement to the contrary.

Don't Get Peeved

Now, gentlemen, of Indianapolis, don't get peeved or excited. The Apollo projection room is a very good one AS SUCH ROOMS GO. What I object to is the assumption that it is a model, when so many of its provisions are very far from being that. IF YOU CAN SHOW THAT I AM IN ANY DEGREE WRONG I WILL BE GLAD TO PUBLISH THAT FACT, because if I am wrong no one wishes to know that fact sooner than I. However, you will have to SHOW ME.

Successful

A projectionist located in the Green Mountains, which rear their heads around the old Richardson homestead, long since deserted by the Richardson tribe which stopped grubbing a living from the rock ribbed hills and moved to the golden west, writes:

Have been successful, through the aid of the handbook and projection department, I am moved to ask you to inform me as to what I must know in order to obtain a Massachusetts license. On October 15 I will have had eight years' experience in projecting motion pictures, using two projectors.

Five of those years was with Powers Six As and three—the last three— with Simplex, three to four shows a week. Have never had a breakdown and have never had anything but 110 volt, 600 cycle "juice."

Many times have had to "get by" an entire show with 60 to 65 volts, and that I have been able to do these things is entirely due to the department and the handbook.

I now have a chance for something better. I feel that I have made good here as summer visitors from New York City come to the show night after night and go away saying "it is fine." I want to make good in the next place, which will be a Massachusetts theatre seating 1,200, with up-to-date equipment; but I must have a license.

Can you tell me at least some of the questions I will be confronted with; also where I must apply for license? Also would I be obliged to join a union? When can I get the latest handbook?

Examination Weak

In the matter of the Massachusetts examination I can offer you no direct help. The examiner who is worth the powder it would take to blow him up seeks only to find out what you do and do not know. Naturally he would, unless he be a nincompoop entirely (and Massachusetts examiners are not of that variety, though I hold the Massachusetts examination too lamentably weak in some respects), the examiner will first of all inquire as to what experience you have had, and what effort you have made to equip yourself with knowledge. He will then most likely examine into your knowledge of electrical action; the action of 3-wire circuits; grounds and ability to test for same; your knowledge of fuses and your knowledge of the equipment with which you are likely to be placed in charge, which will include transformers, switches, motor generators, etc.

Works This Way

It usually works about this way: First an examiner finds the applicant has had actual experience. He then asks a question, for instance, to test the applicant's knowledge of electrical action and gets an unhesitating, competent reply which shows the applicant really knows what he is talking about. He asks another question or two and receives prompt, competent answers, whereupon he concludes the applicant really understands electrical action at least fairly well.

He then asks, for instance: "Describe the construction and electrical action of a transformer." The reply is, we will assume prompt, unhesitating and fairly complete because no further questions are asked on that subject because the reply indicates that the man has actual knowledge of transformer action. But suppose the reply is, on the contrary, hesitating and incomplete. There then is doubt. The hesitancy and incompleteness may be due merely to difficulty the applicant has in expressing his ideas, or may be due to nervousness. The examiner, therefore, asks other questions—maybe a lot of them —to find out exactly what the man really does know about transformers.

And Thus It Goes

And thus it goes all through the examination. You will therefore see why I cannot help you, except by telling you some of the PROBABLE points you will be examined on. You may, or may not be examined on projection optics. You will doubtless be asked to thread a projector, and may be required to project a picture. You will almost certainly be asked to make the necessary electrical connections and get a light. To find out when and where you can make application and be examined, address the Department of State Police, Statehouse, Boston, Mass., telling them what city you propose to work in. You must be licensed. Whether you will have to join a union or not will depend upon whether the city you work in is organized or not—the projectionists therein, I mean. If it is, then you may have trouble, as the union cannot be compelled to accept you into membership, no matter how competent you may be, and most likely will not do so if any of their members are out of work.

The new handbook will be out by the time this is printed, so send in six dollars at once. It is as much in advance of the Third Edition, which you have, as the modern projector is ahead of those used fifteen years ago—and that is no "bluff" or idle words either!

Engineers Meeting

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its fall meeting, October 9, 10 and 11, in the Power's Hotel, Rochester, New York. Committees are already at work preparing an elaborate and excellent program.

It is expected that the research department of the Eastman Company will give demonstrations which will be of great interest, though this is at this time pure speculation, the company having made no public announcement of anything of the sort.

Better Equipment

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

Many and Magnificent Features Mark the New Eastman Theatre

THE opening of the Eastman Theatre, George Eastman's gift to the City of Rochester, on Labor Day, will mark an important date in motion picture theatre history.

The theatre has a frontage on Gibbs street and Main street east of 250 feet. The rear of the building, on Swan street, is 120 feet. Its depth, from Gibbs street to Swan street, is 180 feet, and its height, 80 feet.

The design of the exterior is a simple and dignified adaptation of the Italian renaissance and the material, Indiana limestone. The lower story is of heavy rusticated masonry, above which is the main wall with spaces divided by Ionic pilasters, surmonted with a simple classic cornice. Above this cornice is a low wall or attic, crowned with a metal crestage. The roof is covered with Spanish tile, variegated red in color and slopes to the parapet coping. At the entrance at the corner of Main street east and Gibbs street, the wall is set back and great Ionic columns take the place of the pilasters. These columns are of richly veined Brocodilo marble. The center feature of the roof is topped off with a flagstaff, surmounted by a four-foot bronze casting of an eagle in silhouette.

Quoins At All Corners

The walls of the Swan street facade are of buff brick, with limestone quoins at all corners, limestone trimmings in general, and are surmounted by a limestone cornice and parapet coping.

There are three distinct main sections in the theatre:

First, the portion to which the public is admitted and will occupy during performances, namely, the main auditorium, mezzanine gallery and main balcony; and the portion to which the public will have access, such as the main lobby, mezzanine and balcony foyers, rest rooms, retiring rooms, check rooms and executive offices.

Second, the stage section and all trap and working spaces, such as fly galleries and gridirons, the dressing-room section and the immense space occupied by the eight chambers of the great organ.

Third, the spaces in the attic and basement given over entirely to the heating and ventilating system.

Many Minor Sections

There are three minor sections, namely:

First, the service departments and workrooms which include the front part of the basement occupied by the operating staff.

Second, on the sixth floor is a studio, equipped with complete projection machines, screen and organ, which will be devoted to the teaching of musical accompaniment of motion pictures. This studio is 25x40 feet in size.

Third, the library for sheet music used by the orchestra, the musicians' rest room and the large tuning room for the orchestra. These are housed in the basement of the east wing of the School of Music Building. The library is said to be the largest and most complete of its kind in the country, requiring the services of a staff of five to arrange and keep the scores available for the use of the orchestra when called for.

Auditorium 140 Feet Wide

The main auditorium is 140 feet wide at its widest point and 135 feet deep from the exit vestibule to the proscenium arch. The seats are divided by four main aisles, two side aisles and three cross aisles. The main aisles are three feet wide at the stage and five feet at the rear; the side aisles two and one-half feet wide. Two of the cross aisles are five feet wide and the foyer at the rear, 10 feet wide at its narrowest point and 18 feet at the exit doors.

There are numerous exits from the main auditorium opening into the north and south exit courts and into the exit vestibule on Gibbs street. The Gibbs street exit vestibule is 12 feet wide and 90 feet in length, and has nine pairs of doors opening into Gibbs street. It is constructed of marble base, wainscoting, pilasters and floor, with an ornamented ceiling. Off this vestibule is a small checkroom used chiefly for motion picture performances. Adjoining the checkroom and opening off the lobby is the house manager's office and the entrance to the elevator.

In the rear of the auditorium on the north side is a retiring room for women, equipped with mirrors, dressing and writing tables and complete furnishings.

Five Staircases

From the rear of the main auditorium five main staircases lead to the mezzanine and balcony foyers. The mezzanine foyer, 12 feet wide, and extending across the entire width of the building, is separated from the mezzanine gallery by a colonnade of 10 marble columns. In the center of the foyer is an alcove, 12x25 feet, for use as a lounging and smoking room. The floors of both foyer and alcove are of marble, with marble wainscotting, pilasters and trim. The furnishings of the foyer include seating accommodations for forty-five, with smoking stands, affording a place for that number of persons to sit and smoke while watching the pictures.

The mezzanine gallery, directly in front of the foyer, has a seating capacity of 360. It is suspended about 12 feet above the main auditorium, but because of its shallow depth does not interfere in any way with the line of vision from the last row of seats on the main floor. The distance from the rail of the gallery to the stage is 90 feet.

Large Check Room

Directly off the southwest end of the mezzanine foyer is a large check room which will be used chiefly on concert nights. North of the alcove is located a retiring room and lavatory for women, equipped and furnished similarly to that on the main floor. South of the alcove is a lavatory for men. On the extreme northwest end is a stair hall, 25x50 feet, from which staircases lead to the main floor below and the balcony above. Directly to the north and west of the stair hall is located the section given over to the public offices, general manager, publicity, etc., together with lavatories and retiring rooms for the office staff.

Another foyer, 21 feet wide and 175 feet long, is located between the mezzanine gallery and main balcony. This is decorated similar to the foyer below, having marble floor, wainscoting and pilasters, with a vaulted and groined ceiling. On the east side of this foyer are two hallways leading to the main balcony. Between these is located another large checkroom, to be used for concerts. Opening off the center of this foyer, directly opposite the check room, is a hospital room for use in emergency cases. Opening off the northwest end of the foyer is a men's smoking room and a women's retiring room, together with lavatories opening off both rooms.

Screening Room

Above the balcony foyer and under the upper part of the main balcony are located the offices of the orchestra conductor and his assistants, scorers, etc. Also on this floor is located a small projection room and workrooms. This projection room, equipped with two Simplex Mazda projectors, is 26x26 feet in size, for the viewing and selection of the films for the theatre. Here is where the orchestra conductor and general manager select the various musical compositions for the accompaniment and interpretation of the pictures shown on the theatre screen.

The grand balcony, which is directly over the balcony foyer and also overhangs and projects beyond the mezzanine gallery, has a seating capacity of 1,116. Its level at the rail is 30 feet above the auditorium floor and the distance from the rail to the stage is 80 feet. At either end of the rear of the balcony is a six-foot fire stair leading directly to the street and also to the roof. This staircase is in addition to the staircases, hallways, etc., already described.

To the rear of the main balcony is a telephone room in which are located telephone switchboards and other apparatus controlling telephones in both the theatre and the School of Music.

Above the main balcony is a floor given over to the main projection room, rewind room, poster artist's studio, art director's offices and the studio, 20x30 feet, for the teaching of musical accompaniment of motion pictures. The main projection room is equipped with three motor-driven Simplexes with Simplex Sun-Light high intensity lamps, and Bausch & Lomb lenses; also two Simplex spotlights and color diffusers. The studio is equipped with a separate projection booth, screen and a specially designed organ.

To the north of the poster artist's offices is located a steel and concrete fireproof vault in which will be stored all film not in actual use.

Staircases Are of Marble

The various main staircases leading to the mezzanine and balcony foyers are of marble, with side walls of Silverdale stone. On the large landings of these staircases will be exhibited paintings of well-known artists, and these will be changed from time to time as are the paintings in the main corridors of the School of Music.

There is a beautiful elliptical staircase leading from the southeast corner of the auditorium, giving access to the mezzanine and balcony foyers and to the first and second main corridors of the School of Music. This staircase will be used chiefly by subscribers having seats in the mezzanine gallery for concerts. This staircase is constructed entirely of marble, with walls of Silverdale stone, and has a domed ceiling. There is a separate entrance opening into this staircase from Gibbs street. From the main floor of the auditorium there are two special staircases opening on to bridges across the south exit court which gives access to the main corridors of the School of Music, which will be used as promenades between numbers of concert programs. At the Swan street end of the first floor corridor are two marble columns surmounted by an arch, under which is the grand staircase of marble and bronze leading to the corridor on the second floor.

On the fifth floor of the dressing room section is a room given over to pumps and motors connected with the heating and ventilating apparatus.

The sixth floor is given over entirely to the large heating and ventilating plant.

The seventh floor is devoted chiefly to the automatic sprinkler system. Here are located the two 6,000-gallon storage and pressure tanks for the sprinkler system, together with their auxiliary motor to supply power for the large fan of the heating apparatus on the floor below.

Attic Over Auditorium

There is an attic over the entire main auditorium which has a height of 20 feet from the ceiling of the auditorium to the center of the roof trusses. This is filled with a maze of heating and ventilating pipes and ducts and electrical lines. Here also are located the spotlights which play from trap doors in the ceiling of the auditorium to the stage and also to the eight mural panels on the north and south walls of the auditorium. In the center of the attic is located the echo organ chamber of the theatre organ.

Access to all pipes and valves in the attic is made easy by numerous steel runways suspended from the roof trusses. These runways enable the engineering force to thread their way to any point in the attic for necessary repair work.

The attic space is also used as a ventilating chamber for the auditorium, the ventillation being accomplished by grilles and perforations in the ornamentation of the auditorium ceiling.

Located on the main auditorium roof is a large pent house which houses two ventilating fans, motors and controlling devices for ventilating the attic space. Easy access from one roof level to another is accomplished by a series of steel ladders and stairs.

In the portion of the basement accessible to the public are located the main lavatories. There is one main lavatory for men in the southwest section, connected with a large smoking room, and one for women in the northwest section, connected with an anteroom and also with the women's retiring room on the main floor. The remainder of the public space in the basement is taken up by two large check rooms, two large halls from which two staircases, each eight feet wide, lead to the rear of the main auditorium. The women's anteroom is furnished with dressing tables and conveniences similar to those in the retiring room on the main floor. The smoking room has a tile floor and a fireplace.

Basement Given to Service

The remainder of the front part of the basement is given over to the service department which includes separate rest rooms and lavatories for girl ushers, cleaning women, male ushers, porters and head usher. Incorporated in the rest rooms are lockers and showers. In addition there is a storeroom for general supplies, one for uniforms and a fireproof vault for tickets, stationery, and also washrooms for the janitor, house electrician, carpenter and painter.

In the rear of the basement are separate lockers and lavatories, including showers, for the musicians and stage hands; and three motor rooms, one for the organ blower, one for the air compressor which maintains the pressure for the thermostatic control, and one for the trunk lift machinery. Here also, is an electric shop for the stage electrician, and directly under the center of the stage is the trap space, which is specially constructed to permit the removal of any portion of the stage over it.

From the southeast corner of the basement one has access to the main tunnel and all branch tunnels under the theatre. Also from this section of the basement is a door leading to the east wing of the School of Music basement, in which is located the theatre musicians' rest room, the large tuning room and the sheet music library.

Under the south court is the main tunnel which connects the boiler house on Swan street with both the theatre and School of Music buildings by use of side tunnels, trenches, etc. This main tunnel is from 10 to 25 feet in width, 175 feet in length and 11 feet high. In this tunnel is run all the power, steam and water mains and various other piping. It also houses a considerable amount of equipment, including the vacuum cleaning machines, auxiliary blower and motor for the theatre organ, pressure pumps which maintain pressure on the automatic sprinkler system, toilet room vent fans, vent fans for the local venting system, sump pumps, etc. From this tunnel numerous branch tunnels lead into both the theatre and School of Music. From this tunnel two large pipe shafts lead to the heating apparatus in both the theatre and School of Music.

Kansas City Planning a Negro Picture House

A new picture theatre for negroes is being financed by a group of colored business and professional men of Greater Kansas City.

The new theatre, which will be known as the Washington, has been designed by Victor De Foe and will cost approximately $350,000.

The location chosen is at the corner of the Paseo and the Parade and extends to Vine street, covering half a block.

The architecture will be of modified Spanish mission, with a main tower. The building will be two stories high, accommodating sixteen shops on the main floor and twenty-two offices on the second.

In addition to the theatre proper, which will have a seating capacity of 2,000, and a stage thirty by thirty-six feet, there will also be a roof garden with two pergolas, a basement club and grill room and a swimming pool.

Construction on the building will, it is stated, commence in about thirty days.

New Concerns

Two new motion picture concerns, with an aggregate capital of $250,000, has just received charters at the office of the Massachusetts secretary of state. Both are to be located in Boston. They are as follows:

Franklin Film Company, capital, $50,000. Incorporators Charles H. Cleaves, Rockport; Frederick W. McCarter, Brookline; William C. Hutch, Marlboro.

Morton Theatrical Amusement Company, capital $200,000. Incorporators Samuel Simons, Max Risman and Celia Epstein, all of Boston.

Vallen Moves

The E. J. Vallen Electrical Company, of Akron, manufacturers of the Vallen automatic curtain machine, have moved into their new quarters at thirteen South Canal street.

The move was forced upon the Vallen Company by the necessity for securing increased facilities to meet the growing demand for their apparatus, which has been finding so much favor among the better class of houses.

You Can't Buy Better Pictures But You Can Make Pictures Better

EVERY theatre owner has an opportunity to buy the "big pictures." You can't beat your competitors by buying better pictures, but you can beat them by making pictures better.

The new Mov-Ezy, the chair that means "Ease at the Movies," makes this possible. It eliminates the interruptions occasioned by people passing along the rows while the picture is being shown. No longer is the story spoiled at its climax by spectators rising to cramped positions to permit others to pass. A quarter turn of the Mov-Ezy affords ample passage space, thus enabling every one to remain seated.

MOV-EZY

Means Ease at the Movies

Movie patrons appreciate the advantages of the Mov-Ezy. Actual tests show that people prefer them to any other theatre chair. They are noiseless in operation, keep perfect alignment with other chairs in the row, except when intentionally turned to one side, and offer a wide range of finishes designed to harmonize with any theatre interior.

Stop at our show room for demonstration or write for beautifully illustrated catalog.

The picture is interesting. Miss Vidor is one of our favorites. Someone said the other day that he liked her work because she is a lady, and that is not such a poor explanation of her charm either.—Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune.

The picture is very well done, with Florence Vidor playing both roles in a very pleasing manner. It is an interesting picture, absorbing and unusual.—New York Evening Journal.

An enjoyable film of an unusual story which has received the right treatment. Florence Vidor is another young woman who understands the art of acting before the camera's merciless eye. . . . She gives this part an individuality that is Miss Vidor's own.—New York Evening Post.

The GRAPHIC

America's Screen Magazine of Human Interest

EDUCATIONAL has desired ever since its inception to release a genuine screen magazine.

Not a release made up of scenery, but one built up on short, terse stories filled with zest and human interest.

To build such a product required the services of national magazine and newspaper specialists who only recently became available.

Motion picture specialists have been added to the staff, and on October first the premier release of THE GRAPHIC will be ready for your closest scrutiny.

In brief, THE GRAPHIC will be a human interest digest of the world and its people. Not necessarily people who are prominent in the sense that they are rich and powerful, but always people who are picturesque.

THE GRAPHIC will reflect not only what people are doing, but how they feel about what they are doing.

Mr. Joseph Plunket, Managing Director,
Strand Theatre, New York City.

My dear Mr. Plunket:-

Words fail to express my appreciation of the picture entitled "Just Tony". I have taken several friends on two different occasions. This is the first time in my life that I have ever seen a picture twice, and enjoyed it as much, if not more, the second time than I did the first.

I have worked with horses for the past twenty years and, of course, I know how intelligent these faithful creatures are. I hope the public will be awakened through this picture and realize how much more can be done with animals through kindness. I am sure "Just Tony" will have a successful run.

Every boy and girl, as well as the grownups, in the United States should see this picture and William Fox certainly deserves praise for producing such an excellent entertainment.

I thank you for calling my attention to this wonderful picture, and giving me the opportunity of seeing it. You know I never go to shows of any kind but if there were more pictures like this, I would always go to see them.

Very sincerely yours,

The Kipling couplet above describes the picture, as it is full of both.

—New York Morning Telegraph

NEW YORK

Turn your lobby into an Irish village. Go to it. Now—next fall—next winter, and next St. Patrick's Day! Oh Boy!

—Motion Picture News

From the New York American

"My Wild Irish Rose" is a good picture, and it is well photographed.

From the New York Evening Telegram

"My Wild Irish Rose" is a strange coupling of two classics—a song and a story. It sips the sweetness from both Chauncey Olcott's song and Dion Boucicault's famous stage success. This appealing motion picture, which has the power to please all factions and offend none, is given a surrounding musical program that is Celtic to the core, and is worthy of hearing, even as a separate entity.

From the New York Herald

The settings have been well chosen and the picture will be enjoyed by all those who travel miles to hear Chauncey Olcott say, "Ah darlint."

From the New York Tribune

"My Wild Irish Rose" is unusually good entertainment.

From the Motion Picture News

No picture has ever been placed in celluloid form which is more true to the atmosphere of the Emerald Isle. One can almost smell "the ould sod" and the peat bogs. Scenically, "My Wild Irish Rose" is a thing of beauty.

From the New York Evening World

If anyone enjoys ANY sort of entertainment this sort of weather, they will enjoy "My Wild Irish Rose."

From the New York Evening Journal

A liberal, full-sized bouquet of flowers is shown in "My Wild Irish Rose" at the Strand Theatre. "My Wild Irish Rose" is a beautiful, interesting and efficient adaptation of Boucicault's play, "The Shaugraun."

From the New York Sun

"My Wild Irish Rose," the adaptation of Dion Boucicault's play "The Shaugraun," at the Strand this week, is not much wilder or distinct from other roses, but it will be enjoyed by those who like any kind of roses. It has been well directed by David Smith, and there is a freckled little boy in it whose popularity may lead Jackie Coogan to adopt freckles, too.

From the New York Daily News

There's the funniest little boy—Richard Daniels—whose freckles rival those of young Wesley Barry, in this picture.

IRISH ROSE

CHICAGO

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

It's a nice change from the bobbed heads and abbreviated frocks of today, this glimpse back into Victorian times. The clank of swords and the mustu scent of crinolines have charm that never dies. It's a delightful bit of nineteenth century drama.

Chicago Herald-Examiner

The story of "My Wild Irish Rose" is romantic and dramatic. There is a great deal of wit and beauty in the picture. You will be missing something out of the ordinary if you miss "My Wild Irish Rose."

From Chicago American

Pat O'Malley is a real Irish boy in a role that he evidently enjoys, and that he makes you like as much as he does. A small Irishman, Mickey Daniels, will make all freckled faced youngsters look to their laurels. Stratford's musical setting for "My Wild Irish Rose" makes a double reason for you to hurry there. Come on, let's go.

SAN FRANCISCO

From San Francisco Bulletin

"My Wild Irish Rose" abounds in dramatic situations. The arrest of the hero, his trial, banishment to Australia, his escape from the prison ship, a stirring battle atop a cliff, are but a few of them. The director has achieved an array of living and lovable characterizations that stand out with cameo brilliance.

From San Francisco Call

"My Wild Irish Rose," the feature photoplay at the Tivoli this week is a thing of beauty, and runs true to the atmosphere of the Emerald Isle. The picture has a good story, one which holds the interest at all times, and a splendid cast, the members of which give some fine character portrayals.

From San Francisco Chronicle

"My Wild Irish Rose" drew throngs that filled the Tivoli Theatre all day yesterday, crowds that laughed at the fun and thrilled over the dramatic situations of the story. A merry-faced youngster, Mickey Daniels, causes many a laugh before he does a thing. And he does a lot of them.

Wild Irish Rose opened Isis Theatre Denver Saturday during hot weather at advanced prices with Grandma's Boy for opposition and in two days has played to eight thousand one hundred seventyseven paid admissions Pleasing everyone and holding them out of eighteen hundred seat house

Frank E. Hickey

From Denver Post

Mickey Daniels, with his justly famous freckles, is at the Isis this week, and you would think you were in a peaceful spot in old Ireland. The feature is "My Wild Irish Rose." An' shure, it's a foine picture, so it is. It is a strange coupling of two classics, a song and a story. One was sung to fame by Chauncey Olcott and the other was Dion Boucicault's "The Shaugraun." The combination of so many things, all tend to make an excellent entertainment at the Isis this week.

A REAL special production. All-star cast. Beautifully screened. A ready-made demand. Wonderful tie-up plan. A sure-fire box office opportunity.

As subscribers to your paper for—we think—eleven years, permit us to extend our congratulations to Mr. Welsh, who has recently taken up the reins of office in your editorial chair, and to express our recognition of the vim and enthusiasm shown in recent numbers."

This, a letter from Messrs. Tickner and Ball, of the Revue Theatre, Toronto, Can., is only one of hundreds of similar expressions received in the past few weeks.

We quote it particularly merely because it succinctly expresses the thought that runs through all the letters. Two phrases tell it—"subscribers for eleven years," and "recognition of the vim and enthusiasm shown in recent issues."

We know not, or, rather, care not what you buy when you buy space in the other trade papers of this business. We believe you buy a dollar's value for a dollar spent—for we believe you are shrewd buyers.

We believe that the man with something to sell should sell that SOMETHING.

We HAVE value to sell—and that leaves neither the time, the necessity, nor the inclination to discuss "the other fellow" with you.

We HAVE 10,709 PAID subscriptions to sell you. (A. B. C. Statement.)

We HAVE, in this strictly trade circulation, many thousands of exhibitors who can be reached through no other trade paper.

Eleven-year men, ten-year men, even fifteen-year men—veterans who had Moving Picture World alone as their guide the day they entered this business and have had it at every step since.

There is an open and shut, two plus two proposition.

Unless Moving Picture World carries FULL advertising from you there are some of your trade announcements that are not being seen by thousands of exhibitors.

That's fact. And at this particular moment that fact is of unusual importance to you.

For those exhibitor readers are "recognizing the vim and enthusiasm" of the new-old Moving Picture World.

There is an interest and responsiveness in the readers of a paper that is GOING FORWARD.

The paper that is being WATCHED is the paper that is being read.

They are watching Moving Picture World because they know it is striving with redoubled energy, ambition and strength to serve them. They know there are many good things—and new things—coming to them with each new issue.

They are WATCHING the ad pages of Moving Picture World.

Are you in those pages—in FULL strength?

THE MOHICAN'S DAUGHTER

From the Story of Jees-Uck
by JACK LONDON

Directed by S. E. V. Taylor
Produced by P. T. B. Inc.

EXHIBITORS are getting good box-office results from this Jack London story. This isn't a matter of our saying so; its a matter of printed record that you read in the box-office report departments in the trade journals.

In Amusements, Minneapolis, you find this:

"Well directed and with a good plot, this picture drew better than any picture we have played in two months. Print in perfect condition."

In Exhibitors Herald you read:

"They surely like this one. I have cleaned up with both of the 'Mohican' pictures—Taylor's Jack London story and Tourneur's. Where does anyone get the idea that an Indian story fails to draw patronage? Play this one without fail."

In Moving Picture World you find:

"A mighty good picture that brought us the business in the middle of an extremely hot spell. We advertised moderately; the patronage was out of proportion to the limited effort we put forth on the story."

This is a business builder and you ought to play it at once.

Unanimously Hailed as "Box Office"

Box-offices "talk" when they have a real picture showing on the screen inside. You needn't give two whoops about what the critics or reviewers say if the public says "We like this show." In Los Angeles the public has said this, and the result is two big weeks at the most notable extended run theatre on the Pacific Coast—the Mission Theatre.

So, when public approval has been given this picture it is then fair enough to give the critics and reviewers credit for having predicted the success of "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" as the notices quoted here reveal.

PYRAMID PICTURES INC.

QUEEN OF THE

A Ray C. Smallwood Production

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Ray Smallwood has accomplished a fine piece of work in staging "Queen of the Moulin Rouge." It has the realistic atmosphere of the Montmartre section of Paris and the agreeable glamour. Another famous musical comedy has reached the screen elaborated and built out to assume the dimensions of a production. Exhibitors will find that it has a strong, popular appeal from many angles. Altogether a good prodnction. It has human appeal and strong love interest.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: It stacks up well as cinema entertainment. Another example of a stage play being well adapted for the screen. It is a very good "buy" for exhibitor and fan. A picture that will please and that has the decided advantage of having been well advertised.

EXHIBITORS HERALD: A rapidly moving story told in good continuity against a brilliant background. A splendidly produced feature. The Paris of the picture a believable one; no better cabaret stnff has ever been produced. It is precisely the type of picture that the title promises.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: Paul Potter's play gains much in its transfer from the stage to the screen of Pyramid. Here is illusion, atmosphere, color; something to engage the eye constantly. One has the feeling that here is Paris with all of its gaiety, its sordidness and its artistic side. Atmosphere is rarely ever so prominent and important as it is in "Queen of the Moulin Rouge." Truthful, convincing and spectacular.

LOS ANGELES EXPRESS: "So this is Paris! Emphatically affirmative is the answer. . . . Atmosphere has been created that puts this picture in the 'something different' class. . . . Upon the settings, upon the continuity and in general upon the acting, lies the charm of the picture. . . . The cafe scenes have been done with a lavish hand."

In San Francisco Irving Ackerman and Sam Harris took their big legitimate theatre, the Casino, and converted it into a "picture house" to play "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" at advanced prices surrounded by a 20-girl Apache act—making it a road show attraction.

In New York, following its first big run, Sidney Cohen and an allied exhibitor group forming the new big third metropolitan circuit have booked "the Queen" for 110 days which American Releasing supports with a city-wide billboard campaign for an entire month beginning September 17th. Everybody's booking it everywhere.

MOULIN ROUGE

From Paul Potter's famous Stage Success

LOS ANGELES HERALD: "The acting throughout this picture is superb, and the settings are wonderful, as every effort was made to make it one of the greatest productions of the season."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: "Pre-eminently respectable . . . A well-constructed story and a number or sequences that carry plenty of suspense and interest. . . . A good audience picture founded on sure fire theme. . . . Ought to make money."

HARRY DAVID: The Managing Director of the Mission Theatre in a telegram says: "Exhibitors are constantly on the watch for pictures of quality with a box-office value and title, and also which lend themselves to great exploitation. Here is a picture that answers all these requirements. The 'Queen of the Moulin Rouge' opened Saturday, August 26th, at the Mission Theatre to an exceptionally good day notwithstanding the fact that it was the hottest day of the summer. Each day's business has built up remarkably, hot weather continuing. I think this is a wonderful example of the pulling power of any production. Newspaper notices extremely kind; public accepts the picture 100 per cent."

HARRISON'S REPORTS: An excellent drama that should have universal appeal. The action impresses one as true to life, the continuity flows smooth, the characters act as real human beings and all the atmosphere is faithfully created.

FILM DAILY: There's hardly a doubt that (the critic said "but what") "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" will prove a good box-office picture for certain exhibitors catering to the more sensational tastes. Ray Smallwood has been quite elaborate in his depiction of the Red Mill. Exhibitors . . . will surely cash in on "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" by promising their patrons a story of Paris night life and telling them about the Apache sequence.

Every city, every hill, every river, every sea, every place having mention in the Bible was filmed; Damascus, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Nazareth, Hebme, Beersheba, Gaza, Joppa, Caeserea, Tyre, Samaria, Shiloh, Jericho. Every mountain and valley, in all more than 1500 places having connection with any part of the Bible, were photographed and it was done with a purpose: to prove that an educational film may be made with tremendous magnetic entertainment values.

If Abraham, or Jacob, or David, or Solomon or Jesus or any other Bible character has been at any of these spots this great series contains pictures of each and all of these places. And not only the places but the people, their habits and customs: whether they work or play, whether they sow, reap or grind; shepherds, peasants, farmers, merchants; every type and their environment are shown in these unusual pictures.

The Niagara Falls Gazette says:

"An exceptionally good selection. The color photography was a revelation—the coloring artistically but naturally employed, made the figures so lifelike you expected them to step down from the screen and speak. It was like a painting of one of the Old Masters.

"A dramatic story of love and adventure. Miss Hampton's work was particularly fine. She is the embodiment of youthful beauty and charm. The picture was greeted by applause."

The Niagara Falls Evening Review says:

"HURRICANE'S GAL"

Starring the beautiful Dorothy Phillips and produced under the direction of Allen Holubar

Mae Tinee, in listing "Hurricane's Gal" as one of the best summer releases, says:

"It's a whirlwind of a film—effective in a melodramatic, vivid sort of way. It was just one fight after another, with Miss Dorothy Phillips in the lead, being stormy and tender by turns—but always beautiful. The picture fairly SIZZED, there was so much doing. The big scenes were well accomplished—so well that you forgave occasional faults of detail."

The New York Daily News says:

"It's a rip-roaring melodrama of the sea. The audience lost control and cheered."

The Brooklyn Standard Union says:

"'Hurricane's Gal' is a remarkable production."

The Detroit Evening Times says:

"Thrills! Thrills! Thrills! A stirring romance featuring the beautiful Dorothy Phillips, and a supreme cast in one of the greatest love tales staged or screened. A perfect storm of sensation. A picture with a punch, a zenith of thrills that more than pleased the packed houses that feverishly followed every incident."

The Detroit News says:

"A rousing hour and a half of real entertainment. It has everything in the line of thrills that can be imagined—handled with rare understanding."

"ONE CLEAR CALL"

A John M. Stahl production, presented by Louis B. Mayer

H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn., says:

"'One Clear Call' is seven reels of the finest entertainment released for some time. Stahl has produced another excellent feature in this one, and while Milton Sills did his part fine, H. B. Walthall and Irene Rich must have credit for some of the best work they ever did. First National is sure giving us some fine ones and it will help bring back some absentee patrons."

George T. Cruzen, Empress Theatre, Hastings, Neb., says in a report to the Exhibitor's Herald:

"Boost it big. It will please all classes. Dandy cast. Acting of Miss Rich wonderful. Others very good."

The National Board of Review in its criticisms on exceptional photoplays says:

"'One Clear Call' is a melodrama with a difference—the difference lies in sheer acting of a high order—interesting, intelligent."

The Illinois State Journal comments editorially as follows:

"It held the attention of every spectator and literally did 'grip the heart.' Springfield has seen few pictures as cleverly directed and as artistically acted."

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK"

Mack Sennett's latest big comedy-drama feature, starring Mabel Normand, is making the money.

Robert E. Sherwood, in Life, says:

"This is unusually good entertainment. Very few comedy-melodramas have been so hilariously funny."

The San Francisco Examiner says.

"It is pure melodrama—packed with thrilling fights and hairbreadth escapes. Gives much amusement and is well received by laughing crowd in attendance."

The Davenport, Ia., Times says:

"The plot is developed in straight dramatic fashion with many unusual angles, and with typical Sennett tinge of comedy relief."

The Minneapolis Tribune says:

"It is on the order of 'Mickey' and 'Molly O,' filled with romance, love, intrigue, thrills, humor, pathos and comedy."

The Butte, Mont., Miner says:

"Filled with action, drama, thrills and laughs. The production has been set with lavish hands and some of the scenes mount to sensational heights in their effect."

"SONNY"

A. M. Bowles, General Manager of Turner & Dahnken, San Francisco, wires:

"'Sonny' gave better satisfaction and proved a bigger box office attraction even than 'Tol'able David.' Enthusiastic praise and daily increase in box office receipts resulted in second week. Barthelmess is the most popular star today and a big asset to the incomparable First National program."

Sig Samuels, Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, says:

"'Sonny' is the first picture in all my years as a theatrical manager that I have backed with my personal endorsement. It exemplifies the splendid principles on which the Better Films Committee is founded—a cleaner, finer, bigger and better picture. I am happy to present it."

"FOOLS FIRST"

A Marshall Neilan production, taken from the story by Hugh MacNair Kahler

The Atlanta Journal says:

The Atlanta Georgian says:

"A rattling good picture, with swift action, lots of suspense, and told in super six style."

The Los Angeles Herald says:

"Many original scenes showing the master hand of Neilan. The climax is so radically new one realizes there is no limit to the genius of Neilan."

The Los Angeles Record says:

"Neilan proves himself the Charles Dickens of the screen."

A Man's Word

NO business can rise higher than the fundamentals which govern its everyday operation. Must it be written, then, as a fundamental of this business, that:

There is no such word as "Contract" in the film dictionary?

It seems true.

Perennially, it seems true of the relations of players and directors to their employes.

Often, it has been true of the relations between exhibitors and distributors—with either side as frequently at fault.

"Confidence and cooperation," "Unity and united action,"—all the 1923 model mottoes that have attained such popularity in recent months are as so many mocking words as long as it remains true that:

A contract in the film business is a scrap of paper. Fight for its observance if it is to your advantage, and MIGHT is on your side: Break it to smithereens if a contract hampers you and RIGHT is the only weapon possessed by the other fellow.

There is a class of leech that fastens itself on the rising idol and the director who has just scored a sensational success.

The leech drains—and drains—and drains; creates nothing, contributes nothing.

The film leech whispers insidiously: "I know you've got a contract—but what's that in the film business? You've just had a big success and lots of people want you. Just tell them you won't work, you'll soldier on the job, you'll run up production costs—they'll call the contract off or give you more money. And that's all we're after."

The film leech has been right. Too often.

Infrequently, there were other companies shy of scruples and ready to grab the contract breaker; more often the employer "babied" his star or director.

Cheaper to meet the sulker half way than to submit to sabotage.

It's all unfair.

Unfair to the industry. And unfair to the ninety-nine per cent of players and directors—men and women of honor and integrity. All because of the remaining one per cent—and the excrement, the leeches.

This must be said:

We know of three individual cases in the past month where a rule-or-ruin contract-breaker has been at work. And in each case he has discovered that:

There are no bidders for the player or director who cannot come to the market with clean hands.

That is progress. It will prove the most effectual cure for the contract-breaking evil. An evil that tugs at the very vitals of this industry.

For no industry can be stronger than the word and bond of the individuals who compose it.

It would take more space than remains at our disposal to even touch on the phase of contract-breaking that concerns the relationships of exhibitors and distributors.

The fundamentals are identical.

The distributor whose code reads: "The only binding contract is the extra advantageous contract," is making his own bed. If producers and stars turn his own logic upon him his complaints are ridiculous.

The occasional exhibitor who follows the same rule has been responsible for the creation of conditions oppressive to the majority.

And it all totals up to an indictment against an industry.

"No business can rise higher than the fundamentals which govern its every-day operation."

Robert E. Welsh

THREE MINUTE CHATS WITH THE EDITOR

I Really Think That—

Exhibitors know a ——, well,—a whole lot more about running their business than your average New York film man gives them credit for.

I really think—that many exhibitors work up a real peeve when they read editorials telling them "Do this!"—"Don't do that!" All written in the spirit you would use addressing a six-year-old child.

The thought came to mind one day this week when I was chatting with W. R. Sheehan, General Manager of the Fox Film Corporation.

I had just witnessed the first of the new Fox "Educational Entertainments." Or, if you want to try it another way, "Entertaining Educationals."

I was enthusiastic. The General Manager was enthusiastic. We were rushing on conversationally in double harness.

"If exhibitors only realize what these one reelers are going to mean to them," we were chorusing. "One reel entertainment with a punch, plus an educational value and appeal to the better classes that can't be calculated. If the exhibitor would only—."

Then the same thought hit us both.

"Shucks," it ran. "We're talking too 'New Yorky.' The exhibitor knows more about this than we do. Hasn't he gone out of his way to get the unusual in topical and magazine reels? Just because of his anxiety to meet this demand? Won't he realize at first glance that this is the sort of comprehensive, intelligent, and withal, showmanlike, treatment that he has wanted? Sure he will."

There is going to be unusual interest in the Fox Educational Entertainments just because the exhibitor will know what it is all about—and know it without any editorial urging.

There is going to be unusual interest because the Fox Educational Entertainments are unusual.

William Fox is spending a lot of money here on an Idea that is akin to an Ideal. It's money that he probably won't get back from exhibitors right away. Eventually he will get it from schools and colleges. He could get it there now. But that isn't Bill Fox's way of doing business.

Bill Fox gets his money from the picture business—and he's a picture man first of all. Here's about the way he figured it:

"There is a demand among picture patrons for the sort of educational entertainment that built the tremendous circulation of such magazines as Popular Mechanics. Secondly, there is a steadily growing demand on the part of our better elements that the picture industry do something to meet its opportunities and obligations in educational work.

"I can kill two birds with one stone. I can provide the exhibitor with the 'unusual' that his program needs, and I can start the building of a film library that will show censors, reformers, educators and the ordinary, general public that the industry is aware of its opportunities for service.

"Hodge-podge collections of entertaining scenes don't meet the bill on either point. I will give one subject or one phase of a subject intelligent treatment in each release, with each scene working up to a real entertainment 'punch.' It can be done—by the right men. And I've got the right men.

"Schools and churches will fall over themselves for these pictures. But they are made to build business for the exhibitor and to build the business for all of us. So, in every case the exhibitor in a town or section must have first chance at the subjects. We'll go further and make no effort from our exchanges to place them outside."

That's about the way Bill Fox figured it. And if all the subjects in the series hold up to the first ones shown—and reviewed on Page 214 of this issue—he has lived up to every calculation he made.

And he won't have to "educate" exhibitors to realize it. They know a thing or two. And a lot more.

"Dick" Rowland Says—

Dropped in for a three-minute chat with Richard A. Rowland, former Metro head and now production executive of Associated First National Pictures.

"There is some danger," says "Dick," "of our having too much prosperity talk."

Can you imagine that? We are dodging interviews with film executives these days just because we get tired of hearing—and repeating—"Prosperity is here!"—"Hurray for Prosperity!"—"Let's all go on a Prosperity rampage!"

And here was "Dick" Rowland slamming us directly between the eyes with the statement, "There is some danger of our having too much prosperity talk."

"Don't misunderstand me," he went on. "Better times are here, better times are coming.

"But what I mean is that we are not going to wake up one bright and sunny morning and find Old Man Wartime Prosperity outside our door.

"And that's where I feel there is danger in an overdose of prosperity talk. The reaction is apt to be bad. Boom talk may prove a boomerang.

"I believe conditions are on the steady upgrade and that we should view the matter that way and work with that conviction rather than in a sort of childish faith that there is going to be a prosperity miracle. Just as conditions started on the decline a year ago and we spent the last summer right at the very bottom of the pit—so I figure that this year will find us on the steady upgrade, and next year we will be solidly planted at the top.

"This year we will have all the prosperity our heads can stand—but we can't afford to rest on our oars. Maybe we can try that next year. I wouldn't advise it at any time."

As Dick Rowland's particular province is production we asked him if he found picture making costs decreasing—particularly to the extent of bringing a sharp reduction in rentals.

"Production costs are dropping," he replied, "but not to the point that might be imagined from an outside glance. You must remember that labor costs—which enter so largely into the total overhead—went up steadily under union pressure in the past few years. And there is no sign of them receding.

"Materials are cheaper, and players' salaries not so exorbitant—but against this is the strong competition for stories that is forcing prices up to new levels.

"Then again, picture producers now admit that it is TIME that makes the big picture. And time costs money.

"You can stage one story in three months if you want to—or you can stage the same story in four weeks. The skeleton may appear the same. But the difference is in the quality—the human touches that make one a 'fillum' and the other a PRODUCTION.

"There is no way of cheating on this question of time—and the producer who tries it is only fooling himself."

Eastman's $5,000,000 Theatre the Home of Wonders

First-Day Visitors Number 6,000; Lighting Increases Gradually

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 4.—George Eastman's princely $5,000,000 gift—the Eastman Theatre—to the people of Rochester, through the trusteeship of the University of Rochester, was publicly and officially thrown open today. Some 20,000 people made their way to this splendid theatre on the first day, but only two-thirds of that number were able to get inside the auditorium, which in artistic beauty and modern construction is second to no theatre in the world. Interesting, too, is the fact that this is the first temple of cinematographic art operated by a university.

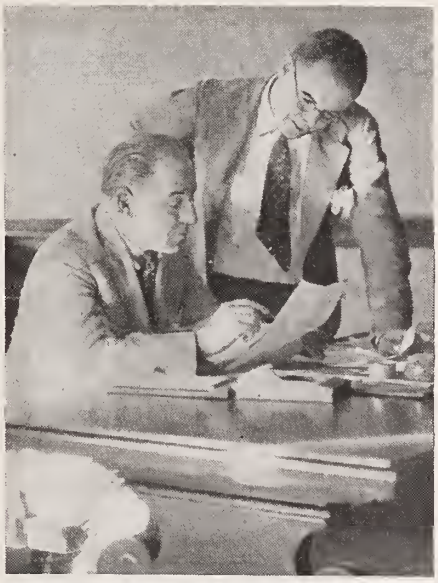
While the theatre was thrown open to some 6,000 invited guests, representative of every line of endeavor, on Saturday—in the afternoon for inspection and in the evening a dress rehearsal—Rochester people were given the first opportunity today. And they did not pass up the opportunity despite the fact that the weather was bad.

Exhibitors and exchangemen from Buffalo, Syracuse, Albany and New York were on hand in great numbers. Many well-known film men, such as Adolph Zukor, of Famous Players-Lasky, officials of First National, Goldwyn, Film Booking Offices and other film companies had visited earlier in the week, while others, including Will Hays, are expected during the coming week.

The theatre is the product of a soul-inspired moment as truly as the most perfect gem of poesy, and equally leaves the beholder gasping and inarticulate with its sheer beauty. There are no details to be gone into, no technicalities to quibble about. It is the theatre perfect from every angle. And for this statement we have the expression of those who are equipped to comment authoritatively and expertly. Every inch of the edifice is in exquisite taste (none of the flaunting gaudiness of the usual playhouse hastily erected) from the heavy velvet carpets to the summit of the golden dome.

The walls are of heavy blocked stone and these constitute a perfect foundation of the illusion that one has walked into a royal palace. It is a dream palace, the eight murals composing the "Pageant of Music."

The stage is a wonderful picture. The first curtain of black and gold opens to disclose a view yet more entrancing. Against a turquoise background is splashed the inner curtain of a rich Burgundy red with lily-flowers of gold. The orchestra, numbering some fifty musicians, is on the stage, set in much the same fashion as those of the Broadway houses.



Seated, Charles H. Goulding, managing director of the Eastman Theatre; standing, Arthur Amni, formerly of Buffalo, manager.

Although the theatre was sufficiently lighted on Saturday night's dress rehearsal, no attempt was made until today to light the house as brightly as the test shows may be done without impairing the efficiency of the image on the screen. The maximum amount of illumination available will be used gradually, according to the theatre officials. This will be done in order to accustom patrons by degrees to motion picture presentation in light surroundings.

The great dome is magnificent, the image of the dome of Heaven, etheral blue melting indistinguishably into flaming gold. To attempt to describe the theatre further would involve the repetition of data submitted readers of Moving Picture World by our Equipment Department.

Among the thousands of guests noted at the Saturday inspection and dress rehearsal were Charles Walton, of New York; George H. Bubb, of Williamsport, Pa., director of a chain of theatres; E. L. Bloom, manager of the New York Winter Garden; Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Central Theatre, New York, representing Universal; Fred Herrman, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Allen Eaton Russell, Sage Foundation, New York; Gus Sun, head of the Gus Sun Vaudeville circuit, of Springfield, O.; Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film; Charles L. Wagner, manager of John McCormack, Mary Garden and others; Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the M. P. T. O., of New York State; Theodore L. Hays, managing director of the Finkelstein & Rubin Theatres, of Minnesota; Lester S. Scott, of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., of New York City; Stanley C. Warwick, a Palm Beach and West Palm Beach, Fla., exhibitor; James N. McGrath, of Pittsburgh.

A. Milo De Haven, managing director of the Kearce Circuit, Charlestown, W. Va.; Emerson Dickman, representing Buffalo film interests; G. E. Newton, Columbia Amusement Company, of Erie, Pa.; Fred A. Rice, O-at-ka Theatre, Warsaw, N. Y.; W. V. Dapping, Auburn, N. Y.; Alexander Russell, concert director of Princeton University; Spencer Wheadon, of Medina, N. Y., head of the motion picture development department of Yale University; Mrs. Florence French, editor of Musical Leader, Chicago; Pierre V. R. Key, editor of the Musical Digest, New York; Miss Constance Joslin, R. Charles Roda, news editor of Musical America, New York City; Sydney Samson, manager of the Buffalo exchange, of Grand-North; Bob Murphy, manager of the Buffalo Murphy-Filkins exchange; J. S. Hayman, of the new Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., which opened a week ago, and many others.

The program for the opening week was particularly pleasing. It was headed by Metro's special, "The Prisoner of Zenda," which was voted the best picture shown in this city this year. That this production, together with the novelty of the new house, could remain at the Eastman for a month playing to capacity audiences, was indicated by the heavy demand for seats made today.

The rest of the program as presented at the dress rehearsal Saturday follows: Overture, "1812," Tschaikowsky, by Eastman Theatre orchestra; Arthur Alexander and Victor Wagner conducting; Eastman Theatre current events, musical terpsichore, "Russia," and "The South at Work," by Esther Gustafson, dancing; Eastman Theatre Magazine, including for the first time on any screen portraits in color by the Eastman Kodachrome process; vocal selection, "The World is Waiting at Sunrise," Seitz, by Marian Armstrong, a Scotch-Canadian soprano; Metro's "The Prisoner of Zenda," organ exit, Dezso D'Antalffy and John Hammond, organists.

Three de luxe performances are given—at 2:15, 7 and 9 p. m. The shows are continuous from 1 to 11 p. m. The prices from 1 to 6 o'clock are as follows: 1,837 seats in the orchestra at 30 cents, 405 mezzanine seats at 50 cents, 206 loge seats at 40 cents and 910 grand balcony seats at 20 cents. The prices from 6 to 11 are as follows: 1,837 seats in the orchestra at 50 cents, 405 mezzanine seats at $1, 206 loge seats at 75 cents and 910 grand balcony seats at 35 cents. There is no war tax.

One unique feature about the Eastman Theatre is found in the absence of boxes. The arrangement seems to be satisfactory from every angle. In fact, there can be no complaint about the seating arrangement, for a full view of the stage is obtainable from any seat in the auditorium.

Too Busy to Stop

Salesmen Hear Rosenbluh Expound New System

So busy is the Fox Film Corporation with plans for coming business that some of its departments were unable to "lay off" over Labor Day. Among those who were kept on the job were the salesmen of the New York exchange who are under the supervision of Louis Rosenbluh.

Mr. Rosenbluh is the originator of a plan of co-operation between exhibitor and producer, in which the exhibitor becomes the distributor of Fox entertainments in his particular locality. Mr. Rosenbluh called the salesmen into a two day conclave and addressed them on the subject of his plan, explained in detail its workings, and pointed out its advantages.

Big Season Ahead

The motion picture industry is entering upon one of the most successful seasons enjoyed since the war, in the opinion of E. A. Smith, personal representative of Thomas H. Ince, who has just completed a tour of the country.

"From indications throughout the country, I am convinced that, beginning this fall, the motion picture industry will reach the high water mark which it touched just before the war," he states. "This applies only to clean, meritorious productions, for the public will not tolerate questionable plays."

Decrease in Stock

Amendments filed at Austin, Texas, during the past week included the following: Queen Theatre Company, of Galveston, decreasing capital stock from $50,000 to $1,000; Queen Building Company, of Galveston, decreasing capital stock from $150,000 to $75,000; Texas Amusement Company, of Galveston, decreasing capital stock from $20,000 to $1,000; Queen Theatre, of Galveston, decreasing capital stock from $100,000 to $1,000. All of the companies mentioned are subsidiaries in which E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, is interested.

Arbitrators Named

The joint arbitration board, authorized the M. P. T. O. of North Carolina at its Asheville convention last June, is composed of the following exhibitor members: H. B. Varner, Lexington, C. L. Welch, Salisbury, and James A. Estridge, Gastonia. The exchange members, appointed by the Film Exchange Managers' Association of Charlotte, are as follows: E. E. Heller, Pathe Exchange, Inc., W. J. Kupper, Fox Film Corporation, E. F. Dardine, Universal Film Exchange, Inc.

Eckman Goes Ahead

S. Eckman, Jr., vice president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, who for several months past has been supervising Goldwyn's eastern branches, will take up active supervision of the metropolitan district and adjacent territory with headquarters at the New York exchange.

George S. Jeffrey, formerly associated with Famous Players in Canada, will actively manage the New York exchange under the supervision of Mr. Eckman.

Salesroom Opened

F. B. O. has opened a sales room at 1026 Forbes street, Pittsburgh, where A. R. Cheery, who has been appointed division manager with headquarters at Pittsburgh, will be glad to receive his old friends and customers. The sales room will be kept up permanently until the completion of the new F. B. O. premises on Forbes street. This sales room will be in addition to the present F. B. O. Exchange at 121 Fourth avenue, which will be maintained as heretofore.

Mrs. Vignola Dies

The mother of Robert G. Vignola, the Cosmopolitan director, died on Labor Day at her home in Albany, N. Y. Mrs. Vignola had been ailing for a long time with no hope of recovery and the end was not unexpected. The director was at her bedside as were the other members of the family. Mrs. Vignola is survived by her husband, three sons and a daughter. Interment was in Albany.

Opens Exchanges

Paramount announces the opening of two new exchanges, one at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and the other at Sioux Falls, South Dakota. This brings the number of Paramount exchanges in the United States to thirty-three.

The Wilkes-Barre exchange is located at 62-66 State street and is under the management of Earle W. Sweigert. The new Sioux Falls exchange will be under the management of A. B. Leak.

Kuttner Dies

Edward Kuttner, 51 years old, manager of the Kempner Theatre in Little Rock, Ark., and widely known in theatrical circles in the South, died suddenly August 13, as the result of a hemorrhage while fishing in a lake near Little Rock. The attack, it was declared, was brought on by excitement when Mr. Kuttner landed a fish.

Congratulations Due

I. J. Schmertz, assistant manager of the New York Fox exchange, is the father of a bouncing girl which came into the world Friday night, Sept. 1. Mr. Schmertz had been to the opening at the Lyric Theatre of "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," and when he arrived home he was informed that the little stranger whom he now will be able to perambulate during his leisure hours had arrived safely.

New Department

The Commercial Fibre Company of America, Inc., 15 East Twenty-sixth street, New York, announces the opening of a raw film department under the management of G. Zezza, to handle a new raw positive film manufactured by the Fabbrica Italiana Lamine Milano (F. I. L. M.). A large stock of the film has already reached this country. Mr. Zezza, before the world war, was the manager in this country of the Raw Film Supply Company and of the Ambrosio American Company.

Cornwell Opens Delmonte Theatre; No Fight on Paramount Intended

Nathan Frank, recently elected president of the Missouri Famous Players to succeed Fred L. Cornwell, resigned, returned from New York on September 6 and took charge of his new office. While in the East, Frank held several important conferences with Adolph Zukor and others interested in Famous Players.

Cornwell, who tendered his resignation as president early in June after the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation purchased his 1,260 shares of stock in the Missouri corporation for $126,000, has opened the Delmonte Theatre, 5624 Delmar boulevard, as an independent first run theatre. However, he has disclaimed any intention of fighting the Missouri Theatre, the big first run house of Famous Players, stating that he had not decided what film he would use but presumed he could obtain Paramount pictures if he desired.

"The policy of the Famous Players corporation is not to hold a number of theatres," he said in discussing his resignation, "but to retain a key theatre like the Missouri here and sell film to as many other theatres as possible. It has been learned from experience that a star becomes popular not from exclusive showings in a few theatres but from general exhibition. It was partly for that reason the Famous Players Missouri Corporation released all of the neighborhood houses about a year ago. And so it is we are to run the Delmonte.

"I have not yet determined what films we will run here, but I am sure that we can get Famous Players if we want them. Adolph Zukor, head of the organization, is a broad-minded man and does not ask exclusive use of his products by any theatre."

It is understood that the Delmonte Investment Company, owners of the Delmonte Theatre, were paid $120,000 to release the Famous Players from a lease on the amusement palace calling for a rental of $36,000 a year for eight years to come.

Twelve other St. Louisians also held stock in the Missouri Famous Players Corporation. At one time about 25 per cent. of the capitalization was held in St. Louis, but it is understood that all but a few shares to qualify officers and directors have been purchased by the New York organization at good prices.

The St. Louis Amusement Company now controls the former Famous Players neighbor houses, having obtained them by absorbing the City Wide Amusement Company.

The Delmonte opened with a program indicating that the house would make things interesting for any amusement organization. "Slim Shoulders," the W. W. Hodkinson special, was the feature, while a Snappy comedy, "Happy Birthday," and Fun from the Press were the short subjects. In addition, Kitty Gordon and her company, including her daughter; the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade and Virginia Watson and Joseph E. Daniels, exponents of Castle dancing, were on the bill.

The advertising campaign handled by "Front Page" Crandall was the most elaborate put on by a St. Louis theatre in many months and is said to have cost upwards of $5,000.

St. Louis theatre and film men are wondering whether there is any connection between the appearance of Keith stars on the Delmonte program and the announcement that Keith interests would build a $1,500,000 theatre in Toledo.

Invoke Hays' Aid

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through special counsel, Guggenheim, Untermeyer and Marshall, retained in the Rodolph Valentino suit, has suggested to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc., that the star should not enter into contracts with other companies during the progress of the suit.

The offer is made to submit the terms of the Valentino contract for Mr. Hays' inspection. Valentino alleges that he did not receive the advertising and publicity to which the contract entitled him.

Film Exports During June

Report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce gives the following data on film exports for June, to more than forty countries:

	Footage	Value

Total to all countries	529,973	33,595

Strike Averted

A threatened strike of Cleveland operators was averted the forepart of September, when an agreement was made at the last minute.

The matter had been hanging fire for some time, the operators asking an increase, to which the exhibitors objected. Under the terms of the settlement, a year's wage scale was signed calling for payment of $50 a week to operators in theatres seating 500 or more, and $45 a week for theatres with less than 500 capacity.

C. E. Cook Chosen

C. E. Cook has been secured by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas to be business manager. Mr. Cook has been on the advertising staff of the Kansas City Kansan since its beginning, having been sent to that paper from the Topeka Capital. It was decided at the last convention of the association to employ a business manager.

A Busy Birthday

C. Lang Cobb, general sales manager for Color Cinema Company, producers of "Artcolor" pictures, celebrated his birthday August 25 by releasing "Artcolor's" first picture, a one-reel comedy entitled "Making Hubby Like It," which is the first motion picture produced, photographed, printed and developed in natural colors, he says.

As A. H. Blank Sees It

A. H. Blank, one of the most progressive exhibitors in the country, is a member of the First National Executive Committee, President of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Iowa, and head of the A. H. Blank Enterprises. He is known as a fighter from the ground up and says what he thinks.

Business is certain to pick up, as the prospects were never better for a bumper crop of corn, and prices are gradually coming up to normalcy.

The public is displaying less interest in motion pictures that it did a year ago, and this is partly due to fewer good pictures during the last six months than at any time in the past three years.

And now the public is becoming more discriminating in the matter of pictures. Patrons of the screen are demanding better and bigger productions. The exhibitor who gives them big pictures will make big money—provided he puts those pictures over in the right way.

It will be necessary for the exhibitor to give more care to his exploitation, and to give the public a better show if he intends to maintain the present admission prices, as the public is going to expect more for its money in the future; or the same show for less money.

We will not get prosperity unless we work for it, and the exhibitor who works hard, studies his public and keeps his crowds pleased will be the one to prosper.

A Staunch Friend

Film Actors to Speak from This Minister's Pulpit

The Rev. Christian F. Reisner, of the Chelsea Methodist Episcopal Church, New York City, has surprised other ministers by inviting motion picture producers and actors to speak from his pulpit. "Yes, I have been criticized for this," he acknowledges, "but I want my people to get in closer touch with those who furnish their entertainment. The church can work in harmony with motion pictures and should use them to greater advantage."

The pastor told how he heard a youth speak "contemptibly" of a certain actress and how he warned him: "Take back what you said or I will make you eat your words." Thus warned—the minister is six feet tall and athletic—the youth hastened to admit he knew nothing at all about the actress. "People must think clean thoughts," the minister says. Richard Barthelmess, a friend of his, will be the first to speak from his pulpit. Others will be invited later.

Exchanges Abroad

Universal is establishing an exchange system in Europe with branch exchanges in all important cities, patterned after Universal's American exchange system, it was announced this week through the Universal home office by Carl Laemmle, Universal chieftan who now is in Europe. It will be under the direct supervision of Universal's Export Department, of which James V. Bryson is manager.

Universal further plans to release pictures in Europe practically at the same time as the American release dates. It has been found that all pictures in production in America get certain advance publicity in European trade and fan publications.

Building Exchange

Fox Film Corporation will soon begin erection of a modern two-story film exchange building in Dallas, on Jefferson street, east and opposite the Jefferson Hotel. The building will cost between $25,000 and $30,000.

The building will be twenty-five feet wide by ninety feet long and will include a projection-room for use in the private showing of films.

Killed in Accident

Abraham Sinna, one of five men killed in an automobile accident near Middletown, N. Y., recently, was a film inspector in the New York exchange of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue. Mr. Sinna had been in the employ of First National for several years and was popular among those engaged in the exchange end of the industry. His home was in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Strike in Cleveland

See No Early End to Battle Between Exhibitors and Musicians

Labor Day brought a severe jolt to Cleveland exhibitors, for their musicians observed the holiday by striking for an increase of $13.50 in salary. In all but one theatre, Reade's Hippodrome, where Manager W. H. Raynor met the demand, the increase was turned down. As a result Cleveland picture houses are without music and a long drawn-out fight is in sight, for both sides are equally determined not to give in.

Every house in the city, excepting the Hippodrome, has been affected. These include the following downtown houses: Allen, State, Park, Stillman, Mall, Alhambra, Strand and all the Loew theatres. Several of these organized impromptu orchestras, while others will show pictures without music.

Manager Fred Desberg, of the Loew interests, speaking for Cleveland exhibitors, made the following exclusive statement to a representative of Moving Picture World on Tuesday, Sept. 5:

"For more than three years our theatres have been paying to our men more than the established union scale. The scale in effect at the time of the walkout was $46.50 a week. We have been paying from $50 to $80 a man a week, according to a man's ability. For instance, a first violinist received more than a second violinist. The union asked for an increase from $46.50 to $60 a week a man. We were willing to negotiate but not willing to accede to their demands, which amount to a 28 per cent. increase."

Loew Returns

Marcus Loew, who went to England to attend the London opening of "The Four Horsemen," returned to New York on Friday aboard the s. s. Berengaria. His coming was the occasion for an unusual celebration. Through the courtesy of city officials the police boat, "John F. Hylan," was loaned to Mrs. Loew, who took a party of friends and prominent film men down the bay to meet the ship at quarantine, and escort it up the river.

On leaving the pier, the party, numbering about a hundred persons in autos, was accorded the honor of an escort of motorcycle police to the Loew offices in the State Theatre building, where a reception was held.

To Open New Branch

James R. Grainger, recently appointed by F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, as his personal representative, has completed arrangements for opening a new Goldwyn branch suboffice in Milwaukee to care for the exhibitors in central and northern Wisconsin.

Situation in Detroit

Scales at Kunsky's Theatres to Be 60, 50 and 60 Cents

The coming season in the first-run houses, of Detroit, promises to be one of the greatest in their history, at least this is the outlook for the next three months. Following is a resume of the situation at the first-run downtown theatres:

Adams: This John H. Kunsky Theatre will adopt 60 cents as the scale for first floor seats, at night, and will maintain this price for all specials, regardless of the attraction. All pictures will be retained for at least two weeks, and if business warrants, for a longer period. Some of the attractions booked are "Loves of Pharaoh," for two weeks; "Blood and Sand," for two weeks; "The Storm" and "Manslaughter," both for at least two weeks.

Madison: Another Kunsky house, where the top price for first floor seats will be held at 50 cents as at present. Most pictures will be held for one week only, longer engagements depending upon their own box-office records. "The Gilded Cage" and "The Eternal Flame" are already booked.

Capitol: Kunsky's latest and biggest house in Detroit will have a scale of 60 cents top for first floor seats and First National attractions will be featured in the main, while the Adams and Madison will take the Paramounts which are contracted for. Some of the coming attractions for the Capitol are "The Masquerader," "The Young Diana," "Slim Shoulders," "Light in the Dark," with a personal appearance of Hope Hampton; "Kindred of the Dust" and "The Bond Boy."

Fox-Washington: Prices at this house for the coming season will be 50 cents top, with big Fox superspecials showing most of the time. Among the bookings for the next few months are "The Fast Mail," "Monte Cristo," "Nero" and "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." It is also possible that the William Farnum and Tom Mix attractions will be shown there.

Broadway-Strand: This house will be strictly open booking, its future policy depending on the outcome of the suit filed by Phil Gleichman against Famous-Players, alleging abrogation of contract. Prices will be 50 cents top.

No Permanency

With the passing of M. H. Markowitz as Buffalo, N. Y., manager for United Artists, there have been forty-nine managerial changes in the local Film Row in the past two years and eight months, according to one manager who has kept a careful tally.

Coming Conventions

September 12—M. P. T. O. of New Hampshire and other New England exhibitors at the Hotel Arlington, Boston, Mass.

September 18, 19 and 20—M. P. T. O. of Iowa and Nebraska at Omaha, Neb.

September 25—M. P. T. O. of Kansas at the Hotel Broadview, Wichita, Kas.

October 10 and 11—M. P. T. O. of Michigan at Flint, Mich.

SheaJoinsHodkinson

To Work for Exploitation of Exceptional Productions

J. Frank Shea, until recently general manager of the Grey Circuit of Theatres in Maine and New Hampshire, has joined the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and will work with Harry McDonald in the special sales work to be given extraordinary productions distributed by the Hodkinson organization.

Shea has had much experience both in exhibition and distribution of pictures and has covered most of the world for the Fox organization.

Resigning from Fox in 1919 Shea joined the S. A. Lynch Southern organization.

Seeing the great possibilities in such entertainment as being offered by the Hodkinson Corporation with the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade being presented with the latest Castle production, "Slim Shoulders," he was induced to join the Hodkinson forces.

Look Out for Him

J. G. Von Herberg, of Jensen & Von Herberg, Seattle, has sent out a warning that a confidence man is travelling around the country representing himself either as Mr. Von Herberg or his brother.

"This man is visiting exhibitors in the East and Middle West and also business men in other lines, and I have received three communications in the past few days from those he called upon. He has been active around Detroit and New York during the past two weeks. The man's object is to raise money under false pretenses and persons in the industry are warned against him."

United Artists Sues

Allegations Against Grombacher and Phelps Taken to Court

The case of United Artists Corporation versus Ray Grombacher and the Liberty Amusement Company, of Spokane, Wash., to compel the latter to play a number of contracts said to have been repudiated, has been set for September 11, the opening of the fall term of court. The suit is for the amount of $2,700. Exhibitors and exchangemen are greatly interested.

United Artists also has suit filed against O. Phelps, of the Liberty Theatre, Hillsboro, Ore., which will come up shortly. Phelps, it is alleged, contracted to play "Way Down East" and gave his check in payment. Later, he stopped payment on the check and refused to play the picture according to the terms of the contract, it is said.

Suit is further contemplated against several other northwestern exhibitors, pending the outcome of the above suits. Charles R. Harden, manager of the Seattle exchange, says he is determined that exhibitors signing contracts must live up to their agreements or go to court.

Seem Villainous

Gives Reasons Why American Films Are Banned in Mexico.

Explaining why Mexico has banned American films, Roberto A. Turnbull, of Mexico Cines, S. A., Mexico City, says it is because Mexicans are always portrayed as infamous creatures in the American-made pictures.

He says that it is nearly always the case that when certain film companies wish to show a traitor, a kidnapper, a coward or general "movie villain," that a Mexican type is chosen.

Mr. Turnbull states: "We have bad things in this country, the same as everywhere else, but we have many beautiful things, too, worth noticing and on the screen. But it seems that the American Producer can't find any other type to do the dirty work in pictures but their next door neighbor, the Mexican. I am an ex-cameraman from Los Angeles, having worked there for eleven years with many of the producing companies of that city.

"Here in Mexico I am one of the three owners of the only up-to-date Studio and laboratory in Central or South America. How would the Americans like to see films made by this country where the American was always the scoundrel whose villainies were his downfall? Or to see pictures where one Mexican star would sneeze and twenty-three Americans fall dead, which is about the average number killed by the American star in such cases."

News from the Producers

By C·S·SEWELL

Finally Decided

Rumors as to the distributing company which would handle the second production starring Strongheart, the wonder dog, were laid at rest this week by the announcement from Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and confirmed by Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin, the producers, that the production, "Brawn of the North" would be released on the First National franchise basis.

Almost seven months were spent in the actual filming of the story of the second starring vehicle for the dog that made such a remarkable impression in "The Silent Call." The story was written especially for Strongheart by Mr. Trimble and Miss Murfin, and the locale was selected with special attention to the scenic possibilities.

Mary Carr Essays New Mother Role

Mary Carr, the Fox actress who won international fame with her admirable portrayal of the sad and mistreated mother in "Over the Hill," and whose following successes, "Thunderclap," a 1921 special, and "Silver Wings," a special on the current season's program which recently completed a summer run on Broadway, New York, have been distinguished by similar character delineation, is to be seen in an entirely different "mother" part in "Penzie," Paul H. Sloane's screen version of Florence Bingham Livingston's novel, "The Custard Cup," now under production at the New York studios of Fox Film Corporation, with Herbert Brenon directing.

The scenes with the children promise to be among the favorite episodes of the picture. Director Herbert Brenon has a particular fondness for building up "kiddie scenes" and takes infinite pains with the juvenile actors. Miriam Battista, Jerry Devine and Ernest McKay, who impersonate the three youngsters, respond quickly to the sympathetic direction of Mr. Brenon.

It is hardly necessary to remind anyone of Mary Carr's fitness for mothering such a brood. Her children, in the story, do not use her name of Mrs. Penfield, but have shortened it affectionately to "Penzie." While there is a well defined dramatic thread running through the plot, the principal strands are composed of amusing sequences of character comedy, shot through with a wholesome and entertaining optimism.

To Film in East

Jesse J. Lasky announces that George Melford's next production for Paramount will be "Java Head," by Joseph Hergesheimer. It is largely a sea story and the author will collaborate with Waldemer Young in preparing the scenario. Mr. Melford will bring his entire company East and film scenes near Salem, Mass., and in the Long Island studio. Leatrice Joy, Jacqueline Logan and Raymond Hatton will be among the featured players. "Java Head" is the fourth production announced to follow the "First Forty-One," starting in February. The other three are Pola Negri in "Bella Donna," Gloria Swanson in "His American Wife" and Mary Miles Minter in "Sacrifice."

Barclay to Co-Star with Conley

Don Barclay, one of the best known of stage comedians, has been signed by Jack White to be co-starred with Lige Conley in forthcoming Mermaid Comedies, for Educational release.

Barclay and Conley, who has, Educational says, already achieved recognition as one of the coming funny men of the screen through his work in Mermaid Comedies, are both said to be decidedly distinctive in style. Their work together in "Look Out Below," first of the new series of Mermaid Comedies, promises well for their future pictures, it is stated.

"I believe that Don Barclay is one of the most promising comedians in pictures," said White. Barclay is a Flo Ziegfeld "discovery," having been "found" by the boss of the Follies shortly after Barclay discovered the famous zig-zag hair part.

Pathe Gets Another Series of "Shorts"

Pathe announces a contract with the Kiser Studios, Inc., of Portland, Oregon, for the distribution of a series in one or two reels, to begin late this fall. These are described as striking a fresh note of absorbing realism. The first three subjects are "The Price of Progress," "The Royal Chinook" and "Fleeced for Gold."

The Kiser Studios, Inc., enterprise represents—according to George Morton Vinton, director of distribution—the development of an idea in motion picture production which has the hearty support of the heads of a number of West Coast industries. "This," said Mr. Vinton, "is owing to the fidelity and thrilling realism with which gigantic operations of men and machinery are depicted in motion picture productions designed solely for public entertainment.

"'The Price of Progress' shows the giants of the forest being felled and the daring chances the men take in getting the timber out. The Sunday Oregonian says of this series: 'These pictures are both scenic and educational, but they are infinitely far removed from the drab and dry variety that we are often compelled to sit through.'"

Reports Improvement in Business

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, returning recently from a trip that took him as far west as Cincinnati and south to Louisville, brought reports of a spirit of decided optimism manifested by exhibitors in Pennsylvania, Kentucky and West Virginia.

"There is no question but that business in these States is picking up," said Mr. Frank. "Evidences of the improved outlook were apparent in every city and town I visited, and they manifested themselves in more than one way. Not only are exhibitors willing to pay higher prices for big productions than they would have considered a year ago, but several regard business prospects as justfying the building of new theatres or the reconstruction or improvement of existing houses."

A Fast-Moving Trio

Three Educational pictures began a run in the Loew Circuit in and about New York City on September 4, setting a record for one distributing organization. The pictures are "A Hickory Hick," a Christie comedy, featuring Bobby Vernon; "Fair Enough," a Christie comedy, featuring Dorothy Devore, and "Spooks," a Mermaid comedy, with Lige Conley and Elinor Lynn.

With several prints of each in use on the Loew Circuit, there is a total of 150 days' bookings for these recent Educational releases.

Playgoers Present Three in September

Playgoers Pictures offers three releases during September, widely different from one another. First is "The Isle of Doubt," September 10, a six reeler offering in which Wyndham Standing is starred, adapted from a novel by Derek Bram, combines some of the characteristics of a high-class society drama with the adventure and lure of the tropics. The cast also includes Dorothy Mackaill, George Fawcett, Warner Richmond and Marie Burke. Hamilton Smith directed the production. Release is set for September 10.

September 17 will see "Face to Face," another six-reeler, which combines a criminal case with a romance. Marquerite Marsh and Coit Albertson are featured, with Richard Stewart, Edna Holman, Frances White and Joseph Marba playing the other roles.

In "The Man She Brought Back," released September 24, appear Earle Fox, Doris Miller, Frank Losee, Donald Russ, Harry Lee, Frederick Burton and Charles Mackay. This is a five-reel feature, directed by Charles Miller. It is a drama of the Canadian Northwest Mounted, but differing from the usual run of tales of that country.

Film Highly Praised

Exhibitor praise of "The Timber Queen," with Ruth Roland, reports Pathe, exceeds in volume of direct testimonials of this nature any previous spontaneous response in the history of recent Pathe serials. By way of example, a letter from Manager C. E. Walker, Princess Theatre, Santa Ana, Cal., is quoted in part:

"I opened this serial on August 3 to the biggest audience I have ever had for a serial. I wish also to state that the second episode, which I ran on August 10 and 11, did the biggest business I have ever done with any serial on the second episode."

Pollard's Debut

September 17 marks the debut of Snub Pollard as a full-fledged star in two-reel comedies. The initial stellar vehicle of this popular Hal Roach player is an eccentric comedy, "365 Days," distributed by Pathe. The cast includes Noah Young and Marie Mosquini. The story deals with the comic experiences that the heirs of an eccentric old man have to face to get his fortune. Pollard and his family live in a captive balloon which gives the star good opportunities for clever comedy work.

Vignola Returns to Studio

Robert G. Vignola and his company have returned to Cosmopolitan studio, New York, after a two week's location trip in and around Stamford, Conn., doing exteriors for his forthcoming production, "Adam and Eva." This is the Guy Bolton-George Middleton comedy which Mr. Vignola is now doing with Marion Davies in the leading role.

The scenes which Mr. Vignola has just completed required a farm of an unusual topographical nature. This farm was found near Stamford, and with the owner's permission it was improved and rebuilt to fit the story. About two weeks were spent on this location, during which the entire cast was utilized, among those taking part being Tom Lewis. Louella Gear, Leon Gordon, William Norris, T. Roy Barnes, Amy Ongley, William Davidson and Edward Douglas.

"Sherlock Holmes" Is October Release

Goldwyn's second release for the new season—John Barrymore in "Sherlock Holmes," to be released Oct. 9, has, Goldwyn says, many angles of appeal to exhibitors and the picturegoing public aside from the name of America's outstanding dramatic genius in the title role of a picture about the most famous character in the world's detective fiction.

It has a cast of players in support of the star whose record of past performances on stage and screen is alone sufficient to induce exhibitors to book the film and fans flock to it, it is stated.

The leading woman is Carol Dempster, heroine of many D. W. Griffith productions, who rose to unusual heights of screen acting in "Dream Street," it is said.

Changes Name

The company picturizing "The Life of Abraham Lincoln" announces a change in its corporate name from Rockett-Naylor Productions, Incorporated, to the Rockett-Lincoln Film Company.

David H. Naylor, Jr., retired from all connections with the company and is succeeded by R. R. Rockett as president.

Lichtman Touring and Being Feted

Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, distributors of Preferred Pictures, seems to be the real "globe trotter" at this particular time, of the picture industry.

Mr. Lichtman only recently returned from a tour of the country that took in all sections except the South, and last week he left for New Orleans to hold a conference with E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company and owner of the Lichtman Corporation franchise for the eleven southern states.

Mr. Lichtman expected to return to New York the middle of this week, but it is more than likely that he will not return for another week, as he is booked for honors at the hands of Harry Charnas and the exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan beginning next Sunday.

This western trip is an exceptional tribute to Mr. Lichtman. Beginning Sunday, September 10, he will be the honor guest at a dinner of exhibitors in the William Penn Hotel at Pittsburgh. The next night a similar honor will be accorded him in Cincinnati, on Tuesday there will be another at Detroit and on Wednesday the tour will wind up with a banquet in Cleveland. Mr. Charnas, who is one of the livest independent distributors in the country, conceived the plan out of recognition of Mr. Lichtman's accomplishment in organizing a complete national distributing organization and getting his first release with full advertising accessories, into the exchanges before release date.

Schulberg Details His Feature Plans

"Detailed plans for our features to be released shortly are maturing rapidly," announces B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures and vice president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, which is handling the distribution of his products.

"About six weeks after the general release date of 'Rich Men's Wives,' set for September 1, we will have ready for the public our second offering, the screen version of Wilbur Daniel Steele's prize story, 'Ching, Ching Chinaman,' which Tom Forman is directing. The complete cast, headed by Lon Chaney, Harrison Ford and Marguerite De La Motte, has already been announced.

"The release of the Gasnier production of 'Thorns and Orange Blossoms,' featuring Estelle Taylor, Edith Roberts and Kenneth Harlan, will follow closely upon 'Ching, Ching, Chinaman.' Work on Bertha M. Clay's famous novel is already well under way.

"The next feature on our first year's program will be 'Are You a Failure?' This is a screen original written by Larry Evans, a magazine writer of wide repute, which is bound to be a powerful film story. Among the juvenile types will be Harrison Ford.

"We will probably schedule 'The Hero,' Gilbert Emery's distinguished play, in which Richard Bennett is starred, to follow 'Are You a Failure?' We recently closed negotiations with Sam H. Harris for the screen rights to this remarkable play, which the New York critics called the best dramatic work of 1921."

Capitol Praises "Makin' Movies"

The Capitol Theatre showing of "Makin' Movies" beginning Aug. 27 started the second of Pathe's Johnny Jones Series of "juvenile business" comedies on its career. Following the success of the previous Johnny Jones release at the big Broadway house, "Makin' Movies" is reported to have received a warm welcome by the management. All indications point, says Pathe, to even heartier exhibitor and public approval of this comic juvenile aspect of the film industry than has been won from the start by its predecessor, "Supply and Demand," which has caused the entire series to be liberally booked in single contracts all over the country, it is reported.

In the case of "Makin' Movies," the Hollywood preview was represented in West Coast newspaper reviews, Pathe says, as "destined to break several long records for two-reel pictures." It is said to have literally set the Film Colony buzzing with frank desire to congratulate Producer McDonald, Director Mason N. Litson—and especially those very youthful screen celebrities, Johnny Jones and Gertrude Messinger. All of this pre-release enthusiasm, Pathe reports, has immensely stimulated bookings of the entire series of Johnny Jones Comedies.

Reviews of "Makin' Movies" at the Capitol Theatre are reported to be fully bearing out the high opinions expressed by writers who attended the Hollywood preview.

Effective Plan

To secure the best results from its East and West Coast studios, Paramount will be governed by the predominating locale of each production, the Long Island studio being used for Eastern and the Hollywood studio for Western atmosphere. For example, Jack Holt filmed the Eastern scenes for "Making a Man" in New York, then went to California for the remainder, while for "Java Head" George Melford will come East for important scenes. Pola Negri will go to the coast for her Egyptian and desert scenes.

Three Specials Head Fox Releases

Three specials head the September release program announced at the New York offices of Fox Film Corporation this week. They are "Monte Cristo," scheduled for publication September 3; "A Fool There Was," for September 10, and "Nero," for September 17.

"Monte Cristo," directed by Emmett J. Flynn, began an indefinite pre-release engagement at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, August 21, following the closing of a long summer run of "Silver Wings" at the Apollo Theatre.

"A Fool There Was," the Emmett J. Flynn directed version of Porter Emerson Browne's stage play of that name, has already had the Broadway showing at the Strand Theatre. "Nero," produced at Rome, Italy, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, completes its New York run at the Lyric Theatre, September 1, after a successful summer business which began May 23.

Charles Jones will be seen in "West of Chicago," the screen adaptation of the story by George Scarborough and directed by Reeves Eason. The picture will be released September 3. "The Yosemite Trail" is the title of the Dustin Farnum vehicle. It was directed by Bernard J. Durning and is the screen adaptation of Ridgwell Cullum's story by Jack Strumwasser. It was originally announced under the title of "The One Way Trail." Release date is September 24.

Howard Mitchell directed the William Russell feature, "The Crusader," which will make its debut to the exhibitor September 10. "All Wet" is the Al St. John two-reel special comedy for September. A Katherine and Jane Lee re-issue, "Kids and Skids;" two Sunshine Comedies, "Puppy Love" and "The Tin Bronco;" and two Mutt and Jeff cartoons, "Court Plastered" and "Nearing the End," complete the list.

New Title for Film

The title of "Blood Will Tell," the Tom Mix picture which originally was titled "A Kiss in the Dark," has been changed again. Its present title is "Do and Dare"

New Standard

"The Enchanted City," the work of art by Warren A. Newcombe, which has created an impression because of the forecast it carries of greater things for the screen, will be released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., by arrangement with Howard Estabrook.

This single-reel subject was shown on Broadway, at the Rivoli Theatre, and following this run has received from magazines, newspapers and trade publications the most enthusiastic praise as a new type of picture which, as one critic expressed it, "establishes a new standard of comparison for moving pictures."

"The Enchanted City" is a love fantasy, the story of a dream told by a youth to his beloved as they sit on a cliff by the sea. The story is told with a series of beautiful paintings by Mr. Newcombe, which some believe mark a far stride beyond anything of this sort that has been done before in motion pictures.

Strong List of Universal Films

Universal's five feature releases for the month of September, several of which have had pre-release showings, stack up as one of the strongest group of releases ever put out by that company on the same month's schedule, according to reports from Universal.

At the head of the September releases stands "The Storm," a Jewel production, starring House Peters, which, it is said, is breaking box-office records from coast to coast. Its pre-release engagements included three separate runs on Broadway. Next in the list of Universal features is "Top o' the Morning," a Gladys Walton special, from the famous stage play by Anne Caldwell. Following "Top o' the Morning," there will come "The Galloping Kid," with Hoot Gibson; "Caught Bluffing," with Frank Mayo, and "Confidence," with Herbert Rawlinson.

"The Storm" was directed by Reginald Barker. Virginia Valli, Matt Moore and Joseph Swickard play the chief supporting roles. "Top o' the Morning," the Universal release of September 4, was directed by Edward Laemmle, following his completion of "In the Days of Buffalo Bill."

The Hoot Gibson picture, "The Galloping Kid," follows "Top o' the Morning." It was directed by Nat Ross.

On September 18 Universal will release "Caught Bluffing," Frank Mayo's new picture. It is a feature production directed by Lambert Hillyer. Edna Murphy plays opposite Mayo. In "Confidence," the Herbert Rawlinson picture to be released September 25, the picture going public will have the first opportunity of seeing Harriett Hammond, popular bathing beauty, in a leading woman role. It was directed by Harry Pollard, maker of "The Leather Pushers."

Film Completed

Camera work on "St. Elmo," the screen adaptation of Augusta Evans' famous novel, has been completed at the West Coast studios of Fox Film Corporation under the direction of Jerome Storm, according to advices from Hollywood.

The production stars John Gilbert, who gives an excellent portrayal of the Count of Monte Cristo in the giant Fox special, now playing an indefinite run on Broadway. "St. Elmo" will be an early fall release.

The members of the cast, headed by Bessie Love in the feminine lead, are Warner Baxter, as Murray Hammond; Nigel Brullier, as Alan Hammond; Barbara La Marr, as Agnes Hunt, and Lydia Knott, as Mrs. Thornton. Gilbert essays the part of St. Elmo Thornton. The continuity was prepared by Jules Furthman.

"St. Elmo" has been on the stage for many years, where it scored as a great drama. On the shelves of book-stores it is known as one of the best-sellers of its day.

Preferred Will Film "The Hero"

"The Hero," which was unanimously proclaimed by New York's dramatic critics as the finest play by an American author in 1921, has been purchased by Preferred Pictures, Inc., of which B. P. Schulberg is president, for immediate screen production.

Negotiations for the play have been on for some time and were finally closed with Sam H. Harris this week by Al Lichtman, vice-president of Preferred Pictures and president of the Al Lachtman Corporation, which is distributing the Preferred product.

"Hungry Hearts" to Be at Capitol

"Hungry Hearts," the Goldwyn picture, is to receive its first pre-release screening at New York's Capitol Theatre soon. This is the photoplay of East Side immigrant life in New York, made from the volume of short stories by Anzia Yezierska, bearing the same title as the picture. E. Mason Hopper directed the photoplay. He also directed "Dangerous Curve Ahead."

The chief characters in "Hungry Hearts" are said to be acted with remarkably life-like coloring by Rose Rosanova, E. A. Warren, Bryant Washburn, Helen Ferguson, George Siegman, A. Budin and a dozen others.

S. L. Rothafel, manager of the Capitol Theatre, is arranging for one of his special presentations in connection with "Hungry Hearts."

On First Program

The opening program at the beautiful new Strand Theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., on August 26, included two subjects released by Educational, "Syria, Land of Religious Hatred," a scenic subject, and "Nothing Like It," a Christie comedy, featuring Dorothy Devore.

"Blood and Sand" Due September 10

On September 10, Paramount releases two of the biggest productions on its fall schedule. They are Rodolph Valentino in Fred Niblo's "Blood and Sand," and the Cosmopolitan production, "The Valley of Silent Men," with Alma Rubens.

Paramount points to the records "Blood and Sand" already has made during pre-release engagements in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles in justification of its claim that it will prove one of the greatest box-office attractions of recent years. In New York, at the Rivoli, all house records for a single week, both in receipts and attendance, were broken. The second week of its run it broke the house record for a second week by nearly $6,000, and so heavy did the demand continue that it was found necessary to run it a third week simultaneously in both the Rialto and Rivoli.

Cosmopolitan's "The Valley of Silent Men," which has just finished an engagement at the New York Rialto, has been hailed as an ideal picture of the Canadian Northwest, with its endless snows and forests. The story was written by James Oliver Curwood and the scenario by John Lynch. The director was Frank Brozage, producer of "Humoresque" and "The Good Provider."

F. B. O. Will Film Doyle Book

"The Hound of the Baskervilles," the film version of the famous Sherlock Holmes novel of the same name, with Eille Norwood in the role of the great detective of fiction, will be an early release of the Film Booking Offices of America, announces that company. It has been tentatively set to follow the first Ethel Clayton production, "If I Were Queen" on the F. B. O. program.

This Sherlock Holmes picture is of feature length and, it is said follows closely the original story by Sir A. Conan Doyle, which is published as a complete novel. Because of this latter fact, states the F. B. O. the title has a definite box office value, inasmuch as the story is known under its own title and not simply as "one of the Sherlock Holmes stories."

As transcribed to the screen "The Hound of the Baskervilles" is one of the most unusual mystery stories ever made, states F. B. O.

Booked Extensively in New England

"Making Hubby Like It," an Artcolor picture distributed by American Releasing Corporation, has been extensively booked in the New England and Philadelphia territories. This includes the Black New England Theatres; Famous Players Houses in New England; W. P. Gray Circuit and Empire Theatres, Inc., of New England; and Commerford and Stanley of Pennsylvania.

"Making Hubby Like It," was produced, photographed, printed and developed in natural colors by the artcolor process.

Books Lloyd

Edward L. Hyman has selected the Harold Lloyd five-reeler, "Grandma's Boy," as the feature for the third anniversary celebration at the Brooklyn Strand, week of September 10, to be presented with a special program and personal appearance of stars and city officials. This Associated Exhibitor's attraction now running at the New York Strand, is in its seventeenth week at the Symphony in Los Angeles, and enjoying long runs elsewhere.

Jane Novak Stars in F. B. O. Film

"The Snow Shoe Trail," a Chester Bennett production, starring Jane Novak, is the current attraction offered by the Film Booking Offices of America, the picture being scheduled for mid-September release. "The Snow Shoe Trail" is the third of the F. B. O. "Box Office Ten," with which that company is opening the fall season.

Following "Colleen of the Pines," this new Chester Bennett production will, it is stated, further enhance Miss Novak's reputation as a star in her own right. It is a story of the Northwest which combines a goodly number of society scenes in the earlier reels.

Klein Joins F. B. O.

Harry Berman, general manager of distribution of Film Booking Offices of America, announces the appointment of Joseph Klein as manager of the F. B. O. Chicago Branch, to succeed C. R. Plough, who has resigned. Another addition to the Chicago staff is Louis P. Kramer, who has resigned as manager of publicity for Universal's Kansas City office to direct the publicity and advertising at the Chicago Exchange of the Film Booking Offices of America.

Nearing Release Date

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that three more of its "big twenty" productions for the coming season have reached the editing and titling stage, completing the entire first list of releases with the exception of the last in the series, "The Strangers' Banquet," which Marshall Neilan is producing in association with Goldwyn, with Hobart Bosworth in the lead.

The three productions now being edited are "The Christian," "Gimme" and "Broken Chains."

To Be Feature

"The Hound of the Baskervilles," a screen adaptation of the famous Sherlock Holmes novel by Conan Doyle, will be the feature attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York, during the week of September 10. It is a Film Booking Offices of America release, which has been scheduled for early distribution through F. B. O.

More Fashion Shows to Exploit "Slim Shoulders"

Hodkinson says the instantaneous success of the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade idea in which six mannequins and a couple interpreting the new ballroom dances accompany the latest production of this popular star has made it necessary for the Hodkinson company to assemble three units to take care of the big key city bookings. One company of six New York models appearing in charming frocks and evening gowns will be seen at the Capitol Theatre the week of September 3. Starting the new season, a second company has been selected to re-open the big Delmonte Theatre in St. Louis, this engagement running nine days from September 1 and a third company begins a tour of Michigan and surrounding territory on September 10.

The New York company goes to Newark immediately after completing the engagement at the Capitol and from there goes to the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn for a week's engagement. Following the engagement in St. Louis that unit will go to Springfield, Ill., Terre Haute, Ind., Evansville, Ind., Sioux City and Davenport, Iowa and Omaha, Nebraska.

The third unit after completing the Capitol Theatre, Detroit, showing goes to the Capitol Jackson, Michigan, Desmond Theatre, Port Huron, Michigan, Regent Theatre, Bay City, Michigan and then to Lansing and Grand Rapids.

Harry McDonald, of the Hodkinson office, who conceived the idea of the units, making it possible for exhibitors to offer patrons the double attraction of a highly entertaining motion picture and an advanced showing of fashions as seen by Mrs. Castle during her recent trip to Europe, states that ten companies could start out the first of September and continue playing the biggest theatres of the United States for a period of three months without interruption, so great has been the demand for the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade with "Slim Shoulders."

Traveling ahead of each unit will be a publicity man to arrange for department store tie-ups and various other publicity stunts that will center interest in this Hodkinson entertainment when it reaches the key cities.

As soon as the three companies of mannequins are outfitted and sent from New York three additional companies will be assembled for bookings that bring the companies all through the south and southwest. Two companies will be assembled in California to cover the coast cities and travel as far east as Colorado. A New England company will start about October 1 and tie-up with the personal appearances of Mrs. Castle with her orchestra during that month in the principal cities of New England.

This will make a total of nine companies that will be working by the first of October with eighteen advertising men, nine ahead of the Fashion Promenade companies and nine going along with these units, stirring up interest all over the country in "Slim Shoulders" and the fashion show.

Marion Davies' Film to Run at Criterion

Beginning September 14, Cosmopolitan Productions will present "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, for an indefinite run at the Criterion Theatre, New York. The theatre will be closed for several days prior thereto while the interior is being changed, including the installation of twelve loges and enlargement of the orchestra pit to accommodate fifty-two musicians.

It is announced that the total cost of this production exceeded $1,500,000 and that nothing has been left undone to make it the outstanding film feature of the season. The settings are by Joseph Urban, who has also arranged a prologue in keeping with the splendor of the picture.

There will be a special edition of the novel by Charles Major on which the film is based. Striking posters of Miss Davies have been made by Artists Christy, Leyendecker, Benda and Link.

The scene showing the wedding procession is said to have been the largest indoor set ever constructed, and 3,000 actors were used. To have everything authentic, foremost experts were employed. Cartier furnished the antique jewelry; Dr. Dean, former curator of armor at the Metropolitan Museum, secured the armor; Sir Joseph Duveen, the Gothic tapestry; Mrs. Thurlow designed Miss Davies' fifteen elaborate gowns, and James Murray, fencing master for New York Athletic Club, directed the tournament scene.

The production was directed by Robert G. Vignola and sixteen assistants. The supporting cast includes the celebrated English actor, Lyn Harding, brought to this country for the role of Henry VIII, together with Forrest Stanley, Pedro DeCordoba, Ernest Glendenning, Ruth Shepley, Johnny Dooley, William Kent, George Nash, Macey Harlam, William Norris and Gustave Von-Seffertitz and others.

New "U" Serial

Following its policy of producing serials with educational value, yet filled with thrills and romance, Universal is making a new serial, "Around the World in Eighteen Days." The story is being written by Carl Coolidge. J. P. McGowan will direct it. The star has not yet been announced.

Blackton Film Wins in Brooklyn

J. Stuart Blackton's Prizma color production "The Glorious Adventure," featuring beautiful Lady Diana Manners, said to be the first all-color feature, was well received at the Brooklyn Strand during the past week.

"The dramatic story shows much action from start to finish and a riot of color in every scene," says the Brooklyn Eagle. "At last a new dramatic sensation" says the Standard Union. "Lady Diana Manners enacts a most difficult role with a grace and dramatic appreciation that becomes a revelation," says the Brooklyn Times.

Work Is Started on New Film

Work has begun on Earle Williams' new feature, "You Never Know," and a number of the opening scenes have been shot. Gertrude Astor is playing opposite Earle Williams. Miss Astor, whose clever work in "The Spenders," "The Lion Man," "Through the Back Door" and other successes, is vividly remembered, was selected for her eminent fitness for the part of Miriam Follansbee. George Field, a favorite "heavy," who will be remembered in "Diamonds Adrift," will have the part of Medina, the gun-running South American revolutionist. Robert Ensminger is directing.

T. H. Ince Announces Title Changes

Thomas H. Ince made an announcement this week of the permanent titles of three of his eight forthcoming productions which will be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The picture which has been in production under the title "Jim," from Bradley King's original story, has been titled, "What a Wife Learned."

The picture which has been produced under the working title, "Some One to Love," has been title, "Ten Ton Love."

"The Brotherhood of Hate," which was the working title of a drama, has been finally titled, "Scars of Jealousy."

Selznick Company Well Prepared for New Policy of Big Specials

The announcement made some time ago that the Selznick Pictures Corporation had abandoned the Star Series, or Program Plan of production, and would during the season of 1922-23 make only super special pictures, created a mild furore throughout the industry. It also created a great deal of discussion in which the ability of the company to do the big things which it is setting out to do was a topic frequently referred to.

The formal listing of the company's plans showing that such stories as Sir Anthony Hope's "Rupert of Hentzau," Robert W. Chambers' "The Common Law," Eugene Walter's "The Easiest Way" and others of like calibre are to be transferred to the screen, is likely to start the same discussion anew.

Throughout the industry, from its earliest days, it has been pretty generally known that Lewis J. Selznick, whose name the company bears, is the fountain source of every important policy which the Selznick company undertakes. The decisions on these policies are not arrived at and passed upon in the perfunctory manner all too common in big organizations. It is only after an exhaustive examination of every conceivable detail which has to do with a particular policy that L. J. definitely makes up his mind.

It would seem, then, that the Selznick plan for 1922-23 is best examined by a consideration of just what "L. J." has been doing and what preparations have been made for carrying out the new policy. It is quite a tribute to the head of the Selznick company that a great majority of his associates in the trade—not only exhibitors, but producers and distributors—are satisfied to accept each new announcement from the Selznick offices with the statement: "Well, if he says he's going to do it, he'll do it," basing their conviction upon what the doughty boss of the fourteenth floor of 729 Seventh avenue has done in the past. There are, however, some "slants" of particular interest which are worth uncovering at this time.

There is the element of surprise in the Selznick announcement that the company's plan of producing only specials is one that was long ago decided upon and a plan which has been being worked out in detail for at least three years—surprise, for the reason that the Selznick organization seemed so solidly wedded to the Star Series idea to which they adhered so valiantly and so long. That the plan was decided upon long ago and that systematic preparations for it have been under way for a long time seems apparent, however, upon a little examination of the Selznick company's recent activities.

It will be recalled that in the earlier days of the industry it was Lewis J. Selznick, then identified with the World Film Corporation, who first advocated the presentation on the screen of the type of photoplays which were calculated to have the same kind of box office draft as attractions on the so-called legitimate stage. It was during Mr. Selznick's days with the World Film that many of the big stage successes were first made into photoplays. This would seem to indicate that he has always been rather keen on the kind of screen entertainment which the exhibitor could well afford to make a fuss about—and, after all, this is exactly what is meant by the "super special."

When the present Selznick organization, which comprises as its most active units the Selznick Pictures Corporation and Select Pictures Corporation, the former engaged solely in the production and the latter in the distributing end of the business, was whipped into working shape, Mr. Selznick was confronted with a lot of problems not so easy of solution.

A producing organization qualified to do anything and everything which might be required of it—and to perform its tasks with an efficiency calculated to insure not only its own success, but also the success of its patrons or customers—could not be born over night, no matter what the experience of the one man who was bringing it into existence. A distributing and selling organization sufficiently strong to cope with constantly changing conditions seemed equally difficult of establishing. A policy of steady, consistent development, Mr. Selznick says, seemed to be the logical one.

"We were perfectly satisfied to creep a little before we walked," is the way the head of the company put it. "That we didn't do much 'creeping' may have been the result of our having picked up in record time the kind of photoplay attractions with stars like Olive Thomas, Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Owen Moore which the industry seemed anxious to buy from a selling organization built around the same chaps who had handed them Norma and Constance Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady and others."

The trade has seen the development of the Selznick producing unit under the personal supervision of Myron Selznick, who has always borne the title of president of Selznick Pictures Corporation. With almost unfailing regularity each Selznick picture has been just a little bit better than its predecessor. For a year or more, L. J. Selznick says, the producing unit has been "rearin' to go" with the bigger things which were in prospect. David O. Selznick, now vice president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, has contributed materially to the restlessness and the desire to do the bigger things ever since he has been working "across the organization," touching practically every angle of the business pertaining to both producing and distributing.

Opens at the Criterion

"Love Is An Awful Thing," Selznick's latest Owen Moore comedy special, opened an engagement at the Criterion Theatre, New York, on Sunday, September 3. This is the second of the Owen Moore pictures to be honored with a Broadway showing in the past several months. The other was "Reported Missing."

"Love Is An Awful Thing" was directed by Victor Heerman, who is also the author of the story. The cast includes, in addition to Owen Moore, such well-known players as Marjorie Daw, Snitz Edwards, Alice Howell, Charlotte Mineau, Katherine Perry and Douglas Carter.

The Twelve Best

David O. Selznick with commendable bravery offers the following as his idea of the twelve most beautiful and capable motion picture actresses. However, with true cinema and managerial diplomacy he lists them alphabetically.

They are: Theda Bara, Constance Bennett, Constance Binney, Marjorie Daw, Elsie Ferguson, Lillian Gish, Corinne Griffith, Elaine Hammerstein, Mae Murray, Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge and Alice Terry.

Theda Bara to Return as a Vamp But One With An Honest Purpose

Ask the Oklahoma oil man who Theda Bara is and what she's like and he will have a prompt response. So will the leading spirit in any one of those bee-busy California chambers of commerce; so will the gold miner in the Yukon, the Southern colonel, the Parisian, the Londoner. They all know about Theda—the publicity man has told them much and they've seen her in the movies—and you can't stump them with any questions of that sort. No sir, Theda is a vamp.

The writer had the vamp idea firmly fixed in his curious mind when Miss Bara said, "Why certainly, come right up; I'll be glad to see you." He intended, in his ignorance, to watch her through cautious, narrowed eyes and study her vamping methods. If she wouldn't vamp him, at least she might be led into a recital of coquettries and conquests. Great stuff for the flappers. And publicity tips for exhibitors.

But Miss Bara welcomed the delegation of newspapermen with just the proper shading of cordiality and formality, like any accomplished hostess. No play of the big dark eyes or intriguing shrugs of elastic shoulders. No display of temperament or affectation. No exoticism of dress. A wholesome, likeable, conventional woman. The visitors sought to still a tumult of surprise within themselves. Could this be Theda Bara, the vamp?

You've guessed the answer. Miss Bara is known as a vamp because of the roles assigned her in the past, the publicity given her by eager space-grabbers. Actually, she's a much misrepresented person. For instance, the story went forth that she was born in the African desert. "Just where?" an enterprising cub reporter inquired of her publicity man. "Two blocks south of the Sphinx," he replied.

Now you can imagine the opinion of her held by a Japanese who wrote her as follows: "May I honorably request an honorable photograph of your honorable self as honorably naked as possible?" Yes, in the eyes of the world Miss Bara is an out-and-out, unqualified, expert vamp. She's been one since she introduced a new type of trifler with affections in "A Fool There Was," a few years ago.

In the Miss Bara, who entertained the newspapermen, it was hard to visualize the Theda Bara of the "movies." The experience was one long to be remembered. Anecdote and reminiscence and humorous quip came from her lips like a series of sparkling waves. She is an accomplished, deep-thinking conversationalist. Most of the talk was about vehicles for her future attractions for Selznick.

"What will be your first vehicle for Selznick?"

It developed that it hasn't been selected as yet. Both Miss Bara and the Selznick scenario department are going over a great number of manuscripts with meticulous care. Most of them are the product of writers whose names are known wherever English is read.

"Of course, it will be a vamp role," one of the visitors suggested.

"But the story of a vamp with a definite, worthy purpose," was the determined reply. "No more vamping for selfish ends. Let the vamp I play be a woman who thinks it necessary, for the benefit of others, to pose as a 'horrible example.' Don't some of our present-day flappers, male as well as female, need some such object lesson?"

"But does the public still want you vampish?" somebody asked.

"My tour of personal appearances, as you know, lasted for months and took me all over the country," Miss Bara explained. "Each time I appeared in a theatre I asked the audience if they wanted me in the old roles. A perfect storm of applause signified approval. Then I asked to hear from those holding different views, and a very few clapped. That was enough for me. My question had been answered far more emphatically than I ever dreamed it would be. Everywhere I went it was like that.

"Out in Tulsa, Oklahoma, the crowd was so great that I had to mount a wagon in the street and speak. Billy Sunday was preaching there then and the newspapers said I broke up his meeting. Incidentally, afterwards I ran into the evangelist in another city. As I walked out of my hotel I found him speaking in front of it. He stopped talking when he saw me, and for one dreadful moment I visualized him holding me up before the crowd as an example of utter vampishness. I think it must have amused him to see how rapidly I disappeared from the scene, but he didn't say a word. Later I met him and came to like him exceedingly."

"Why can't some of your New York friends give you some good pointers on what type of picture to appear in?"

"New York people, and especially New York audiences, can't tell you what will please a majority of people in the country," Miss Bara said. "New Yorkers are extremely sophisticated. Some of the stuff that draws them won't do at all in the smaller cities and the towns. That's a point all producers will do well to remember. I learned it beyond the shadow of a doubt on my tour."

"Then just what will your pictures be like?"

"Something like this: A Long Island society setting, fast set. The chief character will realize the irreparable harm of the life they are leading and sacrifice her reputation by affording them a 'horrible example.' She will outdo them in extravagances until they learn the lesson. This sort of a story will allow me to wear the gowns women like to see me in."

Nowadays people forget quickly. There is always some new thing to occupy their attention, some new idol for them to admire. But, although she has been out of pictures for two years, the people haven't forgotten Theda Bara. In fact, her absence from the screen has whetted their desire to see her again. Her personal appearances established that.

Now she is returning and everybody is possessed with an insatiable curiosity as to what characters she will play. Not the least curious of all are the exhibitors, and they will deem it glad tidings to learn that Theda Bara will return as the vamp unexcelled, but the vamp with a goodhearted purpose in view, in vehicles that will be artistically embellished to the nth degree. Hard work, says Miss Bara, is the keynote to success. Her ambitions and enthusiasms should carry her far.

—SUMNER SMITH.

A Promise of Good Pictures

An impressive feature of the Selznick Pictures Corporation 1922-23 season announcement is the calibre of the authors who will furnish the stories for the forthcoming productions. They will be:

"Rupert of Hentzau," by Anthony Hope, a sequel to his "Prisoner of Zenda."
"The Common Law," a Robert W. Chambers story.
"The Easiest Way," Eugene Walters' famous play.
"The Reason Why," by Elinor Glyn.
"Wine," William MacHarg's Cosmopolitan Magazine story.

OWEN MOORE IN SELZNICK'S "LOVE IS AN AWFUL THING"

A Film Event

Unquestionably the return of Theda Bara to the screen will be one of the most interesting film events of the coming year. Both the public and those within the motion picture industry will be interested in the outcome. Such interest can mean nothing else but good business for such exhibitors as show the Theda Bara production which is on the 1922-23 Selznick schedule of "Sixteen Only."

Theda Bara is one of the really famous film personages. At the height of her popularity she was perhaps the most interesting of all the motion picture stars. At any rate she attracted most of the attention. Miss Bara was a favorite with the public and they will want to see with what success she takes up where she left off.

Industry Now Is Surmounting Its Toughest Grade

By J. S. WOODY
General Manager, Selznick

The industry has just reached the crest surmounting the toughest grade it has ever been asked to climb. As we pause at the top and look back over the arduous journey we have just completed, it prompts the hope that we will never again be compelled to make a similar pilgrimage.

Looking forward, it is quite apparent that we now stand on the very brink of the greatest cycle of prosperity ever conceived in the brain of the most confirmed dreamer. There is no great secret as to what will bring about this sudden and propitious change in conditions. It can be explained by three simple words—truly great pictures.

I predict for the season of 1922-23 the greatest improvement in the quality of motion picture entertainment attained since the advent of the multiple reel. The public will enjoy one great attraction after another, well into the New Year; all of our old patrons—augmented by a host of new friends—with increasing confidence will attend the theatres until the box-offices literally hum with activity.

More Product

Select will not be confined to the releasing of the Selznick product and is at the present time engaged in preliminary arrangements for the handling of a series of specials to be made by three of the really well-known directors of the industry.

They will produce independently, and though each of them has been heretofore noted for lavishness in production, it is promised their pictures for Select will exceed all previous efforts.

J. S. Woody's Crew Set For New Records

During the early part of the current year, J. S. Woody assumed the general management of Select Pictures Corporation. Since Mr. Woody's return to the organization (he having been a former cabinet member of the same company) few changes have been made in the selling ranks. Select Pictures is proud of its representation on the selling line, as well it may be.

Henry E. Wilkinson ("Wilkie") will be found in charge of the Albany branch. Mr. Wilkinson isn't a new-comer to the distributing business and is also a veteran exhibitor, having among other positions of equal importance, held down the managing directorship of the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, subsequently coming to the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation as sales manager.

"Ezell" is a password in film circles down South—it's known from El Paso to Jacksonville and when it's mentioned southern showmen hang out the welcome sign. John T. Ezell, who guides the destinies of the Select Atlanta exchange, is an old time Selectite.

Benjamin P. Rogers has been in charge of Select's New England affaisr for several years.

Harry E. Lotz not only is a pioneer in the picture selling business, but is a Select pioneer with it, having held the position of western division manager for the corporation some three years ago. He returns to the organization and incidentally to his old home town, Buffalo.

James U. McCormick is just plain "Mac" down in the "tarheel state," where the trade in general has come to look upon him as a fixture. Mac opened the Charlotte office for Select.

Edwin Silverman grew up with the Chicago branch from boyhood.

Otto P. Hall, in Cincinnati, is in new territory, having spent the major part of his fourteen years in the picture business in New England.

Albert W. Eden, familiarly called "The Antelope" out West, where he previously did time in the service of Fox, Select and Realart, is a stranger in a strange land in Cleveland.

Every exhibitor in Texas knows Diaz Callahan.

James S. ("Jimmie") Hommel came back from the big fracas in France a first lieutenant and his friends still call him "The Loot." Los Angeles exhibitors will recall the smiling Jimmie as a Select salesman. Later Jimmie handled Robertson-Cole in Pittsburgh and now returns to his old stamping ground. Denver, which he has adopted as his home.

James O. ("Jimmie") Kent is a Select landmark in Detroit; he opened the place some five years ago and is still the boss.

Dudley ("Dud") Williston has a wide and favorable acquaintance in the Hoosier State.

James B. ("Jim") Reilly is absolutely brand new in Kansas City, but he isn't new to the branch managerial end of the picture business.

Oren F. Woody's able hands will hold the Select reins in Los Angeles.

Frank M. DeLorenzo, Milwaukee branch manager, won the promotion to this post some time ago because of the wonderful record he established in the selling ranks.

John E. (Jack) O'Toole is probably the best known branch executive in the middle and northwest country. In Minneapolis, where he holds forth as Select director-in-chief, Jack numbers among his personal friends every exhibitor in the territory.

Frederick F. Goodrow needs no introduction to the trade in the Gulf Coast section.

Henry Siegel has been director of sales in the New York territory since Select's inception.

Nat Beier, who sells the New Jersey territory and has his office in Siegel's New York exchange, is a veritable Select trade-mark in the "skeeter state."

Charles D. (Charlie) Touchon has been doing big things for Select down in Oklahoma for a long time.

To exhibitors out Omaha way, there's only one Sherman T. ("Steve") O'Brien. His wholesome Irish smile could be just as easily dispensed with as Farnam street in Omaha.

Max Milder has been Select's Philadelphia representative from the day they opened for business until now.

David J. Selznick, who is at the wheel for Select in Pittsburgh, has won a myriad of friends in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia since he took over his executive responsibilities in the "smoky city."

James H. Curran, who presides over Portland, Me., for Select, is another former salesman who elevated himself from the ranks to a managerial chair.

Floyd Lewis arrived a long time ago. He's been at the head of St. Louis exchange organizations for ten years

Edward C. Mix, branch manager in Salt Lake City, is playing a return engagement there after having handled Select in Los Angeles for a long time.

Ralph B. Quive comes back to his native San Francisco after a lapse of three years. Ralph opened the old Vitagraph Company offices in Frisco and later introduced Realart pictures in that territory.

Paul R. Aust, of Seattle, is one of the youngest exchange executives in the business.

Louis (Tiny) Reichert's exhibitor friends, who are a legion all over the country, will be truly glad to learn of his return to Washington territory.

"Silent" Phil Selznick and Claude C. Ezell are the "fence riders" of the Select outfit, serving as field representatives.

SAM E. MORRIS
President, Select Pictures, Ltd., of England

Distribution of Selznick Films Now World-Wide

General Foreign Representative Sam E. Morris has been unusually successful in disposing of foreign rights of Selznick Productions. At the present writing there is not a place on the map which is not sold up except a few small countries in South America.

During the short time he has been abroad Mr. Morris has concluded contracts for the sale of the foreign rights of Selznick and Select Pictures in France, Belgium, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Rumania, Albania and Turkey.

These sales, with the exceptions aforementioned, make Selznick Pictures 100 per cent sold throughout the world.

"Al" Did It

In this section are a number of sketches of Selznick and Select officials. Credit is due their originator, Al Herschfield, a regular member of the Selznick Art Department, for his faithful transference to these pages of the well-known features of this popular group of executives.

As to Moore

It has been the practice of the Selznick company to market the Owen Moore pictures as individual attractions and in that sense they have been "specials." Under the new arrangement, pictures starring Owen Moore are to be bigger and better than they have been before.

Mr. Moore has been developed as a leading farce comedy player. His early release in the "Sixteen Only" will be entitled "A Dollar Down," which promises to poke a lot of good natured fun at the practice of living just one jump ahead of the sheriff.

MORRIS KOHN

Treasurer of Select Pictures, Now Playing His Second Engagement as a Business Associate of L. J. Selznick. He Was Identified with Mr. Selznick and Select Some Years Ago in Company with Adolph Zukor. He Was President of Realart Until It Merged with Paramount.

Exceptional Cast for "Pet" Picture

It is being quite freely said around the Selznick offices that "Rupert of Hentzau" is to be the "pet" picture of the year. The enthusiasm which all those connected with the producing organization have for the picture has probably been transmitted to them by President Myron Selznick, who seems to have come quite honestly by it through his personal contact with the distinguished English author and the intimate inside information he was given about the story.

Mr. Selznick came back to the United States with a cast definitely outlined in his own mind; he had been told many interesting things which had to do with the writing of the story and—most importantly—following his visit with the author, he had personally traveled through the beautiful country which is being reproduced on the screen as the background for the highly romantic action.

It is entirely right and proper to say that the Selznick Company's "Rupert of Hentzau" has been "in production" for the past six or eight months. Ever since his return from Europe, Mr. Selznick has had a staff of men and women at work on the matter of locations, settings and costumes. The value of their research work, conducted not only in this country but abroad, will be greatly in evidence when the finished photoplay is shown.

There are few even casual readers of fiction of adult age today who have not read and enjoyed both "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Rupert of Hentzau." And those who have read the books still retain in their mind's eye vivid pictures of the dashing Rupert, the romantic Rudolph, the charming Queen Flavia and the other splendidly drawn characters. The biggest successes of their respective careers would seem to be assured Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien, Owen Moore and Conway Tearle through their being cast for the big Sir Anthony Hope picture.

Selznick Films That Please the "Boss"

Enthused by the reception his productions are meeting with these days, Lewis J. Selnick is looking forward to the future with the cheeriest optimism. The latest product of his company is scoring a distinct hit at the Criterion Theatre, New York City. This, Owen Moore's special, "Love Is an Awful Thing," is drawing crowds, despite hot and rainy weather, audiences finding in it plenty of good American humor.

"Reported Missing," Owen Moore's previous special, is scoring a success wherever it is shown, if reports from the producers and exhibitors may be believed. That "Love Is an Awful Thing" has gotten off to such a flying start may be due largely to the appeal of "Reported Missing."

Enlarge Scope of the Selznick News

Selznick News expects 1922-23 to be a banner year for its news reel. Added to the already big camera personnel of 392, Selznick News has developed plans to extend its pictorial news gathering activities to isolated regions of Europe, which have figured economically and politically all out of proportion to their geographical significance.

E. B. Schoedsack, supervising cameraman for Europe, has just completed a tour of England, France and Germany, where he completed arrangements for securing timely and exclusive news subjects. It is expected that persons of international prominence will attend the world-wide exposition this fall in South America, and Selznick representatives will cover the mammoth economic pageant thoroughly.

Perhaps the greatest element which has brought Selznick News to the eyes of 18,000,000 persons weekly in the moving picture theatres distributed through this country, Australia and South America, is the unique titles used. This idea was conceived by David O. Selznick, younger brother of Myron Selznick, in charge of production at the United Studios. These titles simply perpetuate the importance attached to the stories at the time they "broke."

"One Week of Love" First Special

The first of the Selznick Specials to be released on their 1922-23 program will be "One Week of Love." This production, now in the process of cutting, titling and editing, co-stars Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle. It has been, according to reports from the West Coast, lavishly produced and the West Coast Studio executives of the Selznick Company believe it to be one of the most pretentious offerings the organization has ever had.

This information is to some extent confirmed by stills which have reached the New York office. These pictures show extreme care has been taken in the matter of costume and the selection of locations has been exceptionally good. The sets are out of the ordinary and the new lighting system installed by Myron Selnick has had an excellent effect in an artistic way.

Newsy Bits

Dr. W. E. Schallenberger, president of Arrow, spent a busy week commuting back and forth between New York and Philadelphia. Right now Dr. Schallenberger, Ray Johnson and other Arrow officials are working overtime preparatory to the world premier showing of "Night Life in Hollywood" at Dave Starkman's Woods Theatre in Atlantic City on Monday, Sept. 11.

Among those who attended the opening of George Eastman's $5,000,000 theatre in Rochester on Saturday night, Sept. 2, was Lester Scott, sales manager of C. C. Burr's Affiliated Distributors, Inc. And speaking of the Eastman opening reminds this writer that one of the featured short subjects on the initial happened to be "Out of the Inkwell," a clever cartoon released in the independent market. The Grand-North Exchange of Buffalo booked the picture.

Other state righters whom the writer spied at the Eastman opening were Bob Murphy of the Murphy-Filkins exchanges of Buffalo and Albany, and Sydney Samuelson of the Grand-North exchange, Buffalo. By the way, Sydney Samuelson went to New York this week to confer with Bobby North.

As this writer hurriedly was making his entry to Cleveland some one hailed us. On gazing about we discovered that the ballyhoo was being pulled by none other than Morris Schlank, president of Anchor Film Corporation of Los Angeles, who had just terminated a four-day business trip there. He left for Philadelphia, from where he will go to Washington, Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and back to Los Angeles. Mrs. Schlank is accompanying her husband, who is selling territorial rights on his many pictures.

J. Charles Davis, 2d, assistant to Dr. Schallenberger of Arrow Film Corporation, was in Atlantic City this week exploiting "Night Life in Hollywood" preparatory to its premier in that city next Monday night. Following the opening Mr. Davis will go to Colnmbus, O., where that picture will be especially shown to the Ohio Board of Censors prior to its opening at Doc Horator's Alhambra Theatre in Toledo, O., on Sunday, Sept. 17.

Sydney Samuelson, Buffalo manager of Grand-North Exchange, is president of the F. I. L. M. Club there. Most of the officers of that club are State righters.

David Mundstuk, who formerly operated the Strand Exchange in Detroit, seems to be having his hands full. Mundstuk, so the story goes, sold his exchange to certain exchangemen, who are now trying to get an injunction restraining David from interfering with their business.

Herman Rifkin seemingly beat George Fecke to it, for announcement comes from Producers' Security Corporation that the Eastern Film Distributors, Inc., of Boston bought the New England rights to "The Country Flapper," starring Dorothy Gish and Glenn Hunter.

Lou Baum, vice-president of Equity Film Corporation, who is on the road disposing of rights to "What's Wrong with the Women," writing from San Francisco to the editor of this department, says that he finds everybody hurrahing for independent pictures.

WHILE indications for the forthcoming season never were more promising for the independent exchangeman, the fact remains that most of those operating such distributing enterprises are agreed that some sort of radical change in the release of state rights pictures must be affected next year. Road salesmen return to their home offices with healthy contracts, but in most every case they add the information that had the exhibitors been informed last July or early last month just what sort of pictures the independents would have for Fall release they could have secured greater business. As it is, exhibitors tie up with program exchanges, leaving only a few open dates for independent box office attractions.

IT was a moment of personal gratification when a leading exchangeman operating exchanges in Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Detroit informed this writer that "Moving Picture World was the only trade paper with a backbone and the only one that the exhibitors seeking independent pictures read and considered." This exchangeman added the statement that he had clipped the statistical table published in Moving Picture World's Independent Number of last July, announcing the State right releases for the 1922-23 season, had copies of it reprinted and mailed the table to every exhibitor in the territories where he does business.

THAT carefully prepared announcement, he said, has been responsible for many important bookings. But perhaps we had better let the gentleman himself do the talking, so here goes:—

"Nothing more progressive or more beneficial to the state rights exchangeman or exhibitor was issued than that announcement. I carefully reprinted it in its entirety. Of course, I could acquire territorial rights only to a few of the pictures listed, but, nevertheless, the moral effect the table had on exhibitors in this territory was worth one thousand times the price of a year's subscription to the publication. It convinced the independent exhibitor that the independent market had progressed and that it was about to release big productions that could compete with the much-advertised pictures of the program companies. That announcement was the best advance agent any independent exchange could have had. Keep up that sort of stuff. It's what the market needs."

THERE always will be competition in the film business. No one or two or three concerns ever will monopolize the business. The strength of the independent exchangeman and producer is rapidly increasing. That is because both are paying more attention to the box office and sparing no effort to serve the exhibitor and incidentally the public. And that is as it should be. But national distributors of independent pictures owe it to exchangemen and exhibitors to announce their next season product sufficiently in advance to allow both to leave time open for the exploitation and exhibition of those pictures.

THE independent exchangeman is interested in the proposition of getting dates. The exhibitor in making money on pictures he books. The national distribution of these pictures should make the welfare and interest of both his concern. Only by timely competition can the independent market ever attain the goal that those of us in it hope it will some time in the near future reach. This is a problem that deserves careful thought. We have collected considerable data and within the next two weeks we hope to comprehensively detail the situation as it exists in every territory.

THE big independent pictures with exploitation possibilities are are being grabbed by exhibitors on the alert for exploitable product. This demand for independent pictures has prompted many exchangemen to make the observation that "if independents don't clean up this year, they'll never go over."

THE exchange list when published by Moving Picture World in two weeks will furnish the trade with many agreeable surprises. Most of the "fly-by-nights" and "blind promotion exchanges" have disappeared. Where to no one seems to know and cares less. But there still are a few, but VERY few.

WHEN an exchangeman reaches the point that he knows better than the exhibitor what the latter's theatre patrons want or do not want, then is the time to close the doors. Your business is selling pictures to the exhibitor, and not dictating to him or telling him how he shall or shall not run his house. That's his business.

Trade Notes

Warner's announcement of last week that it would release 18 big pictures this coming year certainly has started the exchange men talking and exhibitors watching for announcement of the nature of these productions.

Take it from Fred Cubberly, who now manages the Finkelstein & Rubin exchange in Minneapolis, the go-to-the-movie-theatre week in that section was a complete success and brought thousands of extra dollars in rentals to the alert exchangemen. The biggest State righters went over big, too, according to exhibitor statements.

The former Merit Exchange in Buffalo is now known as Murphy-Filkins Exchange, with Bob Murphy holding down the reins in excellent shape. The exchange has moved to larger and more spacious quarters in the Grand-North Exchange building, Franklin street, Buffalo. The Grand-North Exchange occupies the front part of the building.

Frank Zambrino, who operates the Unity Film Exchange in Chicago, covering all of Illinois and Indiana, has stored in a large supply of pictures for fall release. Frank reports that the syndicate house managers there have finally come to realize that the independent exchanges have big box office possibilities.

True Thompson, of True Exchange, Dallas, Tex., is yelling for more pictures like "Burn 'Em Up Barnes." Thompson road-showed the picture through his territory, and is said to have grossed his biggest money on this feature, starring Johnny Hines.

Nathan Hirsh of Aywon Exchange of New York has put in an unusual supply of pictures and is having no trouble getting dates. His son, Melvin, is now in active charge of the popnlar exchange.

Exchangemen seem agreed that William Fairbanks, Ben Wilson's new western star, who takes the place of Jack Hoxie, of whom very little is heard lately, is a box office magnet. It's no wonder that Arrow is having little trouble disposing of rights to the Fairbanks series. The first picture of the series, this department understands, has been completed, and the second will be ready for delivery to Arrow about the 20th of the current month.

Exchanges throughout the conntry, handling Arrow pictures, are observing Arrow Month during September and, judging from the annonnce-ments embodied in theatre ads in Middle Western cities and towns, Arrow pictures already are getting a good break.

In reply to a telegram sent by an exhibitor-reader of this department to the writer, while en route, relative to the whereabouts of Harry Shermau, this department will refer the correspondent to last week's issue, in which appeared the report that he is in New York planning a new distributing venture. There were no further details available at the time, however.

Federated Exchanges of America, Inc., evidently are going into the short-subject business on an elaborate scale, for this department has been informed that when negotiations now under way are completed Federated will release a series of nine different short subjects.

Offers "Othello"

The big continental production, "Othello," will be handled in this country by Export & Import Film Company in conjunction with David P. Howells. This production is now being cut and re-edited and it is said a Broadway run has been assured.

Emil Jannings, star of "Deception," "Loves of Pharaoh" and other big successes, is the featured player.

Arrow's Big Fall Special Is "Lost in a Big City"

Still another big special is announced for Fall release on the independent market. Arrow Film Corporation will distribute "Lost in a Big City," adapted from the stage melodrama of the same title, which was written by the well-known actor, N. S. Woods, proved to be one of his greatest successes and was a big box-office bet for a number of years.

A point of especial interest to exchangemen is the fact that this picture was made by Blazed Trail Productions, the organization which produced the big success, "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and also stars John Lowell, who achieved such success in that production. In fact, the same successful combinations are found in the two productions, for L. Case Russell is responsible for the scenario and Baby Ivy Ward appears in an important role.

In charge of the directorial reins is George Irving whose box-office successes are legion, and Joseph Settle is handling the camera. The supporting cast includes Jane Thomas, who had a prominent role in "Silver Wings," also Charles Beyer, Charles Mackey, Leotta Miller, James Phillips, Edgar Keller, and Evangeline Russell, a newcomer, who is said to possess unusual screen possibilities.

The same elements which made the stage melodrama a big success should also enable "Lost in a Big City" to duplicate this success on the screen, as it has love, romance, adventure, action, thrills and suspense.

Arrow in Four Sales Dealings

W. Ray Johnston, vice-president of Arrow Film Corporation, this week sold "Nan of the North," starring Ann Little, to Federated Exchange of Pittsburgh for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Progress Pictures Company of Chicago for Northern Illinois and Indiana; Standard Film Service of Cleveland for Ohio and Michigan, and Liberty Film Exchange of Washington for District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia.

Between You and Me

A CERTAIN exchangeman from the Middle West this week came to town to look over pictures for next season. While discussing grosses, this showman—and he is every bit that—had occasion to impart some very interesting information. He said that some months ago he looked at Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy?" He hesitated about buying, but Lou Baum, Equity's sales manager, finally "sold" him. It was one of those reluctant deals. But the attitude toward the picture has changed, for, according to this exchangeman, he has grossed more on this picture than on all four other big features he is releasing.

Joe Brandt, director of Federated Exchanges, left last week to perfect that organization. There are two territories still open and Joe hopes to land these before he returns.

A lot of funny things are happening in independent circles in New England. One particularly well-known exchangeman, who has been given the preference by distributors, had a rather bad break last season, but despite this his backers supported him to the letter. There seemed to be no end to the bankroll. They endorsed all his buys. But now they are balking—and for no reason whatsoever, with the exchangeman so disgusted he has openly denounced his "angels" and is looking for another bankroll.

A director, who has seen better days, is now ambitious to produce on his own—provided a certain young lady whom he has inspired with a "starring bug" succeeds in landing the necessary bankroll. This director has promised to star the girl provided she gets this money. Meanwhile, he is sitting pretty, waiting for the "angel"—and the job.

Two Big Films for Producers Security

Producers Security Corporation reports the completion of the second Smith-Caldwell production, "The Jelly Fish," which is now being cut and titled. Wyndham Standing is starred and is supported by Dorothy Mackaill and J. Barney Sherry. Hamilton Smith directed and Arthur Cadwell is the cameraman. Part of the action was filmed in the beautiful mountain regions of Kentucky.

Another release announced by Producers' Security is "Mr. Bingle," said to be Maclyn Arbuckle's greatest starring vehicle. It is adapted from a widely read story by George Barr McCutcheon, which was produced on the stage as "Daddy Dumplings." Mr. Arbuckle also was the star of the stage production. This picture will be state righted and already the New York and Northern New Jersey rights have been purchased by Sam Zierler. A special campaign will be launched on this production.

Eight States Sold

Eight states were sold this week on the new series of Hallroom Boys' Comedies. The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, which is state righting this series of two-reel gloom chasers based on the adventures of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom, announces the signing of contracts with Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle, whereby that company secures distribution rights to Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico, Washington, Oregon, Montana, and Idaho.

New Company Offers Series of Reissues

The Picture-Art Sales Corp., Inc., a newly formed company, announces the immediate release of a series of eight re-issued features starring prominent players. This will be followed later by similar groups.

Maurice Pivar, head of the company, announces the first lot consists of "Two Men of Sandy Bar," by Bret Harte, starring Hobart Bosworth; "The Place Beyond the Winds," starring Lon Chaney and Dorothy Phillips; "The Co-Respondent," adapted by Ralph Ince from the stage play; "The Bugler of Algiers," starring Rupert Julian; "Fast Company," starring Lon Chaney and Franklyn Farnum; "From Broadway to a Throne," with Carter DeHaven; "The Sundown Trail," starring Monroe Salisbury and "The Terror," featuring Raymond Wells and Virginia Lee.

It is further announced that while these pictures have been re-edited and re-sub-titled, they are being re-issued under their original titles.

Second C. B. C.

C. B. C. is about to begin production on "Only a Shopgirl," the second of its series of big box-office specials. Joe Brandt is now on the Coast going over the details with Harry Cohn. The cast will consist of prominent players with no one featured. This picture is adapted from a Charles R. Blaney stage success.

Graf Here with New Film

Max Graf, vice-president and supervising director of Graf Productions, Inc., of San Francisco, arrived in New York this week to consummate releasing arrangements for "The Forgotten Law," the first of a series of feature productions to be filmed by the new organization.

The story was adapted from Caroline Abbott Stanley's novel, "A Modern Madonna."

The photoplay has been enacted by a cast including Milton Sills, Cleo Ridgely, Jack Muihall, Alice Hollister, Alec B. Francis, Ednah Altemus and little Baby Muriel, with James W. Horne directing.

Mr. Graf expects to remain in New York about three weeks in order to complete his releasing and sales arrangements and to make a survey of the literary market for material for future productions to be made by his organization.

Burr Offers New Two-Reel Series

With the announcement this week that producer C. C. Burr had signed Raymond McKee, popular "legitimate" actor and male lead to Shirley Mason in over a dozen pictures, to appear as the male star of the new series of two-reelers to be known as "All-Star Comedies," this producer gave form to his beliefs that the two-reel comedy when produced by an efficient organization that understands public and box-office psychology is invaluable to the exhibitor and deserving of concentrated thought of production.

With this thought in mind, Mr. Burr intends making comedies that are all-star in every respect. Burr's success with the Torchy Comedies, featuring Johnny Hines are said to have been notable, and judging from his plans it is said the All-Star Comedies will probably equal the record made by the "Torchy Comedies."

Production on this new series has already been started at Burr's Glendale Studio under the guidance of the same production staff that was responsible for the success of the Torchies.

Assured of First Run Bookings

The deals recently made by Warner Brothers with representative showmen throughout the country assure first run bookings of the entire series of seven forthcoming Warner pictures, the Warners state.

Finkelstein and Rubin will show the pictures throughout their chain of theatres in Minnesota and North and South Dakota; Balaban & Katz will give the pictures first run showings in Northern Illinois; Spyros P. Skouras in St. Louis; A. H. Blank in Iowa and Nebraska; H. Lieber in Indiana; Independent Film Corp., Phila., is negotiating with the Stanley Circuit; A. M. Fabian in Northern New Jersey; Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, throughout Canada; Franklin Film Company, Boston, in the New England states; Skirboll Gold Seal Productions in the state of Ohio; Joe Skirboll in West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania; L. K. Brin in the Northeastern states; E. G. Tunstall in Wisconsin; S. & O. Pictures on the west coast; M. Mitchell throughout the south.

The seven pictures include "Rags to Riches," and "Little Heroes of the Street," featuring Wesley Barry, "The Beautiful and Damned," the F. Scott Fitzgerald novel; "Main Street," by Sinclair Lewis; "Brass" the novel by Charles G. Norris; "A Dangerous Adventure," with Grace Darmond; "Little Church Around the Corner," by Marion Russell.

Weiss Brothers New Film Nearly Ready

Under the supervision of Adolph Weiss, the work of preparing the feature at present titled "Destiny," is nearing completion. The task of editing and titling this film has been entrusted to Katherine Stuart, responsible for the cutting and titling of "After Six Days." Mark Toby, Greenwich Village artist, is preparing a series of artistic paintings to be used in conjunction with the film. The production, in point of scenic investitures, is said to be extremely rich. It is the intention of Weiss Brothers to present this picture at a special Sunday evening showing in one of the leading Broadway theatres, with augmented orchestra, special music and an appropriate prologue. The purpose of this showing will be to secure bids from the various big distributing organizations, as it is the belief of the executives of Artclass Pictures Corporation, as well as others who have seen this film, that it will prove one of the outstanding special attractions of the coming year.

Warners Begin Two More Specials

Harry Rapf and S. L. and Jack Warner have begun production of "Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce and have also started on "The Beautiful and Damned," the novel by F. Scott Fitzgerald.

The cast of "The Beautiful and Damned" will be headed by Marie Prevost and Kenneth Harlan, and will include such favorites as Tully Marshall, Louise Fazenda, Allen Percy, Clarence Burton and Jimmy Morrison. Of this number, Marie Prevost, Louise Fazenda and Jimmy Morrison have previously been starred.

Sidney Franklin will direct "Brass." The cast of this picture has already been announced.

Buys Special

Phil Goldstone, who recently arrived in New York with a print of "Deserted at the Altar," has sold the rights to New York and Northern New Jersey to the Capital Film Exchanges which is arranging a special campaign for this production.

"Arrow" Month

According to reports, "Arrow Month" is going over with flying colors. J. E. Segal of Commonwealth reports bookings in New York at the Loew theatres and Fox City Theatre on "Back to Yellow Jacket" and "Headin' North," also on "A Motion to Adjourn" at the Loew theatres and Newark Theatre in Newark, N. J., and an Eddie Lyons' comedy at the U. S. Theatre in Hoboken. Good reports are also being received from other exchanges.

Oldknow Buys Warner Films

Oscar Oldknow of the Southern States Film Company of Atlanta, while in New York last week, acquired the territorial rights to the entire James B. Warner series being State righted by East Coast Productions, Inc., of which Franklyn Backer is the head. He will release the first two of the series, "Flaming Hearts" and "Big Stakes," immediately.

Export and Import News

An agent of a German producing concern came to New York last week with samples of pictures that firm is turning out. The agent sought to negotiate an American distribution tieup. The pictures were far below the standard and the visitor will probably depart from these parts next week a wiser and more learned man as to what America seeks in the way of film entertainment.

Quality Films, Ltd., of London has completed a new series of pictures being produced under the direction of George A. Cooper.

George Ridgwell, director of a number of Stoll pictures, including the "Sherlock Holmes" series, has signed with B. & C. Productions, for whom he first produced. He will direct pictures for the new historical incident series.

British film men are much interested in the invasion of American stars of Europe, judging from reports that are coming from London.

African Films, Ltd., of Johannesburgh, South Africa, has acquired the South African distribution rights to "Orphans of The Storm," "Way Down East," "Dream Street," "The Love Flapper" and other D. W. Griffith's features.

Italian film men are optimistic concerning the future of the industry in Italy, for capitalists are investing extensively in the picture business. For a time production was virtually at a standstill in Italy owing to a scarcity of money.

Pathe-Consortium Cinema of France is extensively exploiting "L'Affaire dur Cirque Bellini," The Heart of An Acrobat, starring Sansone. This picture was made in Germany, according to reports, by Josef Delmont.

Another Sale

A further sale of the Equity production, "What's Wrong With the Women," is reported this week by Louis Baum, who is at present in San Francisco on a tour of the independent exchanges. Daniel Carson Goodman's production will be distributed in California, Nevada, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands by Progress Features of San Francisco who will back the production with a big campaign. With this sale "What's Wrong With the Women" is now well past the halfway mark.

Backer Sells Warner Picture

The Franklyn E. Backer series of unusual Westerns, starring J. B. Warner, has been sold for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Quality Film Corporation of Pittsburgh, of which Harry Lando is president. The Lando Film Distributing Company has also bought this same series for Ohio and Kentucky.

The territory on this series is being closed up rapidly, Jack Von Tilzer, general sales manager of East Coast Productions having just closed with G. A. Wedig, who controls the All Star Features of Detroit, for all of the state of Michigan except the upper peninsula. Mr. Elfelt, who was in New York to confer with Mr. Backer for several days, has returned to the West Coast, where he will continue to direct Warner.

Rocks' Second

Joe Rock is now completing his second picture for Federated Film Exchanges of America. It is entitled "Aladdin" and is a satire on the Arabian Nights' tale. Billie Rhodes is in the cast.

Exhibitors and 'Changemen Endorse World Release Tip

"Not until the national State rights distributors make definitely known their product in July or early August, for the following season, will the local State rights exchangeman be able to properly compete with the program company."

That, in substance, is the observation of seven representative and enterprising State rights exchangemen interviewed by a representative of the State rights department of Moving Picture World in five different cities during the past two weeks. This statement confirms the situation pointed out by this department in its Independent Number in July. In fact, that number was purposely issued in order to give the exhibitor an idea of what the market would have to offer this coming season.

Since then this department has been besieged with letters of praise from exchangemen and exhibitors, who were cognizant of the situation. One exchangeman from Seattle wrote that that "step and suggestion was the greatest made in the history of the independent market."

Now such men as Sydney Samson, of Grand-North, Buffalo; Harry Charnas, who operates the Standard Exchanges in Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh; Lou Berman and Tony Luchese, of Philadelphia; Fred Cubberly, of Minneapolis; Arthur Bromberg, of Atlanta; George Fecke and Sam Grand, of Boston, and Frank Zambrino, of Chicago, agree that only until such time as the independent distributor announces several months in advance what he will have to offer the following season can the local exchangeman properly compete with the program companies.

Business generally is improving, but had the big features that will soon be ready for release, been announced earlier in the year, exchangemen agree that they would have obtained considerably more dates than they will get because of late announcements. Thousands of exhibitors in this country are desirous of booking worthwhile independent pictures, but because of the uncertainty of the releases, they are forced to tie up with national program companies, leaving a comparatively few open dates for independent productions.

Al Lichtman, judging from reports pouring into exchanges handling his product, is in for a big year, for the bookings on his initial Ben Schulberg picture, "Rich Men's Wives," are exceedingly heavy. Particularly true is this in New York state, Pennsylvania and Ohio, where the picture has either played or will play the best houses.

Joe Brandt, of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, and managing head of the Federated Exchanges, who is on the road visiting the various exchanges, is the latest film man to come forward with the statement that independents are winning more and more prestige with short subjects.

Clarence Bricker, director general of the Brinker Productions, Inc., which will produce a series of two-reelers starring Frankie Lee, left New York this week for the Coast, after having completed all distributing arrangements with East Coast Productions, Inc.

Independent pictures of merit all will be given a chance for showing at the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago and vicinity, according to exclusive information that has come into the possession of this department.

Ed A. Wheeler, well-known in film circles, and popular, too, as an exploitation man, has taken over control of the Penn Film Service of Pittsburgh, 1010 Forbes street, that city. Mr. Wheeler took active charge Monday, September 4.

Independent film men throughout the country observed Labor Day, and despite the railroad problem, few of them spent the holiday at their homes.

Al Lichtman and several of his officials left New York late this week for Pittsburgh, where they will be the guests of Harry Charnas of Standard Film Service on Saturday night, September 9. Mr. Lichtman will also visit several exchange centres.

The railroad situation in the Middlewest is working havoc with independent and program exchanges. The delivery and pickup of prints are uncertain. Five big Ohio cities were without shows on Labor Day.

The independent theatre in St. Louis, devoted exclusively to showing independent pictures, has served as food for thought for exchangemen in Chicago and Cleveland. Since the departure of S. Barrett McCormack for Chicago from Cleveland, independents have not been getting the choice dates they used to land when he was at the Allen Theatre.

"Bromberg Week" will be observed in the New Orleans territory. This announcement came to this department this week, and it is understood that the week will fall some time early in October.

Harry Lande, who operates exchanges in Cleveland and Pittsburgh, has lauded many big bookings on his bigger pictures. The current week marked the commencement of Lande's big sales drive in both territories.

Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Film Corporation of New York, has booked Lichtman's Ben Schulberg productions, "Rich Men's Wives," "The Country Flapper" and "Sure Fire Flint" over the Loew circuit. "The Country Flapper" already has played the Broadway Loew houses and reports indicate this picture did a good business at every stand.

C. B. C. Explains Service It Gives Exchangemen

That exploitation co-operation service is not completed but only just begun when a C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation feature is sold is evidenced this week by a statement from that office. In the case of most independent features, when they have been sold in a certain territory, and that territory supplied with stills, press books, and cuts exploitation co-operation ceases and attention focuses on unsold territory.

According to the C. B. C. method, however, this is only the beginning of co-operation, which continues during the entire time any exchangeman or exhibitor releases one of the C. B. C. product—whether it be a feature or a single-real subject—and it is for this reason, according to Jack Cohn that his company has been so successful. His exploitation department, through the medium of letters and circulars mailed every other day keep every holder of a C. B. C. picture reminded that the company must be kept advised of all details of release, exploitation—anything, however small, that is connected with the handling of the feature.

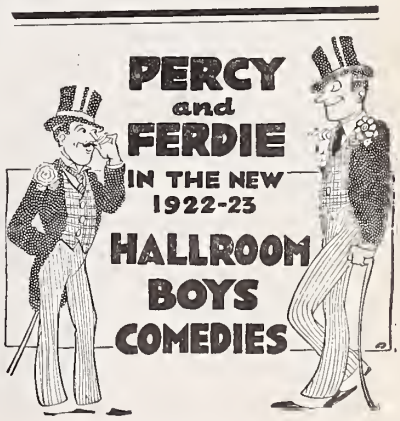
In this way, personal touch is established, and exchangemen are in almost daily communication with C. B. C., sending in to the offices samples and photographs of exploitation, posters, lobby dressing, novelties and everything else. When these are found by C. B. C. to have real value, a sufficient number is secured by them and passed along to every other holder of the picture, offering it as a suggestion that has been found workable by another, and suggesting that it be tried out in that territory also. The system was originated by Esther Lindner, head of the exploitation and publicity department of C. B. C.

Big Sales Made on Fairbanks Series

Among the first exchangemen to avail themselves of the money-making possibilities of the new series of Arrow-William Fairbanks features is A. C. Bromberg, with exchanges in Atlanta, Charlotte and New Orleans, the sale being made after Mr. Bromberg had viewed "Peaceful Peters." Frank Zambrene also secured the series for his Progress Pictures Company of Chicago, and there is said to be a strong demand for territory from exchangemen in many other localities.

An extensive exploitation campaign is being prepared on this series which Arrow considers to be possessed of unusual box-office possibilities. The campaign is very comprehensive and including a costly brochure which is now being distributed, a novelty mailing booklet, a series of sales letters and a trade paper advertising campaign that has already been mapped out in advance, the entire series of ads now being in proof form.

In the first release, "Peaceful Peters," Fairbanks is said to have a picture that suits him to a "T," with plenty of punch and action.



Signs Bessie Love

Bessie Love will be seen in the first three of a series of two-reelers being made by Frederick G. Becker, managing director for little Arthur Trimble. These are part of a series of twelve to be known as "The Strange Adventures of a Prince Courageous" and Miss Love has made a tentative agreement to appear in the entire series.

Garsson Will Film "Way Down South"

Murray W. Garsson has purchased the story, "Way Down South," written by Harry Diggs and Adelaide Leitzbach and arrangements for production are already under way.

Miss Leitzbach is also the author of the stage play, "The Night Call," which was a success on Broadway and will be presented in London in the near future. She is now preparing the scenario for "Way Down South."

The story deals with a present day romance of Southern chivalry coupled with mystery and is said to recall the tales of the Arabian Nights and to contain a wealth of dramatic material.

The action is laid near Albany, Ga., a city known for its picturesque surroundings and quaint structures and the entire company will go there in the near future.

The production will be supervised by Mr. Diggs who was formerly a newspaper man and who for several years has been connected with motion picture enterprises, in producing, distributing and exhibiting branches.

Contrary to the usual procedure, "Way Down South" will reach the screen first and will later be presented as a stage play and also published in book form.

This is only one of the plans which Mr. Garsson has under way. He will produce other pictures with prominent directors and stars and also announced that he will lend financial aid to directors, players and authors, and to help in the distribution and exploitation.

Details of the financing plan will be revealed later. Mr. Garsson has recently moved his office to 522 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"More to Be Pitied" Scores in Chicago

Opening at the Randolph Theatre in Chicago on Sunday, September 3, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation special, "More To Be Pitied," scored a hit. Advertised as the world premiere for this picture, the opening attracted unusual attention and a record crowd attended. Added interest is attached to this presentation due to the fact that it is said to be the first time the Randolph has shown an independent feature, and it was chosen for a holiday week-end.

Despite intense heat the picture played to capacity both Sunday and Monday and is continuing to crowd the house.

J. L. McCurdy, manager of the Randolph, wired to C. B. C.: "No question but it is a big picture. Sunday and Monday played capacity all day." And this despite the fact that the weather was unusually hot.

The showing at the Randolph is announced as but the first of a series of big premieres for "More To Be Pitied." H. A. Lande of Quality Film Corp., has arranged for a run at the Victoria Theatre in Altoona, beginning September 25, and this is to be followed by showings in prominent first-run houses in many other territories.

"Notoriety" Will Be State-Righted

Information from the offices of L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North has set at rest the report that the producers of "Notoriety" were considering the release of that production through a national distributing organization. The producers will go ahead with their plans to sell territorial rights on Nigh's latest special, just as originally planned.

Weber and North have been announcing the independent distribution of "Notoriety" for the past month, although it is understood they were in possession of a number of offers of national distribution from other organizations. The interest shown by outsiders in Nigh's latest output was predicted by the producers when Nigh first signed with Weber North. He was director of "Why Girls Leave Home" and "School Days."

Sol Lesser Forms Accessories Firm

Sol Lesser, with his associates, Mike Rosenberg and Irving M. Lesser, of Principal Pictures Corporation, and with the aid of his West Coast associates, A. L. and M. Gore and Adolph Ramish, has launched a project whereby accessories pertaining to the exploitation and better showing of motion pictures will be manufactured and sold to exchange centers and exhibitors the world over.

Clune Exchange Reorganized

The Clune Film Exchange, which bears the name of W. H. Clune, one of the foremost showmen of the country, has been reorganized with the consent of the Corporation Commissioner of the State of California.

The exchanges are situated in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and are distributing throughout California, Arizona and Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands.

"In the Night" Is Now Ready

Among the independent productions of the year is "In the Night," which Producers Security Corporation announce now ready for distribution. It is a story of mystery and life after dark, a sequence of events that holds one spell-bound from beginning to end. It depicts the folly of the double standard of living and brings home a message to every household.

Big Demand

Demand for sure-fire melodramas brought about another sale of territory on "The Curse of Drink" feature this week. This six-reel release is being distributed on the state right market by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North.

The buyer was the Grand North Exchange of Buffalo and Albany, operating in the upper part of New York State. The sale represents the third consecutive deal in the past three weeks.

Advances Release

Sam Grand, who purchased the New England rights to the Export & Import Film Company serial, "The Jungle Goddess," and who expected to release the wild animal film in October, has now announced he will release the Selig thriller immediately. The newspaper publicity campaign on "The Jungle Goddess' is now well under way. During the past two weeks sixty-one newspapers featured a half page illustrated article on the serial.

Praises Picture

Completes Contract

Kenneth Webb, the director, has completed his contract with the Whitman Bennett organization. During the past two years Webb has handled four Lionel Barrymore features, two Betty Blythe films, three all-star productions and one Rex Beach picture. As yet he has made no announcement of his future activities.

Selling the Picture to the Public

New Angles For Blood and Sand Are Tried Out in Newburgh on First Run

DESIROUS of trying out the exploitation possibilities of "Blood and Sand," Gilbert P. Josephson, manager of Cohen's Opera House, Newburgh, N. Y., was given the picture simultaneously with the New York first run, and Max Rosenfield, Jr.; inventor of the eighteen foot Golem, which was only seven feet high, went up from the home office to help out.

Between them they managed to pull stunts that would have made a less sleepy town giddy for a week and they got some really new ideas.

Of course the lobby was worked on the sketch first shown in this department, using the yellow and red material with the "Plaza de Toros," which puzzled the natives, who thought it was a new star, but then they are still sending G. Washington monthly bills for rent of the headquarters he established there during the Revolution.

The lobby was all the splash we thought it would be, and when the mystery of the plaza was elucidated it was regarded with fresh interest, especially by the man who on being told it meant "bull ring" retorted that he knew all about that—they wore them in their noses.

Pictures To Steal

The still frames carried 136 stills from the play, following the same idea as the Reisenfield houses.

One frame was unglazed and was filled with pictures of Valentino. It was purposely left unguarded that the girls might steal them. The frame had its greatest value when about half of the pictures had been removed, but when they were most all gone the supply was renewed.

This sounds like a rather expensive stunt, but when you realize that each picture was treasure trove, to be shown all the less daring girls, it will be seen that it was reasonably cheap publicity.

Wrote the Ministers

One clever stunt was sending two seats to all of the ministers with a note calling attention to the little-known fact that a chapel is one of the back-stage furnishings of all bull rings, where the toreadors offer prayers for their safety in the coming exhibition.

This "and other touching examples of faith" were played up in the letter and the explanation added that the management supposed the recipient would be sufficiently interested in this wonderful argument against the brutal sport of bull fighting to attend, but that the management wanted to make certain they would be present, and so enclosed the seats.

Four ministers mentioned the fact of the chapel in their sermons the day before the picture opened, and all came and approved.

Club secretaries were advised that owing to the demand for seats, they would be permitted to reserve seats en bloc for their members, and several blocks were set apart, ranging from a dozen seats up.

Beating the Buses

The bus lines to the smaller towns were exorbitant in their demands for advertising space. They rigged up a card with an advertisement for the attraction and hired a darkey to "deliver" it. Not one of the conductors questioned him, and he covered all the routes at a cost of $1.50 in fares. He held the unwrapped card so that it was clearly shown to all, and the stunt worked so well that he was turned loose in the public parks, where permission could not be gained to exhibit signs.

He was all set to explain that he was delivering the card to some address and had merely sat down to rest. He rested the better part of two days, changing his seat frequently, and the police paid no attention to him. This is a new and mighty good stunt.

Edged With Black

The negro seems to have been a very useful factor in the advertising, for another day he was dressed in a bullfighter's costume and paraded the streets with a sign on his back stating that he was not Valentino, and when a circus made a one-day pitch the week before, and people had to pass along the tow path to reach the show lot, he stood beside a sign announcing that "Your show for next week" would be "Blood and Sand" and handing out heralds.

The opening matinee of fanphoto costing $12.50 a thousand was given each girl with bobbed hair, and similar pictures were presented all who solved the familiar cut up puzzle printed in an afternoon paper.

Another paper was given selections from the special score for "Blood and Sand" for its wireless broadcasting with due credit both in the program printed in the paper and in the announcement.

Book store hook-ups and similar smaller stuff made a complete campaign and the house set new records. Some of these stunts are not only new but valuable. Keep them in mind, especially the perambulating car card.

Makes Fine Display on Loves of Pharaoh

This lobby front for "The Loves of Pharaoh" comes from Guy V. Kinimer, of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville. It is the first and we think that it will stand the best, for it would be difficult to find anything better.

The layout is strictly Egyptian and the rich colors give added distinction which the photographic reproduction lacks. Dull reds, yellows and greens should be the colors employed, and be careful not to have these paints too bright or the effect will be garish rather than rich.

Special lithographic advertising was employed around town and much interest was aroused in a newspaper contest as to what the loves of Pharaoh were. His love for the girl was clearly apparent, but the title was in the plural. The pharaoh's love for himself was the correct answer.

THIS MAY BE BETTERED, BUT WE'VE GOT TO BE SHOWN

This was the lobby front used by Guy Kinimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, on "The Loves of Pharaoh," and we certainly would like to see a better one, but we do not believe there is much chance to better this display.

Hyman Has Sergeant for "Hurricane's Gal"

Because the Navy worked with Allen Holubar on scenes for "Huricane's Gal," the recruiting serive is glad to work in with picture managers on a ballyhoo. Even Edward L. Hyman, of the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, gave lobby room to a recruiting sergeant, though he moved him out to the sidewalk for the photographer.

With a special frame of pictures emphasizing the navy angle, and a letter from Holubar, the stunt attracted a lot of attention and helped the hot weather business.

Note the new frame stands Hyman is using. These are of pine, stained and grained, and with a back coming up about half the depth of the frame. They are more stable than the usual easel, and if anyone does run into one, the stand is simply moved a little instead of being knocked over. It is one of the best lobby stunts brought forward in a long time.

The ballyhoo worked so well that Hyman let a girl sell The People's Home Journal in front of the house to help put over the Helen Lynch contest when he played Fools First. The magazine had covered the town with tack cards and the news stand worked in with this stunt.

HOW EDDIE HYMAN SET THE NAVY TO WORK FOR HIM

He gave the recruiting sergeant a "pitch" in front of the Mark Strand, Brooklyn, to work on the Navy angle in "Hurricane's Gal." Note Eddie's new easels on the right. These are new and better than the average in solidity.

Took a Repeat

Because the Hope Theatre, Dallas, did well with the old clothes angle for "Trouble," the manager persuaded the authorities to run a second week and changed the sign in the public square to show Dorothy Phillips, as "Hurricane's Gal," threatening the crowd with a revolver unless they brought in their old clothes.

This gave a second week for the best stand in the city; on one of the public squares where no one could overlook it.

Ran a Whiskey Stream Over the Border Line

Taking the lobby suggestion first shown here, Robertson, of the Palace theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., built up the idea into a knockout.

Somewhere he obtained an old beer keg and hooked this to a concealed hose connection, so that a stream of supposed liquor trickled from the spout into the funneled opening of a pipe line, which supposedly ran "over the border" into the tub located on the United States side of the line. That is why he has the keg elevated. It gives him a higher level so that the fluid will run over of its own weight.

The suggestion of the lobby was strong, and it brought the feature more forcefully to the attention of the playgoers than any still lobby that could be devised. It is simple and space saving, but it surely is a cleaner-up.

Not One, But Six

Recently we suggested that Leon J. Bamberger, the Paramounteer in Toronto, must keep a scrap book, since he used a stunt tried out something like a year ago by J. W. Sayre, and reported at that time.

Bamberger comes right back with the correction that he has not one but six scrap books, in which he pastes all material, according to these classifications: Newspaper Ads and Tie-ups, Street Stunts, Windows and Stores, Lobbies, House Distributing and Mailing, and Miscellaneous.

That is even better and explains why Bam is now regarded as one of the star Paramounteers. He is not only not ashamed to use another man's ideas in new territory, but he keeps his stuff in the most available and systematic form.

Try Bamberger's scheme and get not one but six books and a year from now you'll know ten times as much about running your business as you do now, if you are one of those to affect to disdain help from others.

USED A PIPE LINE LOBBY FOR "OVER THE BORDER"

Hand it to Robertson, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark. He got a new one for his lobby on "Over the Border" by showing a stream trickling from the keg into the tub over in the States. It made them all take notice.

Flashy

Eddie Collins, of the Rialto theatre, Dennison, Texas, boxed in his lobby with compo board for Mae Murray in Fascination. There were eight openings in the design, all covered with light tissue paper, and back of each of these were powerful lights hooked to the flasher which controls the electric sign. The intermittent lighting was in itself a strong attractor and backed up the artistic work of the artist.

In front of this was a cutout of the star in a dancing pose in front of a disc of red satin, pleated. This is a stock stunt which is booked around with the film and not a part of the Collins planning, though it worked in well with his design.

Painted Posters

E. G. Stellings, of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, of Wilmington, N. C., sends in some capital examples of hand painted posters, which, unfortunately, will not reproduce because of the color of the background.

In effect they are paste-ups of poster material with original lettering and ornamentation; a form generally to be preferred above the straight painted poster. Mr. Stellings demonstrates that a little judicious pasting not only saves time, but increases effect.

SEVEN DOLLARS IN CASH AND SEVEN HUNDRED IN PEARLS

How Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., put over Jack Holt in "The Man Unconquerable." He had the seven dollars, but he borrowed the pearls from the local jeweler in return for a credit card. It gave a new South Sea idea.

First National Ties to Photoplay Books

First National has arranged with Crossett and Dunlap to make special exploitation of the seventy-five cent editions of "Kindred of the Dust" and "The Masquerader."

For the first transparent slides will be supplied, both with "See this photoplay at your favorite theatre" and with a blank space for the house name where the exhibitor hooks-in with the stores.

For the Guy Bates Post production the exploitation will take the form of extra jackets, with which to make a window splash, the jacket hooking to the First National production of the play.

Franchise holders who will handle these two plays will do well to get in touch with the booksellers now with a view to effecting the fullest co-operation. Start with the store, instead of horning in later.

The Rock Cave Lobby Sold Connie Tickets

Arthur E. Weld, who is not managing the Strand theatre, Waterloo, Ia., figured that The Primitive Lover suggested the cave man, whether the story did or not, so he got hold of a lot of old compo board, had it painted up and not only made a cave for the box office, but for the entrance doors and the house front, covering the brick work and pillars with the same painted material.

The lobby was in no sense true to the film, but Mr. Weld did not sell it as a prologue to the picture, but as a novelty, and as a novelty it held up the summer business. People are still children enough to want to go into the cave and see what is behind it, and the "cool as a cave" suggestion was not to be scorned these warm days.

Mr. Weld suggested that it will work on any cave man title or story, and it will work well just as a novelty if you want to use the suggestion of interior coolness.

Played the R. F. D.

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome theatre, Forth Worth, Texas, put a new touch to the white fence idea used on so many pictures. For My Old Kentucky Home he used short lengths of fence either side of the lobby opening, and on the post of one side he placed the familiar R. F. D. box, which gave a novel touch and attracted no little attention. It was a little thing, but it put the lobby in a new class.

For the rest he used foliage pendant from the arch, potted palms and a miniature house, with two-figure cutouts on either side.

$700 Lobby Display Cost a Credit Card

Oscar White seems to be stepping into the shoes vacated by Eller Metzger, the economical exploitationer of Creston, Ia. Metzger has not been heard from in six months, but White bats out a lobby about once a week that brings the whole town to see.

For "The Man Unconquerable," at the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., he used a lobby display that included $700 worth of pearls and seven one dollar bills.

The bills were tacked to a card on the front of the pearl display and the text started off with: "These did not conquer him," with the bills and a revolver, then "Pearls made him a million, but a girl made him a man," the exhibit including the girl and the man she made out of him. The jewels were in a glass topped case (borrowed), just back of the sign, and the display centered about a card for the local jeweler from whom the pellets were borrowed.

This was not as picturesque as some of the stuff Mr. White has worked, but he has had a number of beach and tropical displays lately and he felt that something different could get more attention, and so sell more tickets.

Salting the Lobby Is a Fresh Stunt

Barry Burke, of the Palace theatre, Ft. Worth, made a cold lobby for I Am the Law, with a snow hut box office and entrance door and painted woods.

Then he scattered salt and Christmas tree snow on the floor, and that intensified the suggestion of the low temperature and got about double the pull. It cost only $15 to get a 25 per cent. boost in the receipts, largely through the mental suggestion of the snow.

The cold lobby works as well as ever, but it needs something new to quicken interest, and Burke got this with the salt and mica.

Cheap and It Worked

Six passes and a borrowed automobile put over "Sky High" for E. C. Ogg, of the Imperial Theatre, South Pittsburgh, Tenn.

For the passes he borrowed a dummy from a local clothing store, which he dressed as a cowboy and placed in the lobby, then he bannered the auto and sent it around town to tell about Tom Mix.

Receipts went up without a corresponding hoist in the expense account; which is the ideal exploitation.

ARTHUR E. WELD SOLD TICKETS ON "THE PRIMITIVE LOVER" WITH A ROCKY CAVE LOBBY

This was not true to the film, but the title suggested the cave man stuff and the big idea was to take their money from them and put it to the credit of the Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Ia. It was a novelty and it got them packing in, and once they saw the picture it mattered little in their young lives that Constance Talmadge wore dresses instead of summer furs. It was good and they were happy

Played Hook-up As a Solitaire

Undaunted by the fact that he could not ring one of the local papers in on a street moving picture tryout for "The Crossroads of New York," one of the First National exploiteers decided to play a lone hand and announced that he would conduct a test for Mack Sennett on the picture when it played Keith's Theatre, Syracuse.

He dug up a fat street car conductor, an equally plump cook; who almost equaled the conductor's 235 pounds; two rubes and a boy with an ingratiating grin.

He fixed it with the police to use the most prominent cross roads in town and started in with singles of the quintet. Then he made them write their own continuity, only stipulating that there should be some pies in it, and a boy was sent to the bakery. They were shy on custard, but strong on raspberry, and that seemed more appropriate, so all five got the raspberry from the crowd and each other simultaneously.

It ran about an hour and a half, with interruptions to let the police ease the street cars through the mob now and then.

Being gluttons for punishment, the same five went down to the beach the following day and varied their production by pushing the fat conductor off the dock.

There was more publicity than could have come from a tie-up to any one paper, and though this happened a month ago, the town is still talking. Just goes to show that you can pull these stunts if only you make half an effort.

THIS LOOKS COOL, NO MATTER WHAT THE WEATHER MAY BE

How the Helig Theatre, Portland, put over "Nanook of the North" with an igloo and a kayak, not to mention a wealth of paper icicles and an Arctic scene about twenty feet high built out over the marquise. The igloo is a capital suggestion.

Working Well Ahead Doubles the Sales

Major I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., took in more than double his usual business on "Foolish Wives" by working well in advance and getting some new ideas.

He started in two months ahead to tell the play was coming, but he dug in about a month before the showing and got really busy. He started the trailer four weeks ahead of the opening, beginning with the full trailer as supplied by the Universal, and cutting off about fifty feet now and then, to prevent it getting too tiresome, replacing the amputated portions with additional slides.

These cut scenes were later joined to the ends of some junk reels he borrowed from the exchange. The reels were placed on the floor of a store window and the trailer scenes brought up against the glass so they could be seen. He even got a newspaper write-up on this idea.

He made another big splash in the window of a vacant store, put up cards in all service stations and in most shops, and tied the merchants to two single hook-up pages, one running the opening day and the other a day later.

He tried a contest for a double of Miss Dupont, using her physical measurements, but this flopped as the women seemed unwilling to supply this data, even in the hope of winning a prize.

In all of his work he stressed the cost of the picture rather than its excellence, to avoid any possible comeback. Special stress was laid upon the Monte Carlo scenes.

As a result he played to a 125 per cent. increase in business at a cost of about $20 above his usual expenditures.

Two Good Ideas

All green exploitation for The Green Temptation is old, but Raymond Willie, of the Palace theatre, Dallas, managed to get a couple of new bumps. One was a white card with merely a green splotch on the surface. No one was able to fathom the idea. Next week the same cards were put out again, but this time they were printed: "Watch for it! Alluring! Fascinating! The Green——." At the same time newspaper teasers were started. The following week the full statement was used.

For the all-green lobby Mr. Willie added streamers of green ribbon tied to the fans in the lobby, and the snapping streamers made people forget that it was too hot to go to the theatre. It all looked so cool they felt it must be cool, and inside it was as cool as fans could make it.

It brought one of the best weeks of the summer.

PUTTING THE BELLS ON ROBIN HOOD IN BOSTON TOWN

"Robin Hood" has not yet been released, but the famous Filene store capitalized the interest in the Fairbanks production and made up a special window with stills from the film and the models posed as though participating in a contest.

Jazzed a Drive on a Savannah Coogan

J. G. Evans, of the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, decided to see just what he could pull down with Jackie Coogan in "My Boy" the first half of the week. He figured that he could concentrate and get a last half result on a first half position, and he did.

He hooked a newspaper to a drawing contest with three and two dollar prizes for the best head of Jackie in the role and received about two hundred drawings, which gave him a better lobby display than would as many hand painted oils.

In Tub and Barrel

And as long as he had them there, he used a lobby cutout from the 24-sheet, with a one sheet in a barrel on one side and another one sheet cutout in a tub on the other.

Hook-ups were made with a shoe store and a merchant handling the Coogan clothes, and the newsboys were paraded through the streets in the good old fashion.

Combining the stunts brought more business than he had a right to expect in August.

THERE IS NOTHING NEW TO THIS EXCEPT THE DRAPERY

Other managers have used toys and cut-outs for "The Bachelor Daddy," but A. B. Cooper, of the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., conceived the idea of making a nursery effect by draping the back of the lobby with hangings. It's a good scheme.

Draped in a Lobby to Suggest a Room

Numerous managers have used real toys in conjunction with the cutouts from the Paramount paper for "The Bachelor Dady," but the effect gained has always been that of a collection of toys and some cutouts. A. B. Cooper, of the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., wanted to suggest a nursery.

He had some dark colored fabric, and he draped this to cut off the box office and other lobby essentials, and before it he placed the cutouts of the children and Meighan with a surrounding of toys, the figure of the star being about to put one of the youngsters into a patent crib with an insect proof top. A rug on that portion of the lobby added to the effect.

Mr. Cooper seems to have devised something new and decidedly useful in this idea, and it can be worked in a variety of ways.

For an additional hook-up he invited the charges of the Children's Home to be his guest, but to get all he could from that angle, he permitted the Kiwanis Club to extend the invitation, take the credit—and do most of the plugging.

The cards are illustrated with various stills from the pictured version, and will be of real assistance to exhibitors who effect a book store tie-up with the popular edition.

A Hyman Novelty

One of Edward L. Hyman's recent production novelties at the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, was called "The Ladies of the Fan," and was worked with a large fan of nine sticks and eight sections. This was covered with translucent material and lighted strongly from behind, care being taken that the illumination did not show as points of light.

Before this three girls did a Chinese dance in native costume. The costumes were decorated with colored beads, which changed color with the changing of the spots.

In smaller houses the fan can be decorated with cutouts from large figured wall paper pasted on common white wrapping paper, varnished to increase its translucence, while the girls can be dressed in pajamas, to which are sewn outlines from figured chintz. Between the two extremes there is a wide range.

It makes a pretty number and is out of the ordinary.

Lost and Found

Before the coming of Where Is My Wandering Boy? to the Capitol theatre, Houston, Texas, Ollie Brownlee used the press book stunt of an old lady who distributed cards reading, "Where Is My Wandering Boy? Help me find him." She was out for several days and became pretty well identified in the minds of the public.

Two days after the run opened she reappeared and this time the cards read, "I have found my Wandering Boy. He is in the movies at the Capitol theatre. Better see him, the picture is great. It is called—" and the title followed.

This capitalized all of the interest in the first stunt, plus a stronger punch, and helped put the picture over to a fifty per cent. increase. It also helped to push the interest for the latter part of the week.

HERE'S AN OLD, OLD FAVORITE IN A NEW DRESS

TIRES TOLD OF WALLACE REID ACROSS THE CONTINENT

The "Buy your ticket through a tire" was made the chief angle of the T. & D. Theatre, San Jose, California, after a tie-up with the handlers of a make of auto rubbers. The racing scene was also used with cars on an endless belt.

Snow Lobby in South Stands Them All Out

Stewart Bird, substituting at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., built the usual snow lobby for "I Am the Law" and got the best business in weeks for the attraction.

He built a stockade about the box office, with cabins against either side wall, and filled in with whitewashed foliage. That part of it was the usual thing. What Mr. Bird thinks put the lobby over as new was a long fence running down through the centre of the lobby space and also snow covered. This seemed to get all the attention, and it put the picture over to a business that opened well and kept running up for the entire week until the last day brought in much more than that drawn at the opening.

There is a lesson in this fence stunt, with the same old moral that a new touch will more than save an old stunt.

A Popular Army

J. B. Robertson got out some good copy for post cards sent to the roster of the American Legion. It was class advertising, but so well done that the recipients passed it along to others to enjoy. It carried a large heading: "Volunteers Wanted" and ran along in smaller type with:

"Enlist today! Join the army of The Dictator. Excellent fighting conditions. Eight-hour day. Saturday half-holiday. No Sunday fighting. Good pay and good food—when you get it. Time and a half for overtime. All the battles will be brought to the barracks. No hikes, no reville, no discipline, no nothing.

"Join the Army of happy people who will see Wallace Reid in The Dictator at the Palace theatre, Monday and Tuesday."

Baggins Publicity

Just as we were beginning to wonder if people had stopped printing up the paper bags for store use comes Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli theatre, Beaumont, Texas, to explain that he did it on Missing Husbands, getting permission from the Piggly Wiggly store to put red ink all over their nice brown bags. All it cost was the printer's bill and a few passes, and the store also gave up a window to the picture.

He also worked the telephone stunt to practically every number in town, and used cut-outs for the lobby.

Tired the Lobby to Sell Wallace Reid

Hooking in with the agency for an automobile tire not only gave the Turner and Dahnken Theatre in San Jose, Calif., plenty of decorative material, but Manager Harry E. Brown hooked out a window on automobile row, where it would do "Across the Continent" a lot of good with drivers and chaffeurs.

The chief novelty was the idea of hanging a tire in front of the box office and making "Buy your ticket through a tire" one of the slogans. This can also be worked with life preservers on marine plays, now that we have the idea.

A mechanical race scene was used with a grand stand and moving miniature cars, but the tires put the show over.

Hooked the Clansmen to "One Clear Call'

Down in Texas recently the Primary Elections demonstrated where the Ku Klux Klan stood, and this gave an idea to C. R. Sullivan, of the Fair Theatre, Amarillo.

He booked in "One Clear Call" and started the big sheets three weeks in advance. Two weeks away he posted the smaller sizes and put on the trailer supplied by First National and arranged for a tie-up with the local Klan.

A recent initiation north of the city had been photographed and the negative was strong enough to permit enlargement to 48 by 72 inches. This was made the centerpiece of the house front, with six sheets on either side and with cutouts of the mounted horsemen off to either side, at the curb line.

Naturally the photograph excited intense interest, not alone in itself but in the play and is, we believe, the first instance of an actual Klan photograph being made the basis of exploitation.

Mr. Sullivan put out six men in Klan regalia the Saturday before his Monday opening, and kept them on the streets, mounted, until the third day of his four-day run.

With throwaways and large newspaper spaces, he did a mid-winter business toward the end of July.

Don't suppose that you can start September off with a bang and then give them junk the rest of the year. Start with good bills and keep them coming with a good brand of offering clear through the season. September is just a starter. You can't hustle one month and make it last twelve.

HOW A TEXAS HOUSE HOOKED ONE CLEAR CALL TO THE LOCAL KU KLUX KLAN

C. R. Sullivan, of the Fair Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, after two weeks of good advance work, brought his campaign to a smashing conclusion with a 48 x 72 inch enlargement of an actual initiation. Then he used six riders for five days and took extra newspaper space. With the Klan carrying most of the state in the Primary elections, Mr. Sullivan was shrewd to see the advertising advantages of the hook-in.

Sectional Screen for Easy Painting

Most painted fronts involve the use of a large space in the form of a paint frame or similar device, but the Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky., has a new idea in the sectional front.

Panels were made, three of which were the full height of the arch, while the fourth was short enough to serve as an entrance. Four of the panels completely filled the opening. By squaring off the drawn design and repeating in the squares that portion of the picture appearing in each square, a perfect join was made without taking up much space.

The cut shows the device in use for Norma Talmadge in "Love's Redemption," the figure of Ginger being the important element in the sketch. The entrance panel can be set in any one of four positions.

THIS SECTIONAL SCREEN SIMPLIFIES PAINTED FRONTS

It was devised for the Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky., and was first used for Norma Talmadge in "Love's Redemption," showing the figure of Ginger riding to her new job along the beach front at Jamaica. It is simple and effective.

Made a Church for "The Little Minister"

Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chic' asha, Okla., has been hustling lately to offset the torrid Texas weather—and may "The Prophet" grant that the printer makes it "torrid" and not "horrid!"

Anyhow, he had Betty Compson in "The Little Minister," and he felt that building a church for the dominie would help bring in some people to be among those present when the contribution plate was passed. He had stained glass windows and everything, and at night lights shone through the transparent windows.

In back he placed a cutout he used for "The Bonded Woman," building up the lattice idea which the original sheet carried, to give him a background without the cost of building, and the business went up.

The lettering on the marquise refers to a local contest, the particulars of which are not given, but Bill Johnson volunteers the information that it has helped business wonderfully.

By changing the name and the figures daily, Tunstill has the town in a ferment, and the only way to get votes is to purchase tickets, which the loyal supporters of the beautiful contestants do in appreciable quantities.

His Wedding Present

Giving a benefit to a newly married couple was A. C. Cowles' idea of putting over "Married Life."

The newlyweds were popular and a special performance was arranged to follow the regular night show on the last day of the engagement; which was the night of their wedding. Only those who had been present at the wedding could purchase tickets for the show, which started at eleven o'clock, but practically the entire crowd came, though many of them had seen the picture earlier in the run.

The receipts, less the expenses, were turned over to the young pair to aid them in furnishing the home. It sounds like a one-night stunt, but it had a healthful effect on the business for the entire run through the comment it created.

CAYTON TUNSTILL BUILT THE LITTLE MINISTER A CHURCH

It did not cost as much as some churches, but the contribution plate showed a decided increase, partly because of the stunt and partly because they like Betty Compson in the South. The trellis is a make-over from another cut-out stunt.

A Lobby Scene Paid Twenty-five for One

Careful work on a scene costing four dollars brought about one hundred extra dollars to the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., on "Reported Missing."

F. J. Miller, manager of theatres, decided upon a special scene for the lobby and extra care was taken to make it convincingly real. A frame was constructed, six by ten feet, with a cutout motorboat sailing through cutout waves of compo board. A buzzer, striking against a piece of cigar box gave a very realistic sound imitation of the motor of a motor boat in a hurry and heightened the effect.

The background was a shore scene with a lighthouse, in which a flasher was installed, and dim lighting and a sheet of wire gauze across the front added to the night effect and the realism at the same time.

Above the cabinet was a flat strip on which were painted three life preservers, the star, title and a selling catchline.

The cabinet can be used repeatedly, and if you can work it for a changing light effect you can double its value. You will need a timer for this effect for the change from night to day should be made at intervals of not less than a minute, which is too long for the usual flasher. These displays class with miniatures and are really valuable to the enterprising manager who is ingenious enough to make them convincing. It pulled $50 a day for the Modjeska.

Cutting It Short

It might be said that C. M. Phillips, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, made short work of exploiting "Bobbed Hair." He announced that all bobbed hair girls would be admitted free between twelve and one, and a lot of people went without their lunch to see the flappers assemble.

Only 250 came the first day, but the following noon 750 surged through the gate, and the three Atlanta papers gave him good write-ups on the gag.

It cost only one thousand free admissions at a time when there were few who wanted to come, and it boosted receipts about 15 per cent. That beats increasing the advertising space, for it gets more space where it will be more prominently displayed.

Selling Lines Lack Ring of Conviction

Although the Rivoli theatre, Baltimore, gets out a neat layout for Rose o' the Sea, the selling talk does not match with the rest. The lines lack conviction. You are more than half sold on the general idea, but the talk, off to the left of the lower part of the cut seems to chill the enthusiasm. It reads: "Another sparkling triumph for Anita Stewart as the girl who wastes her love on a reckless youth and is paid in full by the father." It should be possible to present the proposition in a more attractive guise than this. The text suggests that the agent knew he had to say something, but did not know anything worth while to say. And then he goes on, just below, to say that it is a somewhat different drama. Different dramas usually evoke more enthusiasm than this. This seems to be a plan book cut, for First National likes this arrangement rather than the straight-across-the-space designs more generally put out. This gives a better arrangement in that it permits two sections of type to be held apart from each other without the straight line display necessitated by the straight cut, but it causes the advertisement to drop further down the page, unless the signature plate is contrasted. As between this and the straight cut we think this is to be preferred, even at an additional cost for space.

Samuel Sivitz Has Gone On a Vacation

Samuel Sivitz, publicity man for the Rowland and Clark houses, Pittsburgh, took a vacation last year and went out to Los Angeles to get ammunition for his winter's campaign. He came back sold on Southern California, and he writes us that he is taking a walkout on the circuit to spend this winter on the coast. His place has been taken by Charles B. Frost. It's darned discouraging. It took us a long time to convert Mr. Sivitz to the use of part type in his displays, and it is only comparatively lately that he got his artist and compositor trained to use a little metal now and then. And just as he has the Rowland and Clark advertising so that it looks unlike Boston,

A PITTSBURGH REVERSION TO ALL HAND LETTERING

along he scoots for the coast and Mr. Frost lets the artist take his trusty pen in hand and hog all the space once more. There are several banks here where type could be used to greater advantage than lettering, particularly the Regent and Blackstone space, but the artist has done it all and made a rotten job of it—as usual. More than that we think that the selling on "The Loves of Pharaoh" is taken on the wrong angle. Instead of telling what a fine picture this is, Mr. Frost takes the room to start off with: "If Makeda came back to earth after 4,000 years' absence, here's what she would hand to Clarisse, the 1922 flapper vamp." The substance of the remarks is to the effect that they had the same stuff 4,000 years ago and that the modern flapper could get pointers from the Nile brand of vamp. Perhaps that will sell the picture in Pittsburgh, but we question whether it will get as many patrons as could be brought in with advertising planned to sell the immensity of the production. It is one of the few big spectacles with a really engrossing story. It is in a class by itself, yet it is sold with a cheap appeal to the flappers to come and see something they will not be able to discern on the screen, and it will disgust the intelligent playgoer who can best appreciate the really fine achievements of Lubitsch. It may not have done much harm, for few will wade through that mess of poor hand lettering, but it assuredly will not help to any great extent. Better work is done for the second week on "Orphans of the Storm," but there is a lot more lettering for "The Woman He Married" that might far better have been in type. We surely are going to miss Sivitz.

Large Illustration Lacks Sales Value

Too much dependence is placed on the cut in this display for the Princess Theatre, Toledo. Down at the bottom, over to the right, there is a four line full face bank which tells that this is "A romantic drama of shipwreck and South Seas, primitive passions and an all-conquering love. Richard Dix and John Bowers in the excellent cast." That does not seem to match up with the face superimposed on an indemnity bond. It does not match, and the first glance gets the illustration, is scarcely interested, and the eye wanders on to the next space. Over on the left there is a statement that this is her greatest triumph since "The Miracle Man," but this has been said of every production in which Miss Compson has been starred, and it no longer possesses any appeal. An illustration should sell the production for which it is used and should be characteristic of that production. This is not. It is not characteristic of anything in particular. It is just a picture, and it eats up a lot of space without paying rental in the form of tickets sold. Not only this, but it is taking space which might otherwise be used to sell the picture. It is a dog-in-the-manger sort of illustration. Of course, an artist cannot bat top figures every time, but he made an awful bone on this. Possibly he thought it was about time to slide on South Sea Island pictures. Very likely it is, but he should have gotten hold of some other angle to have played up. Even the straight face would have been better than the cut as it stands. Will Hays should give a little of his time and attention to the money artists' waste in negative advertising.

A Paramount Release

A POOR SALES CUT

Netting An Ad.

One of the chain grocery outfits in New York is handling hair nets as an advertising line. The nets are sold at a profit for five cents, as against ten cents charged by most stores. They more than pay their way, and they carry on the paper in which they are wrapped advertising for the store's own brands. One of the branch managers says that he gets rid of several hundred a week and not only gets the advertising over, but even draws trade from the woman who wants a hair net and a pound of coffee or something and makes one buy of the oddly assorted order. This should be a good way of putting over house talk and you can get the nets from any "joblot" house, unwrapped, very reasonably.

—P. T. A.—

The Real Admission

The other afternoon we overheard two laymen talking about the price of admission to a certain Broadway picture house. "It's 85 cents," declared one. The other shook his head. "It's all the way from 95 cents to a dollar ten," he corrected. "Ten cents to the usher if there are a lot of seats and a quarter if they are scarce." The other nodded his acquiescence and added that he seldom went. And we enjoyed the incident because only the previous evening we had watched one of the boy pirates stand for a full minute and a half waiting for a patron to extract a tip from his clothes, though his entire service had consisted in following the man down to the seat in a half empty house. Watch these little things in your own house. They hurt business in that the disgusted patrons with the petty graft they associate with the pictures in general.

Los Angeles Achieves a Three Page Hook-up

A couple of years ago the hook-up page had gotten to the point where an exhibitor had to turn in four page sections to get even a mention and the palms were reserved for the eight and twelve page hook-ins. Now the double truck is again a standard of comparison and a three page hook-up will attract attention anywhere. For the debut of Charles Ray as a United Artists attraction in "A Tailor Made Man," Earle Hall Payne engineered a three page hook-in with most of the important tailors in Los Angeles, using it the Friday before the opening, to give the people a chance to talk about it. The house got some of the space. In a city where the advertising rates are as high as they are in Los Angeles, this is more of an achievement than would be an eight page hook-in a town with an inch instead of a line rate. It points the way to hook-up ideas for smaller towns when the picture is generally released. In addition to the hook-up, the house prepared a general mailing card with the back given over to Ray in his new production. On the face the correspondence half was printed with the copy for the various contributors to the newspaper space, each tailor getting his own advertisement on the cards he mailed out to his own list of addresses. This supplemented the newspaper work and made a complete campaign, helping to put the picture over to an extension of time. They handled 20,000 cards.

Circle Sells More On These Drawings

Recently we showed a very poor design from the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, in which the bulk of the selling lay with the drawing and the drawing was a detriment. A more recent design from the same house for "Nanook of the North" shows a better sizing of the cut. The action scene takes up all of the space and there is enough action and snow to get the idea over, while the lower cut does just as well for the Fur Fashion Review, which is something new in the line of fashion shows. Here the artist, with very few lines, has suggested the sweep of stylish garments, and will catch the feminine eye with this even more surely than the Eskimo figure above, which will appeal more strongly to the men. With the pair of sketches he gets all factors of his patrons, and strengthens his appeal. But we are surprised to see that Fur Review so coldly dismissed in the text. That will sell a great many more tickets than the organ solo or the overture, yet it is given about the same space. Whoever is writing the copy for the Circle ads at present is either stupid or lazy. He is not trying to put the house over, apparently. If he is trying, he does not know how, for he has not the slightest idea of show values. It's all the same to him whether it is a novelty film feature, a model show or a dinky organ solo. There is something all wet about this style of advertising where there is room enough to spread out. The Hyman advertisment is all right for the seventy lines on two he can afford with the number of papers he has to go in, but here are 105 lines on three of which about a quarter is utter waste. An eight point line is plenty large enough for an organ solo, the news reel and the topics, and a ten point will cover the orchestra. More should be given the passing attractions, which have to be put over at once for one week only.

A THREE PAGE HOOK-UP WITH LOS ANGELES TAILORS ON "A TAILOR MADE MAN"

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

CARDIGAN. Good picture, well liked here. Good action, scenery and story. Advertising; six, three, one, 8 x 10s, 11 x 14s, etc. Patronage; town. Attendance, fair. Victory Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

Associated Exhibitors

REAL ADVENTURE. Associated Exhibitors have made two pictures that I have found it necessary to hold over for second day during the past three weeks. "Don't Doubt Your Wife" and "The Real Adventure." If they can make good pictures in five reels, why in the world do other producers drag them out to seven or eight? Exhibitors who want good five-reel pictures, get busy and book "The Real Adventure." Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; very good. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

Equity

WORLDLY MADONNA. Not much of a picture to help Metro to sell the star's new output. The theme is not likely to meet with the approval of the Catholics in your town or city and the theme is an impossible one. Let's hope that Harry Garson will do better for Metro. Advertising; billed heavy. Patronage; mostly ladies. Attendance; very poor. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

F. B. O.

EDEN AND RETURN. Good comedy feature. Took well here. Advertising; regular. Attendance; fair. Victory Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

QUEEN OF THE TURF. Four thousand, six hundred feet of comparatively uninteresting film ending with a horse race, which is fair enough, but not sufficient to make amends for what goes before. A picture that will get by if you have a non-critical audience: to exhibitors who have the other type—stay away. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

First National

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. Good. Patrons said, best picture of the Northwest ever shown. Advertising; ones, threes, 11 x 14, 22 x 28, slide. Patronage; general. Attendance; very good. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

BRANDED WOMAN. Although old, the films were in good condition and the picture seemed to please. Nobody complained. Advertising; usual. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

CABIRIA. Played this for an Italian organization as a benefit, at fifty-fifty. They paid expenses. Splendid production. Advertising; banners, photos, ones and threes. Patronage; mostly foreign. Attendance; extra good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. A bald sex plot, presented in a daring, yet inoffensive, way. Star pleased; all classed Richard Hedrick a wonder; and Barbara Castleton's work is exceptional. Give us another Richard Hedrick picture. Advertising; posters and papers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good, two nights. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

DANGEROUS BUSINESS. Old, but one of the best of Connie's pictures. The ending seriously damages it for small towns, though it can be clipped. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

HAIL THE WOMAN. A grand story of especially appealing interest to Womankind. One that makes them sneak up and tear off a tear-drop, but no one feels embarrassed, as "they're all doing it." We'd lie if we said they were not all more than satisfied. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good E. J. Breggers, Gem Theatre, Crystal Falls, Michigan.

HURRICANE'S GAL. Picture pleased and caused considerable talk. Excellent attraction for a thriller. Stanley Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

IDOL DANCER. Ranked well above average in entertainment value: the most popular picture we have had this summer, and one of the most profitable for us. Can't understand why we did not know how good it was sooner. Advertising; double usual newspaper. Patronage; best. Attendance; excellent. J. A. Flourney, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

THE KID. Did not want to be the only exhibitors not playing this, especially after seeing all it was doing elsewhere. But paid too big a price and did not do any business on it; lost heavily, perhaps because too many had seen it elsewhere. Nevertheless, First National is the only company that ever gave us an adjustment on any loss. They have always been square shooters and they will always receive a good share of our business. Patronage; village and country. Attendance; very poor. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

ROSARY. Liked by every one, including ministers. Boost this picture; your matinee will do the rest. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes, heralds. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. Wm. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

MY BOY. A fine picture. Jackie is great and pleased all; but they ask too much for it. Is worth no more than other pictures. Advertising; extra. Patronage; rural. Attendance; good. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

SILENT CALL. Very good. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair (still this was no fault of picture). Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

STAR DUST. Patrons considered the picture better than the book. The only picture we have ever repeated. We did better on the second run than on first. Hope Hampton is a great favorite here. Advertising; ones, threes, photos, screen and newspapers. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. W. C. Claver, State Theatre, Fargo, North Dakota.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. Book it and boost it strong. It will stand plenty of publicity. Patronage; resort visitors. Attendance; fair. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

WOMAN'S SIDE. MacDonald not much of a favorite here. From a production standpoint the picture is a success. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Fox

CHASING THE MOON. Can't say too much for this one. It is not exactly the kind of picture his admirers like to see him in; however, it will please. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

DEVIL WITHIN. D. Farnum only fair for us. "Primal Law" did more for us. The sea story helped in exploiting it. Advertising; ones, slide, program, papers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

EVER SINCE EVE. Nothing to it for me, any more than there is to any other Shirley Mason picture. Not that Shirley is at fault but the producer is afraid to give her something to do. It is worth about $5 and the distributor asks $10. Just one more nail to kill the popularity of the "movies." B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

IRON TO GOLD. Despite the adverse criticism given this picture by the press, it is a dandy Western that satisfies. Advertising; one, three, six, slides, programs. Patronage; general Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

PERJURY. Good picture but no drawing power, and very poor line of advertising. Picture will please if you can get them in. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SHAME AND LAST TRAIL. Both these might have been good if they had not been a half mile too long. As it was, the patrons got tired out. Not one out of a hundred should be over a mile long. Both were overdrawn considerably. Don't know why they do it. Charged me too much. I lost money on every special I bought from Fox. Advertising; big newspaper, six one sheets, slide, float. Patronage; small town. Attendance; first night fair, second night very poor. H. L. Perkins, Dixie Theatre, Bastrop, Texas.

THUNDERCLAP. Patrons reported this a better picture than "Over the Hill," though the title was not much of a drawing card for me. Advertising; ones, threes, photos. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

TRAILIN'. Just another Mix picture. Same old stuff, nothing to rave over, but if your patrons like westerns they'll like this one. Advertising; newspapers only, exchange had no paper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; extra good. Marsden and Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

WITHOUT FEAR. Nothing to it. Patrons didn't care for it. Old plot, no action. Sure a dead one. Advertising; newspapers, slide, posters, photos. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

F. B. O.

GAY AND DEVILISH. Doris May is a flop for us; as a star she fails to twinkle. Everyone in the cast much better than Doris. Mistake this thing of starring her, my opinion. Picture not bad, but lacks a dickens of a lot of being good. Dope sheet very misleading. If you play it, go easy; use the soft pedal. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SHEIK OF ARABY. Good, pleasing picture, but did not draw as big as I expected; people have seen too many Sheik pictures. Advertising; advance newspaper, one week. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

WHERE LIGHTS ARE LOW. Good picture; took well with our patrons. Due to this being his first picture in this town, public was afraid to risk the price. Advertising; slide and one sheets. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Goldwyn

THE BRANDING IRON. A great picture, pleased 100 per cent. One of the best we ever ran. Book this by all means, better than the average picture. Advertising; slides and posters. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good, three festivals within a radius of six miles. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. It is evident this picture gives good satisfaction as near as I can find out, therefore, all is well. Advertising; ones and threes. Patronage; industrials. Attendance; good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

GOLDEN DREAMS. Zane Grey won't last long if he continues to sponsor such junk. It's not even a passable program picture. Lay off of it, if you don't want them to kick and it will hurt anything he may make in the future. Advertising; ten ones, two threes, heralds, newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair, against tent show. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

NORTH WIND'S MALICE. I was not there myself, but I heard from our patrons it was very good. Beautiful scenery. Advertising; lobby, cards and newsapaper. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

The boys sending these reports are certainly square shooters. A while back Mr. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewiston, Ohio, sent this report, which was about to be printed:

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME (Amer. Releasing). A flivver of the first water. No more excuse for being called "Old Kentucky Home" than "Woolworth Building." The kind of picture that makes the exhibitor want to creep home in the dark.

Before that was printed, Mr. Aughinbaugh hurried in this:

"I have discovered since sending my report on 'Old Kentucky Home' that the majority of our people liked the show, hence I am sending you the attached revised report. It shows that a fellow should not make up his reports too soon. The plot was hackneyed and a disappointment to me (a Kentuckian), but the majority of our people liked it. I have heard nothing but praise for the picture in spite of the fact that I was so dissatisfied with it on a review showing, I sat down and wrote a rather sharp report and then had to confess in a later letter that the picture 'took big.'"

That's the stuff. We want these reports to be straight from the shoulder, but we want them to be just and fair. A man like Mr. Aughinbaugh is conscientious. Shoot square! VAN.

THE WALL FLOWER. Nothing to lose any sleep over if you are not able to buy it right. Star as clever as the best of them, willing to appear homely to put the picture across, but there is no pull to the picture. A long step from Rupert Hughes' "Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead." Print was awful, not fit to run. Advertising; two column, six inch, two papers. Patronage; country town. Attendance; poor, fell down second night. Columbia City Thetre Company, Columbia City, Indiana.

WET GOLD. Fine paper makes this a sure fire attraction. Some good undersea photography. All pleased. Patronage; transient. Attendance; good. M. Oppenheimer, Empire Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. A so-called special, which is an average program offering. Situations and humor seem forced. Patrons did not comment either way; all I had come in for it were putting in their time, so they evidently did not expect much and were not disappointed. It isn't much. Buy it at the right price for a program offering and it will do for the night you offer westerns. Advertising; two column, six inches, two papers. Patronage; rural town. Attendance; poor. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Hodkinson

CAMERON OF ROYAL MOUNTED. Very good, one of the best Northwest pictures we have played. Advertising; three one sheets and slide. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

COLLEEN OF THE PINES. A Canadian story with usual mounted police hero, but will get over and please. Scenery beautiful. Advertising; photos, slides, posters, newspapers. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. J. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

FRENCH HEELS. Very good picture. Patrons went out satisfied and boosting, and it was sold to us at the right price. Advertising; billboard, trailer and newspapers. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. John A. Schwalin, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

Metro

SEEIN'S BELIEVIN'. This will entertain as a program, picture and if your contract reads aright no fear but what you will get value received. Built up the exhibit with a good two reel comedy and a one reel travel, and everybody was pleased with the varied entertainment. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. Good picture with a little of everything in it; commend to the audience who like action with their pictures. The action is good in that suspense is gradually built up and sustained to the end. Henry Ford should pay well to have it run in the theatres, but the picture is one of the best Reid and Roberts' offerings since "Too Much Speed." Advertising, seven column, 4 inches two papers, lobby and posters. Patronage, country town. Attendance, fair. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

ALWAYS AUDACIOUS. A good clean picture, well liked by everyone. Advertising, ones, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. E. S. French & Son, Memorial Hall, Pine River, Minnesota.

BACHELOR DADDY. A family picture and they all liked it. The most hardened critic will find "good" in it. Better to run this one two days than "World's Champion." The kiddies are great in this. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

BACHELOR DADDY. A peach, a dandy, anything you want to call it, just so it is favorable. This is the best thing Meighan has ever done, in my opinion, the audience chuckled throughout the entire showing. It has comedy, pathos and a little western action in it. Stress the five cute kiddies in the advertising and play it an extra day. It will gain, has that quality that makes both the men and women talk about it. Advertising, two column eight inch two papers, regular lobby. Attendance, fair. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

SUSPICIOUS WIVES. If one will overlook the defects in the plot he will be pleased by this picture. Advertising, newspaper, slide, photos, one sheets. Patronage, first class. Attendance, fair. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS. Very good entertainment. A little comedy trend is installed from beginning to end of this feature. While this is not a big production, it satisfied my patrons as a one-night attraction. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

THREE WORD BRAND. Best Hart we have shown to our audiences, with fine appeal. Bill ought to give us more like it. Advertising, programs, heralds. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

TOO MUCH SPEED. A typical Reid-Ayres-Roberts picture that is sure to please them all. Patronage, small town, all classes. Attendance, fair. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

TOO MUCH WIFE. Personally we liked this very much but public did not enthuse over it. Patronage, high class. Attendance, poor. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TRUTHFUL LIAR. Very poor picture. Brother exhibitors, side step this if possible. Advertising, six, three, one, photos, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, very poor. R. Marsden, Jr., Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

VALLEY OF THE GIANTS. A good production and full of action, but from the condition of the film it must be at least twenty years old. Advertising, ones and photos. Patronage, general. Attendance, good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

WHITE AND UNMARRIED. Thomas Meighan as a crook, does his usual good acting. The scenes of night life in Paris are good and a thrilling climax completes an excellent program picture. Advertising, threes and photos. Patronage, rural. Attendance, good. D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

WHITE OAK. One of Bill Hart's best Westerns. Will sure please the regular Hart fans. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE? A superb picture in every respect, with a splendid cast. You can't go wrong on this one; if you haven't played it, book it. Advertising, three, ones and slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, very good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

A WISE FOOL. An excellent picture. James Kirkwood does some wonderful acting. But they did not come. Advertising, newspaper and billboards. Patronage, high class. Attendance, poor. John A. Schwalin, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

WITCHING HOUR. Very good picture but for some reason did not draw. Lost money on a live one. Advertising, sixes, threes, ones, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, very poor. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

WOMAN GOD CHANGED. A good production; everybody pleased with it. Advertising; lobby and newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. Excellent. It is one of the best vehicles Dorothy Dalton has had in many months. Plot, direction and photography the kind that holds patrons' interest. Many good comments. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

Pathé

ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN. Good picture with good star. Footlights or cameras make no difference to H. B. Warner, always himself. Liked here. Advertising one sheet. Patronage; industrials. Attendance; good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

Grand Program

E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas, has another good program:

"Every time I see a Cecil DeMille picture I thank Providence for him. 'Saturday Night' is not his greatest picture, but it's better than the greatest from most any other producer. Had Rolin comedy, 'Touch All Four Bases,' a good Pathe Review with it; fine show that did good two days' business.

TELL ABOUT YOUR WINNERS.

Selznick

BY RIGHT OF PURCHASE. Extra good program picture. Norma always pleases in my town. Price right, too. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

REPORTED MISSING. Good picture with many laughs. Colored man fine. Advertising; cards, throw-aways, posters and slides. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

United Artists

DISRAELI. Patrons loud in praises of this George Arliss picture. Attendance; very good when following "The Three Musketeers" is taken into consideration. It's a high brow picture, but a pippin. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THREE MUSKETEERS. Patrons reported it excellent. Played on percentage. Glad I did. Only fault it's too long. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

WAY DOWN EAST. The picture was exceptionally good, but on account of the coal situation the turnout was poor. Advertising, strong. Patronage, good. Attendance, poor. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Universal

THE FOX. Good picture, well liked. Fine scenery and good plot. Advertising; threes, sixes, ones and 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Patronage; town. Attendance; fair. Roy R. Willmor, Victory Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

GOLDEN GALLOWS. A fairly good program picture. Miss DuPont has not won such a good following as yet, but with her beauty and charm she should prove a good box office star. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mostly women. Attendance; poor. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

OUT OF THE SILENT NORTH. A dandy for these hot days. Frank Mayo splendid in this. People liked it. God bless Universal for running credit sub-titles at end where people can walk out on them. Other producers should do likewise; saves operator cutting them out. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

THE TRAP. An excellent picture of French-Canadian life. The scenery is great. Only fault the picture has, if any, is too many lengthy close-ups of Lon Chaney. They overdo Chaney's excellent character work. Advertising; three sheets, photos, heralds. Patronage; rural. Attendance; good. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

TRIMMED. Not as good as the usual Gibson play. Frank Hayes and Otto Hoffman extra fine characters. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fairly good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

WILD HONEY. Excellent picture that satisfied everybody. A few parts were missing, but were not noticed much. Advertising; usual accessories. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

THE WISE KID. A picture full of pep and pleased the family. Advertising; newspaper and posters. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. Arthur G. Pearson, Melrose Auditorium, Melrose, Massachusetts.

Vitagraph

RECEIVED PAYMENT. Very good society drama, pleased my patrons. Drew well first day, went flat next. Advertising; newspaper and special printing. Patronage, mixed. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. This is one of the cleverest pictures I have run in a long time. Personally I believe it would go over in any house. Tully Marshall is great, as are all the actors. Advertising; two papers, slide, lobby, ones and threes. Patronage; family. Attendance; poor on account of circus shows. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre. Hawarden, Iowa.

TRUMPET ISLAND. Good program. Film in good condition. An excellent picture to play in small towns. Plenty thrills and a good, connected story. Will bear heavy advertising. Advertising; threes, ones and stickers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor, high water recently hit things hard. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Comedies

BASHFUL (Pathe). This is a one-reel Harold Lloyd re-issue and got the laughs. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

FREE AIR (Hodkinson). A clever light comedy that will please the majority and Hodkinson sold it to us at the right price. Advertising; billboard, newspaper. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. John A. Schwalin, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

IDLE CLASS (First National). Splendid two-reel comedy. While Chaplin increases the box office receipts, the price asked for these comedies is simply too high to make money for the exhibitor. Attendance; above the average. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

THE PICANNINY (Pathe). And they call this comedy—ye gods! The star was supposed to be "Sunshine Sammy," who formerly played with Snub Pollard, but why he was called the "star" is more than we could make out. If the comedy had been entirely left to him we would have had to use the thunder machine to wake the house up after the performance. Patronage; rural. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

THE SHOW (Vitagraph). Here's a sure enough comedy, full of action and more thrills than present day serial. Kept our patrons in an uproar. Advertising; slide, newspapers, photos, poster. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Serials

ADVENTURES OF ROBINSON CRUSOE (Universal). A real relief from the blood and thunder serial with the impossible, tiresome plot where someone has a valuable stolen and several other parties try to steal or recover the said valuable. "Robinson Crusoe" is to be recommended and approved. It has built up our patronage on poor nights and everyone seems to like it. Advertising; banner, novelties, one sheets. Patronage; rural. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

WHITE EAGLE (Pathe). Holding up fine. Believe it's going to be a money-getter. Best serial we have run in some time. Advertising; threes, ones, lobby, heralds to start with. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Jack W. Ogilvie, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

Short Subjects

LEATHER PUSHERS (Universal). Very good, wonderful drawing card. Keep on making more similar to this. Advertising; newspaper and posters. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Needs No Blank

Yesterday an exhibitor said: "Cut out that blank in your Straight from Shoulder and fill the space with reports. We can use white paper when we report, and we want that space for tips."

Done! It isn't WHAT they come on—it's WHAT COMES that will count. Send reports anyway and on anything—stove lids barred.

Special Subjects

DEMPSEY-CARPENTIER FIGHT (Tex Rickard). Good picture for drawing card. Satisfied the men, but not the women. Went over good first day, not second. Advertising; newspaper and special printed posters. Patronage; mostly men. Attendance; good first day, flat next. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

State Rights

BURN 'EM UP BARNES (C. C. Burr). One hundred per cent. comedy, will please any audience. A picture that will make money. Advertising; ordinary twenty-four sheet. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Wm. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

DEAD OR ALIVE (Arrow). Ran this with a Hamilton comedy and it made a pretty good show. Didn't finish up just right. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

I AM THE LAW (Affil. Dist.). If you have not bought this, sit right down and send your distributor a wire to reserve you a date and don't do as I did, stand back on the price. It will make you money. Give it an extended run. The longer you run it the better your attendance will get. It will stand behind anything you have to say about it. Advertising; posters and special lobby. Patronage; got them all. Attendance; very good. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

SHERIFF OF HOPE ETERNAL (Arrow). A good western program, well received by all classes. Advertising; ones, threes, photos. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM (Arrow). Positively one of the best pictures we have ever shown along this line. Will touch the hard-boiled guys. One even stated, "It's good the booze is gone." Drew a very good crowd, but being that we played this on percentage, we did much better than if we had paid the high rental asked. Every exhibitor ought to play this picture. Have not read a poor comment on it as yet. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide and mailing list, local paper. Patronage; country and village. Attendance; good. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME (Warner). Did not please. One patron said, "Well, it was no worse than the title would lead me to expect." This coupled with bad service by the exchange, which caused me to miss my matinee, did not help to popularize the film. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; poor. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.)

Nice People

(Wallace Reid—Paramount—6,244 feet)

M. P. W.—It is up-to-date stuff, teaches a lesson without preaching too hard and all the time is engrossingly entertaining.

F. D.—Rachel Crothers' stage play makes spicy film entertainment.

E. H.—A better picture than the good play it's made from. A today story with today and tomorrow stars giving it their best. Six reels and seems less.

T. R.—Likely to please all classes of patrons and registers as an attraction well worthy the attention of exhibitors.

N.—It is sure to attract business.

The New Teacher

(Shirley Mason—Fox—4,453 feet)

M. P. W.—As a vehicle for Shirley Mason, "The New Teacher" is lacking in certain satisfying qualities.

F. D.—Shirley Mason has another good little picture in "The New Teacher," a story that suits her personality and contains a pleasing romance, the kind that will satisfy a good majority of audiences, and the star's admirers in particular.

T. R.—Should draw good houses where Miss Mason is a favorite.

N.—Why should it have been produced at all?

E. H.—A pleasing little offering, running smoothly and providing, as a whole, good entertainment.

The Masquerader

(Guy Bates Post—First National—7,835 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture in a theatre should serve as a magnet strong enough to draw everyone in the neighborhood with the price of admission.

E. H.—An accomplished actor in an established dramatic success supplies new and invaluable box office material. A feature among features.

T. R.—Undoubtedly one of the season's best pictures.

F. D.—Good dramatic offering.

N.—Stands well up among the screen's best productions.

Queen of the Moulin Rouge

(Featured Cast—American Releasing Corporation—6,704 feet)

M. P. W.—Altogether a good picture. Exhibitors will find that it has strong popular appeal from many angles.

N.—All in all, it is a good audience picture, founded on one of the sure-fire themes and ought to make money and satisfy most people.

T. R.—An interesting picture.

F. D.—A good number for exhibitors who cater to the class that likes this type.

E. H.—A rapidly moving story told in continuity against a brilliant background.

Flesh and Blood

(Lon Chaney—Western Pictures Exploitation—5,300 feet)

M. P. W.—Lon Chaney's enviable reputation as an actor will probably be strong enough to pull 'em in to see this picture.

T. R.—Subject marking Irving Cummings' debut as a producer is strongly played by excellent cast and competently staged.

N.—The picture is a good audience number.

E. H.—Supported by an all-star cast, this picture should prove fully as attractive a box office feature as any yet made by the popular screen actor.

F. D.—Heavy melo-drama with little action but some able character work.

Oathbound

(Dustin Farnum—Fox—4,468 feet)

M. P. W.—Unusually exhilarating subject for summer season.

T. R.—Should afford agreeable diversion in practically any house.

E. H.—There is about everything the seeker for excitement in films is looking for in this picture.

N.—A satisfactory melodrama, even if you feel cheated in the director's effort to keep you guessing.

F. D.—Lots of action and a constant shift of scene help hold the attention. In fact the plot and acting are secondary to the motor boat and yacht races.

Pictures Which New Department Will Handle Give Promise of Enhancing Any Program

Reviewed by T. S. da Ponte

The Fox Film Corporation has begun the making of a series of short subjects along educational and entertainment lines. A special department, the Fox Educational Division, will supervise their production. Three of these subjects which were recently shown for review were eminently worth while. If the others that are to follow are up to the same high mark they can be classed as valuable additions to any program.

Releasing of these films will begin September 24. They will be one reel or less in length. The time which will elapse between each release has not been definitely decided, but it is said to be likely that they will be turned over to the exhibitor every ten days or two weeks. The supply, it is stated, will be inexhaustible as soon as the work gets fully under way.

In the three subjects that have been shown there was a great deal of interesting and "snappy" matter crammed in. They proved to be just the sort of "educational plus" films that will be sure to hold the interest of the public, and have a way of imparting their valuable lessons in a manner so entertaining that they are easily absorbed and retained.

They will do much to overcome any hesitancy an exhibitor might feel about running strictly educational pictures, because he will realize that his public is not being simply instructed, but that it is being fed large doses of entertainment along with its intake of knowledge.

A sightseeing trip to any far corner of the earth personally conducted by the Fox Educational Division's camera man is bound to prove an interesting adventure if the remainder of the films live up to the promise the first three have given.

The first screened was titled, "Volcanoes of the World," a one-reel subject that took the onlooker on a visit over the earth to the monstrous craters, both extinct and active that have, and still do menace mankind. One hair-raising "stunt" was the filming of Vesuvius, the cameraman flying low over the crater within the sulphuric fumes. Uncovered sections of Pompeii were also shown, which were vivid exhibits of the volcano's might. Among the other volcanoes were Mount Etna in Sicily, and Popocatepetl in Mexico.

"The Story of Ice" showed how this very necessary adjunct of civilization is garnered in the winter to be stored for the summer's uses. In connection with the cutting and storing of the ice, there are pictured sidelights given, such a ice-bergs drifting down from the northern wastes.

"Alligator Hunting and Farming" is vividly enlivened by the showing of how some hunters in Florida go into the water and attack and capture alligators with their bare hands. A desperate battle ensues before the reptile is overcome and hauled ashore. Other sections of the film show the raising of alligators from the time they are hatched until their hides go into the making of traveling bags and other articles.

"Flies"

About the cleverest and most unique cartoon comedy that the writer has ever witnessed is this number of Max Fleischer's "Out of the Inkwell" series. The idea is good, well-handled and humorous, and this picture should find a hearty welcome as it did with Rialto Theatre audiences this week. The little clown is beset by a flock of flies that nearly eat him up. He tries many schemes, but none of them proves effective, so he begs to get back into the inkwell again.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 173

An exceptionally interesting collection. "The Bear Hunt" offers excitement and fine scenery; "The Alchemy of Sunlight" is a triumph in visualizing the growth of a seedling; the views of the Cathedral of Milan show an appreciation of beauty in detail as well as in its grander phases, and the color reproductions of the ocean grottos in Britany brings the number to a pleasing close.. Length, one reel.—M. K.

"The Two Explorers"

The animated Tom Cat and Jerry Mouse of Paul Terry's creation have some amusing adventures in this number. They journey forth in a balloon, find a filling station in mid air, are felled to the earth by lightning and land at the North Pole. Their experience has been punctuated with many fanciful flourishes and has the usual "moral" ending. The humor is light and whimsical and the subject is a good representative of the average Aesop's Film Fable. A Pathe release in one reel.—M. K.

"Bone Dry"

Moonshining is the plausible theme of this most recent of the Hal Roach comedies which Pathe is distributing. Paul Parrott has the role of a timid revenue officer. He has to pose as a bootlegger to escape hanging and proves his right to the profession by brewing some poison that proves too much for his pursuers. He then discovers that they are all revenue officers. This is a good comedy and should be generally liked.—M. K.

"Two-Fisted Jefferson"

Arrow Release Starring Jack Hoxie Has More Thrills Than Average Western.

Reviewed by C. Walter McCarty

More than the usual quota of thrills which characterize the average western photoplay abound in "Two-Fisted Jefferson," in which Jack Hoxie is starred. The story is woven around the experiences of a bold officer of the law in the early days of the West—a time when lawlessness was part of the daily life of the residents of that section.

Hoxie is seen in the role of Jefferson Mosby, a courageous fighter, who, because of his ability along that line, is known as "Two-Fisted Jefferson." He is sent to the bad lands of New Mexico, where the scenes are laid, to straighten out a gang of outlaws at a place known as Cactus Hole. The way he does it furnishes an abundance of situations in which Hoxie appears at his best.

In addition to the thrills, action, suspense and gun-play, there is a lovely little romance running through the picture in which Hoxie is ably supported by Evelyn Nelson. The picture should appeal to all devotees of the western type of moving pictures because it contains all the ingredients of a first-class westerner.

The Cast

Jefferson Lee Mosby	Jack Hoxie
Buck Connor	Claude Payton
District Inspector	E. Laniece
Danny Dugan	J. Welch
Hanby	Bill White

Mollie Miller	Evelyn Nelson

Length, 4,565 Feet.

The Story

The story relates how Jefferson in the capacity of sheriff is sent to clean up a very bad part of the state which is infested by homesteaders and who cannot be removed; where lawlessness is the usual mode of daily life. He plunges into the heart of the trouble; is nearly shot by a pretty girl whom he ultimately marries. Of course, there is a villainous head of the gang who controls the band, and with him Mosby comes into violent personal conflict time and time again, so that the picture is full of chases and adventures and misadventures in a savage country.

Exploitation Angles: Jack Hoxie should be able to carry this over for you, adding enough of the story angle to show it is not one of the old ones.

"Torchy's Feud"

This Educational has the type of theme, cast and comedy that can be highly recommended. It is one of the most entertaining treatments of the story of a revenue officer and a gang of moonshiners that has been offered. The action is not confined to the subject of moonshining although it is cleverly introduced in the beginning, but is an ingenious arrangement of differing situations and incidents that prove constantly diverting. The characteristics of the community where infants chew tobacco and they play tiddle-de-winks with manhole covers is depicted with many sure-fire laughs. Johnny Hines does some clever work and is assisted by a cast of splendid types. Length, two reels.—M. K.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them"

Fox Masterpiece on Subject of Motherhood Will Please Thousands.

Reviewed by Charles M. Inman

Boston audiences again have been privileged to see the initial view of one more of William Fox's screen masterpieces, and in "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," which was given its world premier at Tremont Temple in that city was presented a picture that undoubtedly is destined to rank with "Over the Hill" in its virtually general appeal. It will please thousands and, if tears are a criterion, it is bound to be a great success, albeit the pathos and the weep-compelling moments are relieved by the many laughable interpollations and some of the finest child acting ever seen on the screen.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them" is a clean, wholesome picture, free from morbid and sordid incidents; a real picture, with both dramatic and melodramatic features whose unfolding is always logical and very effective. Moreover, the lesson it teaches is that motherhood is still woman's great career, despite her continued insistance on more freedom and greater independence in all lines of endeavor.

"Mr. X," the mysterious story writer, has planned a novel plot and, while it is somewhat hazy in spots and some of the principals have a tendency to overact, it has so many excellent features that the rough spots are lost sight of in the general goodness. It is by no means a gorgeous spectacle, with expensive scenes and thrilling climaxes, but the picture is finely screened and the story is told in an appealing and most delightful way.

Peggy Shaw, who is a comparatively new comer to the screen is delightful as Betty and does a most creditable bit of work. Robert Agnew, as the young husband, is likable and sincere. The others in the cast are uniformly good, while the acting of the juveniles, who range from one year up to ten, is excellent. Searle Dawley, who directed their work, appears to have a way with him, for he has accomplished a most creditable job.

Directed by J. Searle Dawley.
Length, 8,361 Feet.

The Story

Colonel Lewis is the father of two lovely but motherless daughters, Barbara and Betty. Barbara is married, fond of dogs and horses, but has no use for babies. Betty loves children and hopes to have a lot of them, after she marries her youthful lover. Colonel Lewis discovers that Betty has been meeting Robert Hale and forbids further meetings. Of course there are meetings and the two secretly wed. Robert finds that a technicality makes this marriage illegal and takes out a new license. On the night they are to elope for a second time Robert is killed in an automobile accident. To Barbara falls the duty to tell the colonel that Betty is about to become a mother, and he takes the daughter away. Later Betty returns and learns to love Kenneth Tyler. Her father tells her the baby was born ded. Betty marries Ken, but does not tell him of her past. Barbara's husband leaves her, and she realizes what children mean to Betty. She plans to adopt a baby, and with Betty visits an orphan asylum, where Betty is strangely drawn to one of the infants. Of course she learns that it is her own baby, placed there by her father. She defies her husband and keeps the baby. Later on Barbara and her husband become reconciled by an adopted brother and sister, and, when Kenneth learns all, he also forgives Betty, and everything ends happily.

The cleverness of Max Fleisher's "Out of the Inkwell" cartoons is well known, but in the latest release, "Flies," he has bettered his own record. This number can best be described as sparkling, the humor is clean and the development clear-cut. One laugh follows another in rapid succession and it should prove a hit with any audience.—C. S. S.

"The Galloping Kid"

Universal Western, Starring Hoot Gibson, is Consistent and Speedy

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Hoot Gibson so exactly fits the role of the misfit to which he is assigned in "The Galloping Kid" that the picture has a rare effect of smoothness and consistency. The compactness of the action is one of the best features. Superfluous scenes have been omitted and everything included has a purpose in the movement of the story. The star's admirers and all others who like Westerns that are plain but peppy will respond to this attraction.

Platinum mining, an intercepted romance and an unpaid mortgage supply the suspense. This may have a familiar sound, but the novelty lies in the way the different elements have been combined and handled. There is a suggestion of abruptness now and then in the hastening of the drama, but with the exception of this possible criticism the picture has been cleverly planned and directed.

The scenic background is attractive and a striking effect has been realized in showing some unusual cliff formations. The cast has been well chosen. Hoot Gibson, as "Simplex," gives a performance that is pleasing because of its naturalness, and Edna Murphy, as the feminine inspiration, is charming.

The Cast

"Simplex" Cox.....Ed (Hoot) Gibson

Direction by Nat Ross.
Length, 4,783 Feet.

The Story

Simplex Cox, a drifter, gets himself a job as chaperon to Arnett's daughter, who fancies herself in love with Bolston, an artist. Arnett has threatened to shoot him if he fails in the trust. His daughter Laura keeps a secret appointment with Bolston one day, and Simplex follows, threatening to shoot Bolston unless he leaves the spot. Laura points her gun at Simplex, and the two make him climb the ladder to the cliff ledge, then remove the ladder. Simplex manages to get down, discovers a gang of thieves who are mining platinum from the cliffs belonging to Arnett, locks them up, holds up Bolston on his return, and wins both father and daughter to his side after some explanations.

"The Woman He Loved"

William V. Mong Gives Excellent Performance in American Releasing Picture

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

William V. Mong, considered by many to be among the foremost character actors on the screen, draws a fine characterization in a picture which has but a vague connection with a title that has a certain amount of box-office advantage. He plays the role of a much maligned Jew, who is the victim of a series of frightful circumstances brought about by selfish, cruel people. He wins immediate sympathy for the man he portrays and his acting technique is as excellent as one might suppose would be displayed by him.

Mong wrote the story and scenario for this picture himself. It is another evidence that an actor as good as he is should confine himself to the thing in which he excels. There are very few actors who can write worthy pictures for their own consumption, and when they do, their performances are always better than the material they present themselves. Mong has started out with the right idea of designing a story that has certain human appeal, which "The Woman He Loved" has in no small degree.

But he has somewhat spoiled his chances of an all around success by faulty construction in having the plot run the gamut of localities as well as emotions. The emotional scope is all right, but the tour of the world makes the story slightly jumpy. Also he has knitted together his incidents with far too much coincidence. He is supported by a highly competent cast and Edward Sloman has staged the piece with fine atmosphere.

The Cast

Nathan Levinsky.....William V. Mong
Esther Levinsky.....Marcia Manon
Jimmy Danvers.....Eddie Sutherland
Helen Comstock.....Mary Wynn
John Comstock.....Charles French
Max Levy.....Fred Malatesta
John Danvers.....Harvey Clark
David Levinsky (as a child)....Bruce Guerin
Rosie Romansky.....Lucile Ward

Story and Scenario by William V. Mong.
Directed by Edward Sloman.
Length, 5,200 Feet.

The Story

In Russia Nathan and Esther Levinsky's son David is branded with a cross by a drunken Cossack, but the family finally escape to America. Esther's discontent causes her to run away with Max Levy. Reverses come, however, and she allows David to be adopted by the wealthy Danvers family, and all trace of him is lost.

Meanwhile Nathan's continued search takes him to California, where he prospers on a modest ranch adjoining the estate of John Comstock, whose prejudice against the religion of his neighbor is marked. Yet Comstock, in ignorance of the truth, approves of his daughter Helen's love for Jimmy Danvers, the adopted son.

When Jimmy bares his arm in a fight Nathan sees the sign of the cross, but says nothing to make known his relationship to Jimmy. In a great fire Nathan loses all and goes to San Francisco to start anew. A letter given to Jimmy on his birthday by his adopted father reveals the truth to him, and he resolves to find Nathan and acknowledge him. Though shocked at the revelation of Jimmy's ancestry, Comstock and Helen follow him to the city, where Helen mysteriously disappears.

Nathan encounters Esther, and by chance finds Helen in the company of Max Levy and rescues her in peril of his life. Comstocks' gratitude proves how unworthy a thing is prejudice, and he sanctions the marriage.

Exploitation Angles: If you have a large Jewish patronage you can make this another "Humoresque" with a little hard driving. For a general clientele, bear harder on the actor-author angle, tying the interest to Mr. Mong in his own play, then working on the play angle.

"Little Wildcat"

Alice Calhoun Promises to Have Wider Appeal Than Ever in Vitagraph Picture

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

With Alice Calhoun, Vitagraph's picture, "Little Wildcat," seems assured of success. Without her, the appeal of this production is not so dependable, as the material is somewhat remiss in the quality of originality.

The personality of the star has been played up with considerably more understanding than in some of her other recent vehicles. Alice Calhoun reveals an unsuspected exuberance of spirit and that added to already recognized beauty and charm should give her a much wider range of appeal than ever. While the course of the story is at times jerky and forced, it nevertheless affords, because of its many twists, a chance to show her responsiveness to many moods.

In the opening scenes she gives an energetic demonstration of a girl of the alleys. Following is the metamorphosis which has come to be an inevitable part of so many scenarios. She becomes the ward of a man of society and has all the advantages which have been denied her. The star's interpretation of these scenes shows an unusual regard for accuracy, and she gets some amusing effects as the girl who prefers to be tough but has social prestige thrust upon her. An abrupt change in scene takes the spectator to the war zone four years later. Here again the effort to exploit the star's versatility seems a little obvious.

There are some lovely close-ups of Miss Calhoun and the new quality that is apparent in her acting takes the picture out of the class of the ordinary.

The Story

Mag o' the Alley, known as "litle wildcat," lands in court one day after stealing a watch and fighting with every man in sight. Robert Ware, a friend of Judge Arnold, is anxious to give her a chance to reform. Despite the judge's ideas, he takes her into his home and tries to bring her up to be a lady. Four years later, Arnold is wounded at the front and lands on the German side. He is brought back to life by a wonderful nurse who never tells him her name. When he comes back to the United States he meets her again at Roert Ware's home and learns that his nurse was the same girl he had given up as hopeless. "The Fighting Guide"

William Duncan Picture First to be Produced in Order of Continuity Like Stage Drama—Vitagraph Release

Reviewed by Charles M. Inman

"The Fighting Guide" is filmed in the great outdoors, amid fresh, rugged mountain scenery, where the atmosphere is in keeping with the story and the backgrounds are second to none. Added to that, the photoplay is excellent, the cast is strong, and in his direction Duncan has had full opportunity to display his unusual talents.

Not only is there rare opportunity for real dramatic acting and the display of unusual feats of horsemanship and acrobatic agility, but there is a delightful vein of comedy that runs throughout the entire tale, and a love story that has a happy ending. In fact, it is not too much to say that "The Fighting Guide" has everything that tends of make up a pleasing entertainment and contains an appeal for everyone.

Duncan, himself, does some highly creditable dramatic acting and his co-star, Edith Johnson, is brilliant in her interpretation of a part that calls for some real histrionic ability. The others in the cast are admirable and assist in making a production that is bound to please.

Length, 4,905 Feet.

The Story

The scenes of the story are laid in the Northwest. Lord Chumleigh Winston sets out for a trip over the Canadian Rockies with his bathtub, golf sticks, reclining chairs and other useless accessories, under the care of Ned Lightning, one of the greatest guides of the North, and an Indian helper. Tubbs, his lordship's valet, accompanies. A week later the guide blows up and decides to exchange places with the nobleman, and a letter in a coat belonging to the nobleman sets Ned on a series of remarkable adventures. Ned goes to the village, toward which Lord Winston is headed, and learns, while impersonating the nobleman, that Grant Knowles, manager of the company of which Lord Winston is the head, is planning to cheat Ethel MacDonald out of a valuable strip of land, and that her father is under arrest, charged with the murder of Knowles's secretary. That night Ned releases MacDonald from the jail and learns that a half-breed Indian knows something about the murder. He trails the Indian and captures him. In the meantime MacDonald is recaptured and placed on trial and, just as the jury pronounces him guilty, Ned appears in the courtroom with the Indian. The latter points out Knowles as the real slayer, and the manager is shot down as he attempts to escape. MacDonald is then freed and. of course, in due season Ned and the daughter marry, while MacDonald is made field manager of the company's land, under the management of Ned, who receives his appointment on the spot from Lord Winston.

"Burning Sands"

George Melford Production Is Lavishly Mounted Melodrama—Paramount Release.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

"Burning Sands" is hot stuff. It is a fast moving melodrama staged with a lavish hand. The story may follow in a familiar path but the ultra rapid action and the magnificence of the sets and appurtenances obliterates that fact. One of your oldest friends looks like new. But whether or not familiar the very important angle must be taken into consideration that the story strikes a widely popular note. Also the fact that the plot travels over the hot sands is no small bid for appeal at the present time. The picture has enough Arabs, oases, sand dunes, palm trees, mueddin calls, striped tents, moons and warm love interest to suit the taste of any consistent theatregoer, and particularly those who have a passion for Sheik pictures.

In combining a vividly melodramatic plot with strong love interest and setting them amid the picturesque surroundings, the producers of "Burning Sands" have created an audience appeal of high powered strength. Also it has an added advantage towards appeal in a superb performance in the most sympathetic role of the picture contributed by Jacqueline Logan. Not long ago when Miss Logan made her film debut she gave high promise of unusual screen talent beside her striking good looks. With her work in "Burning Sands" she more than fulfills that promise, and displays a talent that should not go unrewarded in raising her to stardon. She quite runs away with the picture, even taking into consideration the fine work by nearly everybody in a large and well known cast.

George Melford has exerted his usually fine capabilities as a director in staging "Burning Sands." He has been given a theatrically melodramatic story to handle and he has kept the spirit of the thing. It is frankly "meller," and good entertainment as such.

The Story

Daniel Lane lives alone with his books in the ruins of an old monastery in the Sahara and is friend and confidant of old Sheik Ali, head man of the oasis, whose son, Ibrahim, is plotting with renegade Arabs to overthrow his father. Called to Cairo on government business, Lane meets Muriel, the daughter of the British Commissioner. He is sent out to quell threatened disturbances among conflicting tribes and takes up his quarters just outside Cairo's gates. In the city, one evening, a little French dancer, Lizette, is rescued by Lane from the insults of Barthampton, secretary to the Commissioner. For revenge, Barthampton tells Muriel that Lizette is Lane's mistress, and, disbelieving it, Muriel goesto Lane's tent and there she finds the French girl, who has come to warn him of a plot against his life. Crushed by the revelation, she nevertheless is again drawn to him after he has been named as the old Sheik Ali's successor. She arrives at the oasis just before an attack is made by Barthampton and his Arab allies. Seized by Barthampton, she is rescued by Lane, but Lizette, who has ridden to the desert stronghold to warn her friend, is killed in the skirmish.

"Love Is An Awful Thing"

Constant Fun in Owen Moore's Latest Selznick Production

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

There is far too little laughter in the world, as more erudite Coronas than this have often bromidically broadcasted. Titled under a statement that many will fail to contradict, Owen Moore's newest farce, "Love Is An Awful Thing," will do much to relieve this deplorable condition. It is constant fun, inducing deep seated laughs that are motivated by sheer nonsense, delightful nonsense. It's ocular laughing gas. And it'll knock 'em for a row of encomiums.

"Love Is An Awful Thing" starts out as pure farce and ends as pure farce. There is no attempt to make anything more out of it than a broad comedy picture. It may be implausible or inconsistant, but it carries out the purpose for which it was designed. It is risible.

There is no one thing wholly responsible for the delightful farce comedy emanating from this picture. Neither the combination author-director nor the actors deserve credit alone, except for the manner in which each has worked with the others in making a co-ordinated whole. The story has supplied farcical situations—all of which may not be novel, however—that are built up from the foundation of one complication resulting from what seems to be a simple little lie developing into a series of complications becoming more and more serious and involved as the thing progresses. A well knitted scenario has been made and this has been handled in direction by the same man in such a way that all the comedy value has been realized.

Then the performers, headed by Moore, displaying his unusual talents as a farceur, have utilized every advantage, the situations being presented with excellent results. Although the star keeps the comedy moving swiftly whenever he is on the screen he is by no means the only valuable contributor to the laugh promotion. Alice Howell, the well-known farceuse, is delightful in every one of the many scenes she plays. She is of tremendous value to the film. Arthur Hoyt is responsible for a number of the humorous moments, and Snitz Edwards and Douglas Carter do their share. The feminine appeal is maintained by Marjorie Daw, giving a fine account of herself opposite the star, and Katherine Perry (Mrs. Moore) lending charm in a small role. Charlotte Mineau is excellent as the blackmailing villainess. The title writer has augmented the comedy with some snappy stuff.

"Love Is An Awful Thing" is to laugh. And laugh.

Length, 6,500 Feet.

The Story

Anthony Churchill, about to marry Helen Griggs, is on six months' probation imposed upon him by Helen's father, who knows Anthony has been wild in his earlier days. Marion, a forgotten flame, turns up with incriminating love letters which Anthony has written and threatens a breach of promise suit. Anthony represents himself as already married, using the janitor's wife and some hired children as his supposed family. Marion seems convinced, but Helen is heartbroken when she discovers what she considers the proof of Anthony's perfidy. Anthony and his chum try to steal the incriminating love letters from Marion's room and are caught in the act. At the psychological moment Marion and her attorneys are identified as a couple of blackmailers engaging in a plan to mulct Anthony and the Griggs family of some of their money.

"The Hidden Woman"

Evelyn Nesbit Featured in Picture on Regeneration Theme—Distributed by American Releasing Corporation.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Pictures on the regeneration theme have shown an enduring popularity with a great number of patrons, and with this as a criterion "The Hidden Woman" should please many. It is chiefly the strength of the theme that carries the picture along. This supplies a certain inspiration that is not so strikingly evident in the action. Most of the action is extremely serious with an abundance of melodrama and without many bright moments, but the title and the early scenes suggest the real motive of the story and furnish an incentive to the interest.

Evelyn Nesbit handles the featured part in a way that will appeal, generally. It calls for a succession of vivid moods and she is versatile enough to be continually interesting. Her son Russell Thaw gives one of the most able and charming performances of any in the cast, the more noticeable perhaps because it supplies a bright touch. The cast includes a number of efficient players such as Mary Alden, Crauford Kent and Jack Evans.

Length, 4,626 Feet.

The Story

Ann Wesley, a Broadway butterfly, is reproached for her frivolity by Bart Andrews, a sincere admirer, who tells her that somewhere in her personality lies a better self, which he calls "the hidden woman." She retreats to a small lodge in the Adirondacks, where MacLoid, the town boss, looks upon her with scorn. He spreads the word that she is not a wholesome person, because of a few unconventional whims of hers. Unknown to her Bart is watching all her movements, and saves her from Donovan, a brute from the lumber yards. She is the means of bringing together a poor neighbor and her derelict husband and proves, after a number of dizzy experiences, that "the hidden woman" has been found. Bart is then on hand to give her his protection and love.

"Baron Bragg and the Devilish Dragon"

Tony Sarg has used his Almanac to a popular purpose in this. He has depicted in amusing style the difference between the actual experiences of a straying husband and the alibi which he offers his wife. The comedy shows considerable originality and especially with masculine fans it promises to be a decided success. An Educational release in one reel.—M. K.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Sarcasm

Theo Forgensen, presumably projectionist, Rialto Theatre, Rock Springs, Wyoming, rises up on his hind legs and remarks:

My Dear Mr. Richardson:—After writing three letters and throwing an equal number in the waste paper basket, I've finally decided to accept your invitation and "go to it."

May I ask B. Hilton, projectionist, who hails from Valdosta, Ga., to be good enough to forward blueprints and instructions for setting up a film testing machine such as he refers to, for the good of the craft.

Come across, Mr. Hilton. You also warn us to "use our heads and rig it up right," which of course, can't be done unless you give us working plans.

May I also suggest to you, Mr. Hilton, that you immediately get busy with the Eastman people relative to your experiments along these lines. Give them the exact horse (brake) power required to pull a film in two. This information would doubtless be highly appreciated by their research laboratories. And, oh, yes, by the way, do you use this machine at every rewinding?

Sincere Sympathy

Fortunately I experience no difficulty in securing necessary supplies for the projection department of our theatre. I most sincerely sympathize with you gentlemen in the large eastern theatre who have to go 50-50 on supplies. Your manager is doubtless of the progressive sort, since he agrees to furnish you with motors, etcetra.

Did you say you had used this scheme for five years past? No doubt your motor would need replacing and I would suggest a larger one.

Of course, I (we), have an automatic rewinder, geared to about six minutes per reel—rather slow, don't you think? Inspecting is all done by very slow hand re-winding. Your system must be far faster, and much more efficient, hence will of course adopt same as soon as blue prints are received.

Does Not Understand

Brother Forgensen is not at all sparing of sarcasm and I can fully understand exactly how he feels about it, nor is his attitude in any way to his discredit, BUT he does NOT understand conditions as they are, taking the country as a whole.

The attitude of friend Forgensen opens up a wide field for argument, which it is unfortunately utterly impractical to discuss fully in the restricted space of this department. Forgensen is RIGHT. Also HILTON is RIGHT, in my 'umble opinion.

Let me say to Forgensen that it is a daily occurrence with thousands of projectionists to receive "service" which often comes just a few moments before it is time to open the show, in such condition that it would require from one to three hours to put it into even decent shape for projecting.

A projectionist in a large eastern city, whom I know personally to be a very good man, has had half a dozen incipient fires in one week simply by reason of ripped sprocket holes and utterly rotten splices. He is not paid to inspect and repair those wretched films. He is employed to project them, and anyhow he could not possibly do it, because he seldom or never gets his eight reel show more than half an hour before opening time and it would require five times that time to put some of those shows in decent shape.

Union Stands for It

And his union stands for it and allows such JUNK to be delivered to a member for projection! He does not even try to repair it, and I'm tetotally everlastingy (censored) if I would either!

He can quit his job, yes, BUT a very large percentage of the theatres in his city are now closed down and many men are out of work and his union will not and does not protect him against being compelled to do film exchange inspection and repairs.

Would it not be safer and in every way better to have the sort of rigging Hilton suggests, pull at least those vile slices in two? Answer me that, brother Forgensen!

You speak of the Eastman Research laboratories. They are doing a worthy work, certainly, but they do NOT protect the projectionist against receiving junk service, and nobody else does either!

I do not suggest that the Hilton plan is ideal—far from it. It should not be used in theatres which get good service in decent repair, but I'm right here to side with Hilton to the extent that pulling bum splices in two in utterly rotten "service" is far and away better than either putting in from one to three hours doing film exchange inspection and repairing free of charge, or attempting to project the film with the attendant risk of many stops and of fire.

In my opinion unions are very much to blame that they do not protect their members from such outrages, if for no other reason than because it forces them to subject their audiences to a real risk.

Brother Forgensen I am unable to agree with you. I do, however, want to compliment you on gearing your rewinder down to a sane speed. Let us hear from more of you on this matter. The conditions of film service in thousands of theatres is nothing short of outrageous.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

MINART'S METHOD
Of Reducing Condenser Breakage As to Lenses

An Old Question

A young man in Nome, North Dakota, asks an old, old question. He writes:

Dear Brother Richardson: Am applying for license to project pictures in North Dakota. What should I study up on in order to pass?

For three years I have projected, using a "Power," in a town of 300, showing twice a week. Let me know where I can get the new handbook. Place where I lived burned and my handbook went up in very smoky smoke. Can't get along without it. Use 60 cycle 110 volt current, through a transformer. Get a fairly good light.

900 Questions

The new handbook has something like 900 numbered questions, opposite each of which will be found the page or pages on which the answer will be found.

As to what you should study, why not knowing anything about the North Dakota examination I cannot say, but it is pretty safe to assure that, the "examination" is in the hands of city employees, political appointees, and is just a farce used to collect money with, hence of slight value, except to scare the men into doing at least some real studying before they tackle it.

This may not be true, and if the North Dakota examination really is in the hands of competent men—men who actually know something about both theoretical and practical projection, then I shall be glad to publish that fact if it be reasonably well substantiated. Most United States examinations are very largely farcical. Their only value is found in the fact that fear of failure induces men to really study before applying.

I cannot, as I said, indicate to you the line of study you should concentrate on, but presumably the only examination will be on electrics. What it should be is something else again. You will find that very well discussed in the new handbook, which is now released. Send six dollars. You will be glad you did when you see it.

Maybe So

Alfred R. Minart, Los Angeles, California, sends in a method he proposes for reducing condenser breakage. He says it works, too—sometimes. He also says:

The main cause of breakage is the thin edge of the collector lens, which heats up sooner than the thick center, thus setting up unequal expansion in the glass as a whole.

If, therefore, the thin edge be eliminated, as shown, and the thick edge be supplied with an adapter, the danger of breakage must be reduced. This is the theory, and actual tests have given promise that there is at least something in it. I therefore pass it along for what it is worth.

There certainly seems to be logic in what you say, and it is an excellent stunt for those working under conditions where reduction of condenser lens diameter is desirable.

It might also be worth while for those troubled with uncontrollable lens breakage to get a six-inch diameter lens of proper focal length and cut it down. The absorption of the extra glass would not amount to much. Glad to have reports from all who try it out.

Wants Help

J. C. Bickel, Projectionist, Majestic Theatre, Pomeroy, Ohio, says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Have two Ft. Wayne Type A Compensarcs, the lower coil of each of which is burned out. Have tried to find out how to rewind them, but without success.

Have plenty of tools and equipment with which to wind and bake transformer coils. How much wire does such a coil require and what size? How many turns per coil? Is there a sheet insulation between each layer of the ooil, and of what is the same composed? Are the core plates insulated, and if so with what? Have read the handbook and projection department and think them great.

A Job for the Manufacturer

I would not advise you to attempt the re-winding of the coils. That is a job for the manufacturer. I could not possibly carry in my head all the details of each make of projection transformer. You can easily find size of wires and number of turns by examining the old coils. I have watched the winding of these coils but do not remember all the details of insulation. The wires are covered, as I remember it, with a linen insulation material. The coils are thoroughly insulated from the core, and I am under the impression—memory only as to this—that there is a layer of insulating asbestos material between each layer of the coil. The plates or sheets of the core are insulated from each other by painting with an insulating compound. Also I think each layer of the coil is painted with an insulating compound.

I am ready and willing to aid you in any possible way, but it is hardly to be expected that I can instruct you in purely manufacturing details.

This much I will tell you: if you count the number of turns of wire in the old coil and measure its size, and you then secure enough wire of high grade, heat-resisting insulating properties, and make a coil, with a thin sheet of rather pure asbestos between each layer—first having protected the core with several thicknesses of asbestos, you will get the effect you want, insofar as electrics be concerned, but I doubt if you can get the coil you wind into the casing. Take my advice and send the transformer to the Ft. Wayne folks and have the job done right. It will be best in the end.

Dry Films

P. B. Farr, Jr., projectionist, Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi, has trouble which he describes as follows:

Have found the department to be a great help in my work. Have a Powers and a Simplex projector, regular equipment. The Powers is a Six B.

Both projectors are in fairly good condition, but have been having trouble with some films this summer. The film does not seem to lie flat over the aperture. Its center moves backward and forward, so that it is of course impossible to maintain sharp focus in the projected image.

The trouble is not in the projectors, since it is the same with both; also I only experience it with films which seem dry and have no life in them. Would appreciate your opinion as to where the trouble really lies.

Preparedness

in your theatre calls for Richardson's new 4th edition HANDBOOK of PROJECTION.

You will receive an autographed copy if you send your order direct to this company before September 30, 1922.

The price is $6.00 postpaid.

Don't Delay

CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO.

516 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

I know of no reason why shrinkage of the films should cause this trouble, as there is presumed to be sufficient difference in the sprocket holes and the teeth of the intermittent sprocket to allow for all possible contraction or shrinkage.

It is, however, possible, I think, that the resiliency of new films might allow of sufficient "give" to compensate for a slight curvature of the aperture plate tracks and tension shoes due to wear, whereas dry films would have tendency to buckle.

Carefully examine your aperture plate and tension shoes. Remove them, if necessary, and apply a steel straight edge. If they show wear, especially if it be uneven wear, I think you will find that to be the seat of trouble, and new shoes and aperture plate must be installed on the Power's. With the Simplex you may or may not have to renew the tracks. Late model tracks are so made that they can be turned.

This is all fully explained in Instruction No. 30, page 679, of the new handbook. For the Power's see Instructions Nos. 12, 13, 14 and 15, pages 636 and 637 of new handbook.

I am of the opinion that what I have suggested will enable you to locate the trouble and apply the remedy. If any one has further suggestion to offer let him get out his offerer and put it to work.

My Old Home Town

From O. H. Butler, projectionist, Majestic Theatre, Centerville, Iowa, the town in which I first disturbed the peaceful calm of this wurruld, comes an inquiry concerning his optical train. He says:

A G. E. mercury arc rectifier, supplying 30 amperes to a projection arc; carbons 5/8 positive, cored of course, and 1/2 inch solid below, set as per "C," figure 124 of the handbook; Crater distance (crater to face of collector lens) three inches; two 7½ inch plano convex lenses spaced 1/8 inch apart; distance condenser to film 16 inches; working distance of projection lens 3½ inches; Gundlach Manhattan projection lens, 4½ inch E. F.; distance of projection 69 feet, with a 14 foot picture; lens diameter 1 13-16 inches.

What do you think of this lay-out? Would not a 6½-7½ condenser be more nearly correct? Also, would not a meniscus bi-convex condenser be better? Eighteen inches is the limit of distance from condenser to aperture.

Your crater is too far from face of collector lens for your amperage. What you need, according to the lens chart, is two 6½ inch plano convex. You cannot use meniscus bi-convex, as they would require approximately a 24-inch distance center of condenser to aperture.

You did not say whether limit of distance (18 inches) was from center of condenser combination or face of converging lens. It makes fully an inch of difference. You cannot even use two 6½ inch lenses as they should be used, because they would require 21 inches from point midway between the lenses to aperture, but anyhow put them in and try it out. I guess you can get your spot the right rize all right without seriously injuring the effect.

Send Exact Diameter

Send me the EXACT HORIZONTAL diameter of your crater and I will see just what you should have for the best possible condition.

Broadly speaking, there are the following points involved in condenser selection: (a) To locate the light source as close to the face of the collector lens as is possible without setting up undue lens breakage. (b) To keep the condenser lenses as close together as is possible and use as short focal length collector lens as is practicable in order to reduce light loss between the lenses to a minimum. (c) To get a spot of working size with the condenser located as far as is practicable from the film, in order to avoid waste of light at the spot or at the projection lens, and to keep the projection lens diameter as small as is possible without light waste.

Focal Length

D. H. O'Conner, projectionist, Elko Theatre, Bemidji, Minn., writes:

Am in need of information as to focal length of condenser. Am using a 5¾ E. F. Gundlach-Manhattan projection lens, with a 2¼ inch opening stopped down to 1½ inches. Working distance 5 inches. Projection distance 83 feet. Picture 11 feet 6 inches. Use 35 to 40 amperes D. C. through Ft. Wayne motor generator. What focal length collector and converging condenser lens should I have, meniscus bi-convex—and what distance should they be from the aperture? Use 6½ collector and 7½ converging lens now. Just came to this theatre and know that condenser set is not right, but have had so much trouble getting correct combinations that will ask your advice.

Also what is the price of your new Handbook?

The new book is pretty close to 1,000 pages and its price is six dollars. You all thought the Third Edition well worth four dollars. Well, the new one is six dollars and is better worth ten than the Third Edition was four.

As to the lenses: Why have you stopped the projection lens down so much? Certainly it will not cover the entire beam unless you are using slide carriers in front of your condensers.

Even with a 21-inch from face of converging lens to aperture it would require a two-inch diameter lens to cover the beam, and it would not quite do it then.

Had your question arrived a week or ten days later I could have given you the entire dope. As it is now I would advise you to use a 6½ meniscus and an 8½ bi-convex, with about 21½ inches from center of condenser combination to aperture—if you can get it.

Then open up that lens until the entire beam is admitted, unless you have a heavy angle and the lens has been stopped down to give depth of focus, which latter I suspect to be the case.

New Houses Building Refute Sad Wails of Crape Hangers

FROM time to time, we hear a long-drawn wail about picture house closing and exhibitors going out of business until those who are not watching the pulse of the exhibiting branch of the industry might think that that portion of the business was going to the demnition bow-wows and that the majority of the exhibitors would shut up house as soon as they could negotiate for lumber of which to make the shutters.

All of which is absolutely wrong—so wrong, indeed, that the only serious feature connected with it is the impression that it sometimes leaves on the outside public that heeds pessimistic talk on the subject without being possessed of the knowledge to discount it.

There is no use disguising the fact that houses do close and are closing—they always have and they always will, but an analysis of the situation will show that they are, as a general thing, houses that were run by those without the necessary qualifications for showmanship and who threw up the sponge when real honest-to-goodness competition hove in sight.

Equipment and Management Necessary

The house with inadequate equipment and hampered by poor management would scratch along in some fashion and sometimes even make real money so long as it had the field to itself or its competitors were no better equipped or managed.

It had no more chance of lasting after a real picture theatre invaded the field than had an old-fashioned sanded floor grocery store, with stock piled in boxes and barrels when a sanitary, modern equipped, food purveying establishment located on the next block.

Up to and including the July 15 issue of the Moving Picture World, we had already reported $60,379,500 appropriated for new picture theatres, during the current year.

Below will be found a list of eighty-six additional new houses. Of these eighty-six, the approximate costs of but forty-five are stated in the reports. The total expenditure for these forty-five totals $11,875,000.

It will be noted that the individual amounts quoted are higher than in many of our previous reports. For instance, one house will cost $2,500,000, while another will cost $2,000,000.

One house will cost $800,000, three others will cost $500,000 each, while there is one house at $350,000.

Six of the houses will cost $250,000 each, while five others will cost $200,000 each.

One house will cost $175,000, another $165,000, while three are to be erected at a cost of $150,000 each.

At a cost of $100,000 each four houses will be built, another will cost $80,000, while five will cost $75,000 each. One will cost $60,000, while eight will cost $50,000 each.

At $40,000, the lowest individual cost reported, three houses will be built.

The geographical distribution of these houses is as follows:

Arkansas, one; California, four; Connecticut, one; Delaware, one; District of Columbia, one; Florida, one; Georgia, one; Illinois, seven; Indiana, four; Iowa, one; Kansas, one; Kentucky, two; Louisiana, two; Maine, one; Massachusetts, five; Michigan, three; Minnesota, one; Missouri, six; New Jersey, three; New York, nine; Ohio, five; Pennsylvania, twelve; Texas, six; Virginia, one; West Virginia, two; Wisconsin, five.

The size of the new houses, the care and forethought with which they are planned, the material employed in their erection and the equipment with which they are furnished indicate that the exhibiting end of the motion picture industry is rapidly stabilizing and is now regarded as a business enterprise requiring capital and management and is rapidly passing, if it has not already passed, out of the stage where it was regarded as a speculation or an avocation.

Theatres Projected

CONWAY, ARK.—C. R. Guin will rebuild theatre recently destroyed by fire.

IRVINGTON, CAL.—Construction work on Irvington Theatre, to cost about $50,000, is well advanced.

LONG BEACH, CAL.—New Theatre erected by F. F. Latta will open soon.

POMONA, CAL.—More than $80,000 bonds have been disposed of toward erection of theatre on West Third street, to cost $165,000. Address Mark H. Potter.

WATSONVILLE, CAL.—Edward P. Pfingst will erect new moving picture theatre.

WINSTED, CONN.—Steve Mulcady will erect moving picture theatre.

SEAFORD, DEL.—W. Ford Breeding has completed New Theatre, costing $40,000.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Harry M. Crandall, 801 First street, N. W., will erect theatre at 18th street and Columbia road, to replace the Knickerbocker Theatre.

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA.—C. J. Meerdink has contract to erect theatre at 415 Clematis avenue, with seating capacity of 1,000 for J. C. Gregory, to cost $50,000.

LA GRANGE, GA.—R. E. L. Golden, proprietor of Golden Theatre, and Charles W. Smith will erect moving picture theatre at Hill and Fair streets.

CHICAGO, ILL.—Louis Hecht has purchased entire block on Milwaukee avenue, between Montrose and Agatite avenues, and has plans by David S. Klafter, 64 West Randolph street, for theatre, store and apartment building. Theatre will have seating capacity of 2,000.

DECATUR, ILL.—Jess L. Brun will open moving picture theatre in Morrison Building, with seating capacity of 350.

ELDORADO, ILL.—Harrisburg & Eldorado Theatre Company will erect theatre, to cost $75,000.

*HARRISBURG, ILL.—O. L. Turner has plans by Allen P. Barnes, 1329 Birchwood avenue, Chicago, for two-story brick and stone fire-proof moving picture and vaudeville theatre, 50 by 200 feet, to be erected at Cherry and East Poplar streets, to cost $75,000.

JOLIET, ILL.—George and William Clare will erect moving picture theatre and store building at 419 Jefferson street, to cost $50,000.

MOLINE, ILL.—Contract has been let for erection of one-story and balcony fireproof theatre and store building, 77 by 150 feet, for F. L. Cornwall, La Salle Building, St. Louis, Mo., to cost $200,000.

*WAUHEGAN, ILL.—Dayton Brothers, care Orpheum Theatre, Kenosha, Wis., have plans by C. W. and G. L. Rapp, 190 North State street, Chicago, for three-story brick and reinforced concrete moving picture and vaudeville theatre, 75 by 200 feet, to be erected at northwest corner Water and Genesee streets, to cost $350,000.

FORT WAYNE, IND.—Fort Wayne Art School and Museum has plans by M. S. Mahurin for Little Theatre to be erected at Berry and Rockhill streets.

FORT WAYNE, IND.—Little Theatre will be erected at Berry and Rockhill streets, with seating capacity of 250.

Simplex Distributors Report Good Business

Word comes from the Erker Brothers Optical Company of St. Louis, Mo., that the Universal Film Exchange is now occupying the new building located at 3322 Olive street in the above city, and that two Simplex Incandescent Projectors are an important adjunct of the projection room of what is said to be a very elaborate review room.

Erker Brothers also recently equipped the Broadway Theatre, one of the oldest motion picture houses in St. Louis, with two type "S" Simplex Projectors.

The Western Theatre Supply Company of San Francisco, Cal., reports that it has recently installed in the Hart Theatre, Klamath, Ore., two of the latest Simplex Projectors finished in battleship gray enamel.

This firm has also equipped the Excelsior Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., with several of the Simplex Projectors equipped with the Simplex-Sunlight High Intensity Arc Lamps. Other installations include, The Fruit Growers' Supply Co., Susanville, Cal., Atlas Educational Film Co., and the Ball Laboratories, both of which are located in San Francisco.

From Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles Office of the Argus Enterprises, Inc., also writes that it is finding an increased business and that it has sold many Simplex Projectors in its territory. Some of the installations being, Cosmosart Studio, Arlington Theatre, Florence Theatre, Barn Theatre, Garrick Theatre, all in Los Angeles. Thos. H. Ince Studio, Culver City, Temple High School, El Monte, First M. E. Church, Long Beach, and Campadonica Brothers, Guadalupe, Cal.

MOV-EZY

Means Ease at the Movies

"Did You See That!"

"No, I didn't! Just at that moment somebody decided to leave and every one in the row had to get up to let him out."

How often is the screen hidden from view and the climax of the picture spoiled by just such an occurrence?

The Mov-Ezy, the chair that means "Ease at the Movies," does away with all this. A slight turn of the Mov-Ezy to either side provides ample passage space, without the necessity of getting up.

If you have not already seen a Mov-Ezy in operation, it will pay you to do so. Stop at our show room or a theatre where they are installed, or send for illustrated catalogue that gives a splendid idea of these beautiful and wonderfully popular theatre chairs.

Insure Your Theatre Against a Dark House

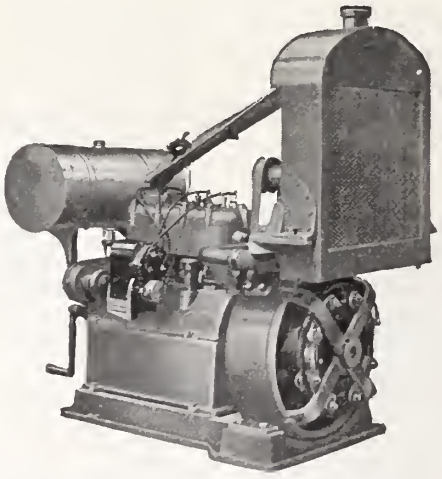
You carry fire insurance—life insurance—but what insurance have you against a dark house?

Every exhibitor faces the possibility of a dark house due to interruption of central station juice. Four Albany, New York, houses recently lost 8,000 admissions. Similar occurrences happen almost every day.

But the worst is yet to come. . . . Actual reports show that a serious coal shortage is imminent, even if the coal strike is settled at once. Many central stations will be short on coal, causing interruption in electric service.

You can buy insurance against a dark house, and your policy will be a Universal Electric Plant for generating your own current.

Universal



FOUR Cylinder Electric Plants

(Sizes for All Requirements)

are especially designed to meet the requirements of the exhibtior. The smooth, quiet running four-cylinder engine affords a steady flow of smooth, direct current, which is so essential for projecting a good picture.

Universals are in operation the world over. Some exhibitors even attribute their success to the good projection and dependable service of the Universal Electric Plant.

When writing give all information possible about the electrical requirements of your theatre in order that our Engineering Department can recommend the proper size and type plant.

DEBRIE CAMERAS

REGULAR SPEED SLOW MOTION

RECORD THE EVENTS OF THE WORLD

THE DEBRIE HIGH SPEED CAMERA

240 pictures per second

For Analyzing Rapid Motion

THE FOREMOST CAMERA OF THE MOTION PICTURE WORLD

Many attempts have been made in recent years to manufacture a high-speed camera capable of analyzing rapid motion and slowing it down sufficiently for the eye to follow such motion in detail. None of these cameras has been equal to the task of the rapid mechanical action required to produce pictures at the rate of 200 or more per second.

It remained for DEBRIE, after long experimentation, to perfect a camera which, though light and simple of manipulation, has been found to fulfill all the requirements, producing as steady a picture on the screen as though taken at the normal rate of 16 pictures per second.

Most directors and camera men are familiar with the results of this high speed camera, which are shown on the screen daily by the numerous REVIEWS and educational Feature films.

CLEANLINESS

VISITORS comment first upon the cleanliness of THE STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES. It reminds them of a modern hospital. Its immaculate condition is one of the reasons the foremost producers of the West rely upon us for complete laboratory service. They know dust and dirt can't possibly get in. Apparatus washing all air admitted to the plant and automatically controlling the temperature and humidity makes us immune to weather disturbances, to climatic changes.

THERE'S no such thing as dust on wet film at THE STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES. Yet this is not our greatest asset. Our plant, the newest and finest in the West, is manned by an efficient organization of skilled workmen, each a specialist in his line. With such advantages it is only natural that these big producers have confidence in us.

THE following wire from Mr. Lasky was sent to Mr. Zukor. It was written, not for publication, but as an expression of Mr. Lasky's personal opinion of the picture.

"I have never been so impressed or so enthusiastic about any picture in years as I am over this really marvelous production. I do not hesitate to advise you that consensus of opinion, to which I heartily agree, is that 'To Have and To Hold' surpasses any picture of its kind.

"It is replete with action, romance, a marvelous love story, thrilling stunts and a gorgeous production that will rival any of the big two dollar pictures. All of the players give best performances of their careers. Fitzmaurice has far surpassed anything he has ever made. I really believe this is a two dollar show if ever there was one."

Lewis J. Selznick offers

16 Only

but — the biggest and best sixteen pictures of the year

1922-23

—and time

FOR the year 1922-23 the Selznick Pictures Corporation will produce only SUPER SPECIAL PHOTOPLAYS.

The Star Series, or Program Plan, has been abandoned.

SIXTEEN SUPER SPECIAL PHOTOPLAYS are already definitely planned and in production. It is the aim of Lewis J. Selznick to make these sixteen photoplays the biggest and most important group of pictures of the year.

In their decision to divert from the Program Plan to a policy of SUPER SPECIALS only, the Selznicks are but following the dictates of a demand that is both unmistakable and insistent. No man championed the Star Series system with more vigor than did Lewis J. Selznick at that time when the Star Series enjoyed its early vogue; no man was quicker to realize the present necessity of its abandonment.

Because they represent the definite result of a Selznick production plan which has been many years in the making, Selznick's SIXTEEN SUPER SPECIALS will unquestionably fit present-day exhibitors' needs better than any other group of attractions being offered in the industry.

To this end the Selznick company has been carefully building and perfecting a producing organization capable of excelling in any task, no matter what its magnitude, which may be laid out for it.

For years the Selznick company has kept a vigilant watch over the literary field in its determination to secure the best stories for photoplay production which have been flashed across the market.

Quietly the Selznick company has been outlining scenarios which insure now the has come—

novel screen treatment—no matter what the screen situation, and has been experimenting with new technical ideas involving the most advanced methods of lighting and scenic investiture.

With acute care and discrimination the Selznick company has been entering into contracts with screen notables ideally suited for the various parts they are being called upon to play in these SIXTEEN SELZNICK SPECIALS. Every Selznick Picture produced during the season 1922-23 will have in its cast stars of the first magnitude, chosen without restrictions from the motion picture industry at large.

All these careful preparations which have been in the making, not for months but for the past three years, will enable Lewis J. Selznick, first in the industry to advocate screen plays of a real Broadway character, to continue his leadership in the industry by making not only "big" pictures, but the kind of "big" pictures which will insure the exhibitor record business at his box-office.

In this booklet the Selznicks tell you of the first eight of this group of SIXTEEN SUPER SPECIALS In view of the tremendously big scale upon which each of these features will be produced, it would be well nigh impossible to announce with accuracy the details of a year's entire output. Announcements covering the remaining eight pictures will follow in due time. Selznick Pictures will continue to be distributed by its releasing organization, Select Pictures Corporation. Following its announced policy, Select will also distribute such other high-class product as may be arranged for with the better Independent Producers.

set the literary world agog when "The Common Law" was published in magazine and book form. Everywhere it was proclaimed the greatest piece of fiction ever penned. This picture version of "The Common Law" is being made on the tremendously lavish scale which the bigness of the story demands.

The Selznick production force is making "The Common Law" and "Ruppert of Hentzau" its master works of all time. Everything that brains, money and experience ever injected into a picture is being put into this production.

an elaborate picturization of the biggest and best known piece ever written by this favorite author.

Conceded by the entire industry to be the greatest of all screen stories, "The Common Law" will have in its cast for additional box office magnetism the most remarkable combination of names in picture history.

"One Week of Love"

By Edward J. Montagne and George Archainbaud

Directed by George Archainbaud

Without a doubt the most powerful screen story ever filmed—a story so full of dramatic action, heart interest and pleasing comedy reliefs that its instant appeal is assured.

THE story of a Foolish Butterfly, a product of Society's Hothouse, who has flitted here and there, tasting all the Sweets of Life without sharing any of its pains, sufferings or emotions. In a single night this pretty creature was stripped of her golden wings. In one night she knew the full meaning of Fear, Hate—and Love. Instantly she became part of the big, pulsating Outside World she had never known before. Magically, she became—a Woman.

FIVE WEEKS OF BOOKING

First Run on Broadway

THAT'S THE RECORD FOR

EARL HURD COMEDIES

Presented by C. C. BURR

ONE OL' CAT, the first of the series, during the week of August 20th played its third consecutive week, first run, at the RIVOLI Theatre, and also played day-and-date at the RIALTO Theatre.

FRESH FISH, the second of the series, during the same week of August 20th played its second consecutive week at the STRAND Theatre.

EARL HURD COMEDIES are humorous combinations of living actors and animated cartoons. The cartoons are made to leave the drawing board and mingle in fun and play with living actors.

The series of six are now ready for inspection. Contract for these special one-reel novelties immediately if you want the best in Short Subjects for 1922-23.

Mr. Exhibitor!

YOUR support and encouragement has made it possible for us to bring forth the unusual array of box-office attractions described on the following pages.

The most brilliant group of directors, authors, scenario writers, cameramen and a stellar aggregation of screen players have worked in harmony and with the utmost enthusiasm to create these wonderful productions.

Popularity—prestige—profits will all be yours because—

Millions have read the books—

Millions will want to see the pictures.

"Our policy is dedicated to exhibitor co-operation."

WARNER BROTHERS

THIS production, adapted from the tremendously popular novel and stage play will be one of the season's greatest box-office attractions.

It will endear itself not only to those who have risen from "Rags to Riches", but also to that countless multitude earnestly striving to attain the same goal.

Wesley Barry, a star of unquestioned popularity and ability, is supported by a brilliant cast of screen favorites including Niles Welch, Ruth Renick, Russell Simpson, Richard Tucker, Minna D. Redman and others equally well known.

THE fiction sensation of the year!

It has caused more comment than any other book published during the current season, and it is unanimously conceded by the critics to be the greatest story ever written about the modern flapper.

Marie Prevost and Kenneth Harlan head a cast of well known screen players which includes Louise Fazenda, Jimmy Morrison, Tully Marshall, Eileen Percy and Clarence Burton!

This picture will prove to be another screen sensation!

ONE of the sweetest stories ever told!

A homely human document with an appeal as broad as humanity itself. In its many years before the public, as a stage play and as a novel, the story has become known all over the world.

For real story value, lavishness of sets and a distinguished cast of players, "Little Church Around the Corner" will rank as one of the big box-office pictures of the season.

Fresh news every week.

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK"

Mack Sennett's latest big comedy-drama feature, starring Mabel Normand, is making the money.

The New York Picture News says:
"This picture has one of the biggest and best casts ever assembled."

The Pittsburgh Press says:
"One of the season's most novel and entertaining comedy dramas. It is entirely different from anything that has preceded it."

The New York Star says:
"Some thrills, many laughs and a timely touch of human interest. Action good, picture well cast and directed."

The Seattle Times says:
"Now delighting enthusiastic audiences. It is another feature which, like 'Mickey' and 'Molly O,' has brought the comedy king to the front as a director of high class drama."

The Cleveland News says:
"Real old-fashioned melodrama. Contains romance, thrills, drama and comedy, and an imposing cast."

The Yonkers Herald says:
"An unusual photoplay. Not satisfied with the title of King of Komedy, Sennett set out to conquer the field of comedy drama with tremendous success. His latest screen offering as notable as previous successes."

The Los Angeles Times says:
"Sennett opus goes over as clever burlesque. It reaches highest point yet reached in this form of entertainment. Is sparkling satire and rollicking burlesque."

The Omaha Bee says:
"The 'Crossroads' has drama uppermost, leavened with humor and culminating in many unusual thrills. Sennett never before gave such an entirely unusual production."

"HURRICANE'S GAL"

Starring the beautiful Dorothy Phillips and produced under the direction of Allen Holubar

The Cleveland News says:
"Splendid screen entertainment. A whale of a tale."

The Cleveland Press says:
"It has as many thrilling incidents as three average movies."

The Seattle Times says:
"Undoubtedly one of the screen's most artistic offerings, filled with thrilling action and exquisite sea scenery."

The Seattle Post Intelligencer says:
"It involves some of the best acting of the cinema season."

The Seattle Star says:
"This film contains all the best elements of all the sea stories that have been told in films."

Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago:
"The type of picture my patrons like. Many stopped me to say how good it was. A real action picture of the sea with an interesting love story. Business good."

"ONE CLEAR CALL"

A John M. Stahl production, presented by Louis B. Mayer.

W. W. Booth, American and Strand theatres, reports in the Exhibitor's Herald:
"A wonderful production. Splendid acting, photography, direction and story. Should go good where better pictures are appreciated."

The Birmingham News says:
"A simple, strong and gripping story—novel treatment."

"SONNY"

Richard Barthelmess in an Inspiration Picture, directed by Henry King.

Frank L. Browne, Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cali., says:
"An exceptionally fine picture and star. Did a big week's business despite its being the hottest week of the year. Pictures like this one make friends for the star, the theatre and the industry. I wish there were more of the same calibre."

"TROUBLE"

Jackie Coogan—Presented by Sol Lesser.

M. Golomb, Franklin Theatre, Union Hill, N. J., says, as reported in the Exhibitor's Herald:
"Grab this. Pleased 100 per cent. You will sure make money. Very good."

Raymond Gear, Mayflower Theatre, Florence, Kas., reports:
"A good one both from entertainment and box office standpoint."

J. A. Hopkins, Arcade Theatre, Holtsville, Cal., says:
"Exceptionally good picture. Pleased 100 per cent."

A FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION

How We Will Set the Value of "East is West"

SETTING EXHIBITION VALUE

The unusual production cost in which, of course, the screen rights to the play are an important item, make it necessary that unusual precautions be taken in order that the rentals on the picture be determined by actual box office test runs before any definite exhibition value is placed on the production.

Accordingly, Mr. Schenck and ourselves have agreed upon the following plan:

Play dates for preliminary test runs in six theatres are now arranged. Upon the result of these engagements a temporary or tentative exhibition value will be set, at which rate 40 additional test engagements will be played.

Upon the results of the 46 engagements the final exhibition value for all rentals will be set.

We believe this plan will be fair to exhibitors while at the same time givng the producer what he is justly entitled to.

REGARDING SPECIAL NATIONAL ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

We have agreed with the producer that the public must be told of the unusual entertainment value of "EAST IS WEST," so they will understand that this latest picture of Constance Talmadge's is a real special, and far bigger and finer than anything in which she has yet appeared.

A national magazine advertising campaign running over a six weeks' period has been decided upon. In order to tie up this campaign directly with theatres, each exhibitor running the picture will be given free certain special advertising for local uses. An unusually big and fine line of standard accessories will be provided in addition.

REGARDING RELEASE DATE

The general release date has been set for Oct. 23rd. The test engagements will precede this general release date. Exhibitors will be kept informed as to what the picture does at test runs by advertisements in the trade papers.

IN HANDLING THIS BIG PRODUCTION BOTH MR. SCHENCK AND FIRST NATIONAL WILL LEAVE NOTHING UNDONE TO ASSIST EXHIBITORS TO OBTAIN MAXIMUM RESULTS

AS personal director and supervisor of "The Eternal Flame," First National wishes to congratulate you on the unusual artistry and fine workmanship displayed in every detail of this production. The intelligent direction, the deep sympathy with, and clear understanding of the story and its various characters, the deft and delicate touches in which suspense is always maintained and the proper emphasis placed on striking incidents, the careful attention to the minutest detail in transferring Balzac's famous novel to the screen, has gone far toward bringing Miss Talmadge's latest picture to so unusual a mark of perfection.

Presented by Joseph M. Schenck; adapted by Frances Marion from Honore de Balzac's "La Duchesse de Langeais," personally directed and supervised by Frank Lloyd; photographed by Tony Gaudio.

That's what the Chicago Post says, but read Genevieve Harris' full review:

" 'The Masquerader' is a thoroughbred among film plays. It has manner, distinction, that something which we may sum up in the language of the day as 'class.' It tells its story in a polished, easy style which is nevertheless very effective.

"Its excellence is not to be wondered at when we consider that its star is Guy Bates Post, who played the dual role for so many years on the speaking stage, and that it was made under the supervision of Richard Walton Tully, who produced the stage version. But so frequently these promising combinations of talent are a disappointment. 'The Masquerader' comes up to the highest expectations.

"Acting of the finest quality is to be found in this picture. Guy Bates Post takes with him into the silent drama all the skill in character portrayal and emotional playing which distinguished him on the stage. And while, of course, we miss his voice, the lack is made up for in part by the added effectiveness of his pantomimic skill as the camera records it.

"In addition to its fine acting the play has that which is so often lacking in pictures, dramatic structure, climax. The interest grows as the events become more complicated. The plot moves along logically, as though it had a definite object. There are no unnecessary scenes, no incidents which have no relation to the plot.

"The settings, many of them elaborate, are beautifully arranged and well photographed. The fog scenes are especially well done. The scenes in the House of Parliament are praiseworthy.

" 'The Masquerader' stands out above the ordinary run of film plays. It is worth the attention of all who are interested in the better class of pictures."

Taken from the story by Katherine Cecil Thurston and the play by John Hunter Booth.

Random Thoughts

CENSORSHIP is an inroad on free speech and thought."

This declaration isn't quoted from a film magnate's speech or a trade paper editorial.

They are words pronounced on the floor of the triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States.

"The world do move."

The same speaker went on to say:

"Censorship has too many dangers. There is no standard for censoring. One board may see good in a picture where another sees only wickedness."

As showing how mental processes become muddled when outsiders turn their thoughts to motion pictures—there is interest in what the same speaker goes on to suggest as a substitute for censorship.

The Associated Press tells it this way: "A system of licensing motion picture producers in the manner in which the saloon was licensed in the pre-Volstead days."

The comparison carries a bite.

Censorship, as we see it, is censorship under any name you use.

If anyone can imagine a system of licensing the producers of pictures that would not eventually also mean a method of censorship—we would welcome his ideas.

We are writing these random thoughts traveling from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati. Harry Charnas of the Standard and Federated exchanges, is starting the season off with four gatherings of exhibitors—in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, and Detroit.

We had rather feared it would be—the usual "film party." Such things don't usually mean much.

But these jaunts have a serious side—and an impressive one.

A year ago—and two years ago—it seemed that the proper thing to do after mentioning the independent producer and distributor was to pass the hat.

The year has brought its changes. We see a shrewd film man like Harry Charnas registering his faith in the quality of independent product that he has to offer, and the quality assured for the future, in no uncertain manner.

Three hundred exhibitors were present at the banquet in Pittsburgh. The speeches naturally dwelt on the independent.

But this important change has taken place in the year:

The speakers do not advocate support for the independent in a "pass the hat manner." They do not say, "Help the independent for he is your salvation."

The talks dwell on product now, on quality. And it isn't idle talk. It is backed up by the product.

A year ago we saw an "Independence Month" that didn't amount to any more than a phrase.

Today we see a September with independent pictures in theatres everywhere—because independent pictures are worth showing.

What a difference!

Chester Lord, summing up an unusually interesting series of articles on his newspaper career in The Saturday Evening Post, says: "The first duty of a reporter is accuracy."

That's the way the lesson was taught to us in the days when Mr. Lord was seated at the rolltop desk on the second floor of The Sun building.

But we are afraid Mr. Lord's ideas and methods are out of date.

The first duty of a reporter nowadays, when covering a scandal story, is to see that the figures concerned are all connected with the motion picture industry.

If it is not possible to connect the figures with the film business his next step is to say, "A prominent Los Angeles producer has offered Miss DeVere a fabulous salary to appear in pictures. Miss DeVere is considering the offer."

And the Associated Press carries it all over the country.

"The first duty of a reporter is accuracy."

Too Much Dirt

H. B. Watts, of the Strand, Omaha, Hurls a Bitter Charge at Picture Men

Editor's Note: Is H. B. Watts, manager of A. H. Blank's Strand Theatre, Omaha, right in the charge he places against much of the advertising done by exhibitors? We would like to hear the opinions of our readers on the subject. Do these conditions still exist? What is to be done to remedy them. Is the fault on the shoulders of the producer or the exhibitor? Let us know what you think about it!

Mr. Robert E. Welsh, Editor,

Moving Picture World,

New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Have been reading a great deal on the big question, or rather one of the big questions of the day, regarding the public and motion pictures, and about the public being tired or not going to motion pictures.

Now I have had an idea in this nut of mine for some little time, and although I know you are a busy man, if you have just a spare minute or so to listen to the ravings of an ex-hi-biter, go on.

I think that a great majority of the public have lost confidence in the movies and that the reason for this is advertising by the exhibitor.

I think it is a mistake for an exhibitor to allow advertising to be run for his theatre that promises "The greatest picture ever made," and similar expressions, and then when his patrons come they find but an ordinary program picture.

I think it is wrong to take the lurid and the sensational angle, especially that having a sex appeal and play it all over the boards. While it is true that sex appeal must of necessity, and to a certain extent creep into pictures, as they reflect life, still the manufacturers, that is the leading ones usually use a suggestion and most of the time it is and should be beyond criticism by the most exacting.

Yet there are exhibitors who always look for smut to advertise and will take something that is incorporated in ten feet and base their entire advertising campaign on it.

Expressions such as "Only prudes will be offended," "She crept into his room at midnight," "A vamp that makes Cleopatra look like a baby," "She stood there in her nakedness," and similar expressions are detrimental to the business.

You might say that these things are not being done, but they are and if you don't believe it subscribe to three or four clipping services and you will see that I am right.

You will see pictures of men and women running around in pajamas, nude pictures of women and the worst type of suggestiveness.

Now I don't say that all theaters are doing this, but there are a great many and these that are doing it make it tough for other theaters.

It is not necessary to resort to this type of publicity to get the public into the theater, for the American public are clean minded and when they see this type of advertising they think that the picture is as bad as advertised, and will not only not go themselves, but will keep their family away. While those people to whom this sensationalism appeals will go and see the picture, then when the next picture is advertised in the same manner they will say it's all bunk and stay away.

I know when senseless-ship was up the last time in this State a number of ads were displayed by those who wanted the measure passed and they were peaches. When asked if they had seen the pictures in question, they answered that they had not, and furthermore didn't want to see that kind of a picture, while in fact the pictures themselves were beyond criticism.

Summing it all up, it is folly and loses the confidence of the public to lie in advertising.

It is my opinion that all manufacturers having the business at heart should insist and see that all their managers of exchanges and distributors see that none of this suggestiveness and lying is done by the exhibitors, and, if they insist on doing it, to refuse to serve them.

At any rate this is my opinion, which I am entitled to, and would like to see if you think me crazy or agree with me.

Yours very truly,

H. B. WATTS.

Industry Records Innovation as Charnas Plays Host

Live Independent Entertains Middle Westerners at Banquets and Screenings

IT remained for an independent distributor to put over the innovation of the 1922-23 season.

"First time in the history of the picture business" is the only phrase which describes the event which Harry Charnas, of the Federated and Standard exchanges, is staging this week in the Middle West. A party, including the editors of all the motion picture trade papers, Al Lichtman, head of the Al Lichtman Corporation; Carol Dunning, of Prizma; J. Larson, of Russell Productions, and other prominent film men, is doing a one night stand stunt from Pittsburgh, to Cincinnati, to Detroit, to Cleveland.

In each city the live wire independent is acting as host at banquets and screenings to large gatherings of exhibitors in the territory. At Pittsburgh close to two hundred and fifty exhibitors turned out for the event, in Cincinnati the number reached close to the two hundred mark, Detroit came through in flying fashion with well towards four hundred theatre owners, and, as this is written, Cleveland promises to cap the climax.

Screenings of "Rich Men's Wives," the Al Lichtman special, are an important part of the program in each city, together with late Prizma subjects and other reels handled by the Charnas offices.

It is an event. Not alone for the strong outpourings of exhibitors in each city visited. Not merely for the spirit of co-operation and good will towards the Charnas organization manifested at every opportunity. But even more for what it means to the independent market and for the concrete evidence it gives of the exhibitor's attitude towards that market this year.

Lichtman, the Silver Tongued

Al Lichtman has proven the prize orator in each city visited thus far. Al's speech is rather a sincere, confidential, heart to heart talk than a speech. Drawing from his personal memories of the early days and succeeding progressive stages of this industry Al brings home strongly the point that it has always been the desire for better and better quality on the part of one individual or group of individuals that has moved this industry forwards. And it is not difficult to believe Al when he speaks of the ambitions, the foundation of experience and the whole-hearted sincerity of the Schulberg, Bachman, Lichtman trio.

Ike Silverman, of the Strand, Altoona, performed such yeoman service as toastmaster in his own stamping grounds, Altoona, that he has been drafted for further service and is now brightening up the moments along the road. Among the speakers heard at each stop were Carol Dunning, William Brewer, of the Otis Litho Company; Joseph Dannenberg, of the Film Daily; William A. Johnston, of Motion Picture News; L. A. Boynton, of the Exhibitors Trade Review, and Robert E. Welsh, of Moving Picture World.

Michael Rosenbloom, of Pittsburgh, spoke on behalf of the local theatre owners at the dinner in that city and carried the guests to a high pitch of excitement with his appeal for support for the independent. Fred Herrington added to his angle with his usual ability.

W. S. McLaren, of the Capitol, Jackson, was the man to set the fireworks off as toastmaster in Detroit. In Cleveland, Harry Lustig, standard bearer of the Northern Ohio organization, did the honors.

The Cincinnati reception was a very enthusiastic one with the exhibitor turnout being a local "Who's who in Ohio exhibitor circles," and the spacious ballroom of Hotel Sinton was taxed to its capacity with film men and their ladies. Al Lichtman's address, which preceded the showing of "Rich Men's Wives," was the outstanding feature of the reception and dinner. Fred Meyers, of the Palace, Hamilton, O., was the toastmaster. The speakers were Harry Kress, head of the Southern Ohio exhibitor body, and the man who put "the sun in Sunday in Piqua, O.;" Harry Charnas, Carol H. Dunning, of Prizma, and Joe Dannenberg, who spoke for the trade press. The following were also introduced: Robert E. Welsh, editor, Moving Picture World; William A. Johnston, Motion Picture News, and L. W. Boynton, Exhibitors Trade Review, all of New York.

Personal Cinders

Joe Lefko was as busy as a one-armed paper hanger in Pittsburgh, between taking care of the all-important customers, running the schedule, and paying proper attention to the dignified New York visitors.

Speaking of one-armed paper hangers reminds us of the hand that "Battling Joe" received on the showing of his picture before the screening of "Rich Men's Wives." Joe isn't much of an actor, but Harry Charnas ought to be proud of the regard in which his Pittsburgh manager is held. As evidenced by the applause.

Michael Rosenbloom is an orator who shouldn't be confined to Pittsburgh. That boy is going to step along in national exhibitor affairs—if he wants to. And if he talks to the boys. He stole the show in Pittsburgh.

Gosh, but it did feel good to meet Fred Herrington in the Smokey City. Pittsburgh, or almost any exhibitor gathering for that matter, wouldn't be the same thing without Fred.

* * *

Coming back to that picture shown at Pittsburgh—we can't say much for any of the trade paper editors as actors. That's our jealous way of putting them all in our own class.

Frank Hard, who must be five years older than Methuselah if you count by the number of newspaper men he knows, handles the publicity for the Charnas organization. At every stop—efficient, obliging and regular. We might say the same for Lin Bonner, of the Lichtman company, but we just don't care to.

* * *

N. C. Lefkowitz, Cincinnati manager for Charnas, turned his shop upside down to do all necessary for the visiting guests from the territory of New York.

But it remained for Morris Lebensberger,

Cleveland manager, to present the attendance record of the trip. We didn't see Morris in any of the pictures shot along the route. Which is a shame, for Morris is the only Adonis in the party.

Jess Fischman, Detroit manager, showed how he is regarded in his territory when he succeeded in having the monthly meeting of the Detroit M. P. T. O. A. postponed to coincide with the day of arrival for the Charnas party.

Lin Bonner says he would do almost anything for us if we would get in a mention of "Ching, Ching, Chinaman"—the next Schulberg subject. Not that it means anything, he says, for he declares the picture too good to need such cheap publicity. In that case we won't mention it.

When the troupe arrived in Detroit and was organizing in the Statler lobby, someone overheard one bellboy say to another, "I think it's a ball team." Al Lichtman is still denying the accusation that he gave the Babe Ruth touch to the party.

American Show-Print Russell joined the caravan in Cleveland and is still buried in regrets at what he missed in the first three cities. The Detroit visit gave the editors a chance to address the theatre owners' organization at the regular monthly meeting.

General Manager Richey and President Cady were warm hosts. Incidentally the editors heard enough of the plans for the Michigan state convention to assure themselves that they would attend October 10.

It seemed strange to see Phil Gleichman in Detroit. For years we have been under the impression that Phil ran a theatre around the corner from the Hotel Astor. Words cannot express what this trip has meant to the independent market in the territories visited, but one word sums up all possible tributes to Harry Charnas, his associates I. W. Greenstein, Morris Lebensberger and so on. That one word is "Courage." It means confidence and a lot of things. And all of them apply this time.

Miss Negri a Surprise

Young Polish Actress's Modesty Belies Her Film Roles

A charming and gifted young woman was introduced to the writers of the industry this week in the person of Miss Pola Negri. The young Polish actress arrived from abroad on Tuesday, and on Wednesday a luncheon in her honor was given at Sherry's. This, apparently, was given so that the guests could see Miss Negri rather than chat with her, for she has not yet mastered more than a few phrases of the English language. The opportunity to look at her was not passed by.

There were really no speeches. E. J. Ludvigh, general counsel for Famous Players-Lasky, and Adolph Zukor, president, made a few introductory remarks. Ben Blumenthal conveyed to the guests Miss Negri's appreciation of the reception accorded her, regretting that she could not express herself well in English. She hoped, he said, to do so by the time her first picture is completed in Hollywood.

What is the actress like? All preconceived ideas were wrong. Far from being a flashing, dashing sort of person, a feminine D'Artagnan, she is quiet, even serious, until she speaks. Then her freshness and enthusiasm come to the surface, and she is modestly animated. But, perhaps, Pola was a bit embarrassed by the attention paid her and the strange surroundings.

Meeker Promoted

George R. Meeker has been appointed general sales director of Cosmopolitan Productions, succeeding James R. Grainger. Mr. Meeker, who has been for some time connected with the production department of Cosmopolitan, has had a long experience in motion pictures.

True Tells Convention About Standard Contract Delay

One of the "Snags" Is Play Dates, Another Cutting of Films, He Says

AN INSIGHT into the delay in working out the standard contract was given by President William A. True, of the Connecticut organization, Tuesday afternoon of this week at a joint convention of the M. P. T. O. of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, held at the Hotel Arlington in Boston. Among other things, he charged that Will H. Hays "has had to submit many questions for a 'yes' or a 'no.'"

Resolutions scoring the proposed state censorship in Massachusetts as an unfair abridgement of the right of free expression, as a clear invasion of the rights of free speech and un-American in principle, and urging the people of the state to give the subject their most careful consideration, were among those adopted.

Other resolutions favored such distribution processes within the industry as will guarantee producers an equitable distribution of product, and urging upon theatre owners the advisability of encouraging the production of good independent pictures by using as many as possible and giving them preference.

The convention declared that there shall be no limitation of their right to make such changes and eliminations in films as will best conserve the welfare of the community in which their theatres are located; commended the national association for its establishment of its department of music and for its extension of public service work, and recommended that committees be named to take charge of this work in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. After voting commendation to the national officers, the members pledged support for the future.

Despite the fact that the convention had been called upon a day in which Massachusetts was holding primary elections, about 100 exhibitors attended, including President William A. True, of Connecticut, and President Edward M. Fay, of Rhode Island.

Censorship, on which the people are to vote in November, was discussed by all of the speakers and defensive methods that have been adopted in other states were explained.

President Cohen gave an extended account of his stewardship and dilated at length on co-operation. He reiterated that under no circumstances will he be a candidate for any office at the next election.

He declared that several important changes are necessary. The present distribution system must be changed, the cost of handling pictures reduced and independent producers helped to market their product. Present methods, he said, lead to needless waste, excessive costs and inferior pictures. The greatest menace the industry now faces is the denying of an outlet to the independent producer's product.

Mr. Cohen also declared one of the most objectionable phases of the distribution system is the "block" selling of pictures, charged that the exhibitor is obliged to buy forty or more pictures, most of which have no real exhibition value, to secure a few pictures that have merit.

Mr. Cohen charged that most of the opposition against the M. P. T. O. is being directed from certain producing agencies in New York, whose main purpose is to destroy the organization. It takes real fighting to combat these elements, said he, and it is only through concerted action that exhibitors will be able to do what they have set out to do.

He referred to the Famous Players-Lasky-Zukor controversy, and of the fight the association had made in the matter of the Black interests. "We are not vested with plenary or police powers," said he. "We can only continue what we are doing to protect you. If you have any message as to what you want us to do in this matter, we are at your service. You have a tremendous strength throughout the country, but you in Massachusetts have been of very little help to us. Massachusetts has contributed nothing in a financial way to the support of the national organization. It is up to you to come in and protect your investments. We have had all sorts of 'weeks,' and I believe it is about time we had an 'exhibitors' week.'"

Michael J. O'Toole, chairman of the department of public service, discussed the integrity of the theatre owners as an identity in their several communities. He urged them to be leaders in the effort to influence the public along constructive lines; to take the leadership, rather than be nonentities in their communities.

"I want you to have the right to put on your screens what you think is right," he said, "just the same as a newspaper editor prints his views in his paper. The screen press of America is just as important as the newspaper press and should have the same privileges."

President True outlined the harmonious workings of his organization. His state organization raised $43,000 two years ago, and last year $2,000 to combat adverse legislation, and this year between $20,000 and $22,000 will be raised. But while in the past the money was raised by assessment, this year, he said, plans had been perfected to obtain the funds in various other ways.

Already, he said, four bills for a state censorship had been drafted and he had heard that several others were to be drafted. "But we are not at present fearing censorship," said he, "and we believe we can defeat any measure that may come up. I feel safe in saying, also, that we shall also be able to eliminate the 5 per cent. amusement tax at the coming session of the legislature. In this we have the assistance of the baseball leagues, the legitimate theatres, the amusement parks, and other amusement interests."

Referring to the methods for raising money, he said it was coming from national advertisers through animated cartoons, from the industries of the state which had films illustrative of their activities, and from drives with producers in which a percentage of profit was secured. From this latter source, he said, from $15,000 to $18,000 would be obtained alone, and no exhibitor would be asked to pay a higher rate for his pictures.

Reporting for the committee on contract, which had several conferences with Will Hays, he declared that an attempt had been made to bring about a form of contract that would be not only fair to both sides, but would simplify the booking of films.

"We have dealt with producing units, with attorneys of producing units and with the staff officers," he said. "We have gained many points of material advantage, but we have run up against some snags that still remain to be removed. One of these is regarding play dates. On this we are still deadlocked. We insist that exhibitors shall set their own dates.

"Another is regard to the cutting of films. We claim that, for the protection of our clientile locally, it is our right to eliminate certain titles and other parts of pictures as we may deem best. The producers say they cannot give us that privilege. We claim that we can, and it is the general understanding that we are going to take it at any rate.

"Still another point at issue is the question of advertising the name of the producer. We cannot see why we should be dictated to in this regard. We are in the exhibiting business, not the producing. The writing of the advertisements for the newspapers is our problem, and we believe that our attitude is fair because the producer pays no part of this advertising.

"The standard form of contract we are working for is one that shall be binding upon the producer, unless it is rejected within fifteen days. We want to eliminate the selling of the same contract to three or four exhibitors in one town, and the using of contracts as a club to get higher prices.

"At the present time we believe they are working on some basis of arbitration, some code of ethics for the further conducting of the negotiations. This is to be decided before we go on.

"We were very much surprised, at the outset, to find that Mr. Hays was not vested with the authority we hoped he had when we began to take up the investigation. He has had to submit to the principals of his office many questions for a 'yes' or a 'no.' We have been handicapped by this element of the 'go-between,' which sometimes has discouraged us. But we feel that we will be able to go on and get a standard form of contract."

A. J. Moeller, general manager of the M. P. T. O. A., reported on the association's new music department and the work it has done and is doing to eliminate the music tax. He declared that the committee already had secured the co-operation of thirty-five of the biggest authors, composers and publishers, and he urged the exhibitors to use their music in preference to that of others, and thus aid the committee in its work. The matter of amendment to the copyright law is to be taken up at Washington very soon, he said.

Co-operation also has been received by the committee from the record people, the radio people, from the National Hotel Men's Association, as well as many other hotel associations, and from the National Association of Dancing Masters. He declared that it was very essential that the committee should receive the co-operation of exhibitors.

President Bean, of the New Hampshire Association told how they are fighting censorship in the Granite State, through the co-operation of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, the Parent-Teachers' Association, the Farm Bureaus, the Granges and the Children's Aid Society. All these were being educated to the fact that the exhibitors are putting on clean pictures and are safeguarding the morals of the communities.

Short addresses were made by President Fay, of the Rhode Island organization, and by President Laurie, of the Massachusetts body, and at the close of the convention the Massachusetts members held a short meeting, at which they voted to forward $700 to the national organization. This is the first assessment the Bay State organization has levied upon itself for national purposes.

Black Out on Bail

Connecticut Authorities Seek Him for Arraignment

Moving picture interests are awaiting the outcome of the court action that has been taken in Boston against Alfred S. Black, president of the Connecticut Theatres Corporation, president of the New England Film Exchange Corporation, and of the New England Theatres Circuit, which in the past has controlled upwards of sixty theatres in New England cities and towns. Black has been arrested and is now out on bail and his fate will be decided on September 21.

Black, who refused to attend a coroner's inquest in Connecticut last December, following the fire at the Rialto Theatre in New Haven in which ten people were burned to death, has been indicted on a charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of Everett T. Case, one of the victims. The Connecticut authorities seek to get him into that state for arraignment and trial. Besides gross negligence, the indictment also alleges violation of the building laws and failure to take proper precautions against fire, in that the theatre had no asbestos curtain and had only a garden hose on the stage. Carelessness also is alleged in permitting the use of "burning incense" to give atmosphere to a film.

The Connecticut authorities are seeking to get permission to transfer Black to New Haven, under authority of requisition papers, served upon Governor Cox of the Bay State, and expect to accomplish this soon.

Gets Important Post

W. L. Rubert, for several years an official in Universal's Kansas City exchange, has been made assistant business manager of Universal City, one of the most responsible positions at the big studio plant. He will aid Julius Bernheim in the commercial administration of the studio.

Lesser in New York

Brings Print of Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist"—To Remain 6 Weeks

Sol Lesser arrived in New York this week. Mr. Lesser brought the first print of Jackie Coogan's recently completed "Oliver Twist" with him and plans to arrange definite distribution within a week or ten days.

All of Jackie's productions have been released through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., but news pertaining to the "Oliver Twist" offering has not as yet indicated the exact means of distribution.

In the event of road-showing the Dickens feature, accessories of every description will accompany the film. In addition, advance men, managers, operators and all that is necessary will be attached to the presentations throughout the land.

While in New York, Mr. Lesser is taking an active part in the executive meetings of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which are now in session.

Mathis Engaged

A. L. Erlanger announces that June Mathis, noted screen writer, has been engaged to write the continuity for "Ben Hur," collaborate on the production and edit the completed film, which is to be produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

The players will be sent to Palestine and to Italy in order to obtain the exact locations described in "Ben Hur." Other scenes will be photographed at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City, California.

Joins Lichtman

Maurice Kann, has joined the Al Lichtman Corporation where he will act as director of publicity. Kann, for four years was assistant to the editor of the Film Daily and before that was in newspaper work downtown. He was with the Journal of Commerce for some time.

Our Mistake

In the September issue of Moving Picture World, on page 116, a headline stated: "Alexander Absorbed by Levey." This headline was an error, according to Arthur James, vice president of National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, who states that whereas Alexander's non-theatrical activities were taken over by the Levey Corporation, his theatrical activities still continue under his own name and command a large business.

Senate's Tariff Ideas Prevail in Bill Reported by Committee

SENATE ideas as to the proper duties for film prevail throughout in the tariff bill as reported by the conference committee on September 12. In every instance the amendment made by the Senate was agreed to by the conferees and the moving picture rates will be specified instead of ad valorem, as provided by the House.

The conferees adopted the Senate rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem on photographic cameras and parts thereof not specifically provided for, in preference to the House rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The House bill imposed a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem on photographic film negatives for moving picture exhibits or for reproducing pictures for such exhibits, if exposed, whether developed or not. The Senate amendment, agreed to in conference, changed this rate to 2 cents a linear foot in the case of such negatives exposed but not developed, and 3 cents a foot if exposed and developed. The House rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem for photographic film positives was changed by the Senate to 1 cent a linear foot.

The lower House also imposed a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem on photographic and moving picture films, sensitized but not exposed or developed. This was changed in the Senate to a rate of four-tenths of one cent a linear foot of the standard width of 1⅜ inches, with proportional rates for other widths.

The conferees threw out the House rate of 25 per cent. ad valorem and substituted therefor a rate of 1 cent a linear foot for photographic and motion picture films or film negatives taken from the United States and exposed in a foreign country by an American producer in the course of production of a picture of which 60 per cent. or more was made in the United States.

Electric light carbons will be dutiable at 45 per cent. ad valorem, and a rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem is provided for incandescent electric lights, bulbs and lamps, with or without filaments.

The committee agreed that all ad valorem duties in the bill are to be based, as at present, upon the foreign valuation, the conferees having rejected the House plan for adoption of the American valuation. Under certain circumstances, however, the American valuation is to be used.

For the purposes of assessing duties the value of imported merchandise is to be the foreign value or the export value, whichever is higher. It is also provided that all articles of foreign manufacture or production capable of being marked, stamped, branded or labeled, without injury, must bear in legible English the name of the country of origin. All containers of imported merchandise also must be marked to show the country of origin. Unless and until so marked, the goods are not to be released from customs custody. If not re-exported they may be marked in customs custody and will then be released for importation, but a duty of 10 per cent. of the appraised value will be assessed, to be additional to any duty imposed under the tariff law.

Under the terms of the bill as reported, the President is authorized to increase or decrease the duties specified and to shift to the American valuation system where necessary to equalize differences between the cost of production in this country and abroad, or to cope with unfair methods of competition and unfair acts in the importation of merchandise into the United States, which threaten the stability or existence of American industry. The President is also given discretionary powers to impose additional duties or prohibition against imports from any country discriminating against the overseas commerce of the United States.

Theatre Owners Thank Warren for Co-operation in Its Music Work

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America announces a deep appreciation of the wonderful co-operation extended to the new music department of the organization by Fred Warren, of the American Releasing Corporation, in entirely revising the music cue sheets connected with the "Queen of the Moulin Rouge." Mr. Warren also arranged that all other pictures handled by his company would have only tax free music attached.

"This action of Mr. Warren's is most gratifying and will have a very pronounced effect in helping theatre owners to avoid the exactions of the music society and be able to conduct their business without this annoying interference," the statement says.

The music department now has special writers who prepare new and appropriately catchy music for new motion pictures. This music, when applied and adapted to a picture, is broadcasted in all of the motion picture theatres of the United States, giving it unrivaled lines of popularization.

All producers and distributors are invited to avail themselves of this service of the music department and their co-operation in having only tax-free music in the cue sheets associated with their productions is solicited. This will help the theatre owners and make the interests of producers and distributors and exhibitors more mutual and satisfactory.

A complete list of producers and distributors thus co-operating will soon be forwarded to all theatre owners. The progress made by the department of music has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of those who originated it. Thousands of letters have been sent to theatre owners all over the United States, as well as to authors, composers and publishers, familiarizing them with the purpose and activities of this department. Music roll publishers are preparing lists of non-taxable music rolls. A complete catalogue of these will be prepared as soon as completed.

The questionnaires are being returned by the hundreds. Leading theatre owners throughout the country have instructed their leaders not to play taxable music. All questionnaires show the desire of the exhibitors to co-operate fully through special exploitation, programming numbers, using chorus slides, co-operating with local music dealers, etc., all in an effort to make the department a success.

Wright's New Book

Falk Publishes Volume on Newest Photoplay Writing Methods

Away back in 1909 William Lord Wright, then an editor in a little Ohio town, wrote the first book on writing motion pictures. It was not much of a book as books go now, and we recall that Bill even forgot to tell what a "leader" was, for his sample script was "Mother Love," then one of the few stories without subtitles, because no titles were needed.

At frequent intervals ever since William has broken out with a new manuscript until we have lost count, but his most recent work must be the fifth or sixth, at least, to flow from his prolific pen, and each book has been better than the last.

His latest production is published by the Falk Publishing Co., of New York, and is designed to supplement the text books of the New York Institute of Photography. It is not, strictly speaking, a text, but rather an exposition of the present stage of photoplay writing, but for this reason it will probably prove more helpful to the unpracticed writer than a more solemn and serious attempt to teach the art through formulae.

It tells in a fluent, readable fashion, just how the reader should go about writing the synopsis which is all the present day editor will consider. It offers numerous sample continuities for the study and analysis of photoplay construction. It tells the novice all he needs to know and —more importantly—it does not also provide the usual mass of misinformation and personal, but erroneous belief with which too many authors load their scripts.

He has not told how William Lord Wright thinks plays should be written, but it gives a complete summary of the practical knowledge he has gained through years of actual studio work with many of the leading companies.

His advice is sound, reliable and informative, simply but clearly phrased and is the latest word in this connection. It should be a real guide to the beginner and of no little value to the more advanced writers in bringing them strictly up-to-date as regards studio conditions. It is a timely and important contribution to the bibliography of photoplay writing.—E. W. Sargent.

Jungle Expedition

Michael Schliesser, known for his work for motion picture companies in training wild and tame animals, has been selected to bring back specimens from the Brazilian jungles, by the Smithsonian Museum, Museum of Natural History and the Brooklyn Museum. A party of picked men is about to set out. The Explor-Research Corporation, recently incorporated, has moved back to Mr. Schliesser's place of business at 1109 Southern Boulevard, New York.

Motion Withdrawn

Justice Richard of the New York Supreme Court has allowed the withdrawal of a motion made by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Company and David P. Howells to dismiss a suit brought against them by the Ellwood Amusement Corporation. The suit is over the right of the defendants to exhibit in this country, "One Arabian Night," which it is claimed is an Americanized version of a story titled "Sumurum," which is controlled by the Ellwood Amusement Corporation.

Lesser-Gore Plans

Sol Lesser and A. L. Gore, vice-president and secretary, respectively, of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., organization in Los Angeles, now in New York, bring news of big theatrical plans.

These plans, among the many important announcements they have made and will make, pertain to the bringing to Los Angeles, every successful musical and legitimate show in New York City and Chicago.

"Delighted"

Calgary, Alta., Sept. 6.
Editor, Moving Picture World:

We are sending you under separate cover copy of the Morning Albertan for September 2, in which there is a special page headed "Go to the Movies in September."

The moving picture houses in Calgary were delighted to co-operate with us in this special page and we thank you for the idea, which was taken from your editorial in your last issue.

Yours very truly,

Changes Managers

Goldwyn Transfers Branch Heads—Opens New Exchanges

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces, effective at once, a number of changes in the managers of its branch exchanges.

Nat Barach, for several years in charge of the Pittsburgh office, has been transferred to the Cleveland exchange, succeeding W. J. Kimes, resigned.

Lester Sturm has been appointed manager of the Pittsburgh office, replacing Mr. Barach.

Thomas W. Brady has been appointed in charge of the Buffalo branch office, releasing George A. Hickey who will be assigned to more important work.

J. H. Hill, who has been assistant manager in the Kansas City exchange, has been promoted to be the manager of that branch office.

Goldwyn recently announced the opening of two new exchanges—in Milwaukee and in Indianapolis. No managers for these exchanges have been announced yet.

A. A. Schayer, formerly assistant manager at Denver, has been made manager of the Goldwyn exchange in that city.

Now, Now, George!

St. Louis. — George Newsum of Mount Vernon, Ill., is a wag. The coal strike has played havoc with Newsum Theatre crowds but not his humor. A few days ago he came in for some pictures.

"Now before we begin talking features let us have a clear understanding," he would begin. "Under no circumstances do I want a feature with more than twenty-five in the cast. I don't care to have more people appear on my screen than there are patrons in the auditorium."

Operators Arrested

Three Theatres Bombed in Omaha and Council Bluffs

A misunderstanding between managers and operators in Omaha, Nebraska and Council Bluffs, Iowa, has resulted in bombing raids which have affected two theatres, the Liberty and the Garden. Three operators, T. E. Smith, Mayo Peyton and Art Drake, all of Omaha, were arrested under two charges. First they have been accused of endangering the health and eyesight of theatre patrons, and second of deliberately attempting to injure the business of certain persons or corporations.

The difficulty started with the demand of the picture theatre managers for the presentation of the new contract with the operators for the coming season, on August 1. The contract would not be effective until September 1, and the operators, although aware that the managers are entitled to receive the contracts by the first of August, refused to submit it. Thereupon they were given a two weeks' notice of dismissal.

Increase Demanded

In order to receive the Omaha scale, which is $1.15 per hour, the operators of Council Bluffs have amalgamated with the Omaha union. At present the Council Bluffs scale is between 78 and 79 cents. The operators have prepared a contract demanding the new increase from the Omaha managers.

I. Levy, manager of the Garden Theatre in Omaha, was successful in having Smith traced and arrested, after two hundred patrons had fled from the discomfort from the tear bomb. Smith, accompanied by Peyton and Drake, was also responsible for bombing the Liberty in Council Bluffs.

Continues in Control

Y. F. Freeman, general manager of Southern Enterprises, Inc., has announced that that organization would continue to control and operate the Paramount exchanges of the South, despite reports to the contrary. Freeman's announcement, it is said, was received with considerable surprise in the industry.

Hollander Appointed

Harry Hollander has been appointed manager of the Al Lichtman exchange in Minneapolis. Hollander is very well known in the Northwest territory and was for two years, Educational manager there. The Lichtman exchange is in the Loeb Arcade Building.

As Samuel Katz Sees It

Samuel Katz, of Balaban and Katz, Chicago, a member of the Executive Committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., president of Associated First National Pictures of Illinois, is a practical showman who gives a reason for everything he says. In the accompanying brief summary of the business outlook he is optimistic — and he gives common sense reasons for his views.

All indications point to bright prospects for the exhibitor for 1922-23. The present strike difficulties are but momentary. Soon the men will return to their work and the prevailing prosperity will not be impaired. Moreover, consider the line of pictures destined for showing. Never in the history of films have so many wonderful pictures been promised for any given season. Gaze at the First National list!

The public is always interested in pictures when business conditions are right—and business is improving right along. Exhibitors must be honest with their patrons—particularly in their advertising. Misleading advertising to boost a poor picture harms the business more than bad financial conditions.

The best features of the present year, according to our experience, have been: (1) Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through"; Richard Barthelmess in "Tol'able David," and Jackie Coogan in "My Boy." In the comedy line the Buster Keaton's have been the best box-office attraction.

Favors Our Films

Consular Report Shows U. S. Product Leads All Competitors

The popularity of American films in Java seems assured, according to a recent report made to the Department of Commerce by Consul Parker, Soerabaya, who states that no other films compare with them in popular favor. They are distinctly in the majority, he says, even though British, French and German films are exhibited.

Java maintains about 250 theatres, some of which compare favorably with the best in this country. The audiences are composed of three distinct classes, Europeans, foreign Orientals, and the natives. Prices of admission are usually about the equivalent of $1 for Europeans and 25 cents or less for natives.

The problem of separation of the classes in the audience has been solved very nicely by one of the largest theatres. This place seats about 2,000 Europeans and 2,500 natives. The interior is so constructed that a screen or curtain divides it into two parts, on one side of which sit the Europeans and on the other, the natives. The picture is projected from the European side.

Censorship is quite a problem in Java. Wild West pictures, always popular with native classes, are prohibited. Criminal or political suggestion, and films handling the question of nationality in an objectionable way are likewise barred. As a result of this strict censorship about 35 per cent. of the films imported are either refused or cut. So far, no rebate of duty is provided for a film which is barred after admission, but steps are now being taken to permit censoring before the duties are paid.

Popular Men Added

President Arthur S. Kane has announced the addition of two more men to the big list of sales representatives whom he has been recruiting for the staff of Associated Exhibitors. They are R. H. Winn and Robert A. Bertschy, both well known to exhibitors and in the sales end of pictures. Mr. Winn has been assigned to Associate's Memphis Branch. Mr. Bertschy goes to the New Haven branch of Associated.

Brunet Resigns as Pathe Head

Word comes from Lewis Innerarity, secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that he has received from Paul Brunet his resignation as president of the company. This action on the part of Mr. Brunet was not altogether unexpected to those closely associated with him. For some time past family reasons have made it probable that he would return to his native land.

Mr. Brunet's resignation will be acted upon at the next meeting of the Board of Directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., which is expected to be held during the present month.

Mr. Brunet will remain a member of the Board of Directors, and it is expected that he will return to the United States occasionally, and will continue to take an active interest in the affairs of the company.

No information could be obtained from any of the Pathe officials as to Mr. Brunet's probable successor.

Regional News and Gossip

Harold P. Dygert and two of his managers were visitors along Buffalo's Film Row last week. Otto Schroeppel and A. B. Depauw were the managers. Mr. Depauw has just been appointed manager of the Granite and Opera House in Newark, N. Y., by Mr. Dygert, who is president and general manager of Associated Theatres, Inc. When the Capitol opens about January 1 in Newark, Mr. Depauw will manage the theatre. It is reported that a deal is about closed whereby Associated will take over the Andrews and Strand in Salamanca, N. Y. When this is consummated, it is understood that Mr. Schroeppel will leave Fairport to manage the two Salamanca houses. Mr. Dygert's company will take possession of the Park Theatre in Bath, N. Y., soon and W. L. Trask is going from Dansville to manage the house.

Charlie Smith of the Shattuck Opera House, Hornell, with "Grandma's Boy" did the biggest business in the history of the house.

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is observing its eighth anniversary. Manager Vincent McFaul has lined up some great attractions for September, including "Orphans of the Storm," which is the anniversary feature; "Her Gilded Cage" and "Grandma's Boy," on the same bill; "Blood and Sand," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Manslaughter" and "Monte Cristo." Some stuff, eh, what? And on October 1 the mammoth new organ will be ready to accompany these wonderful films. Shea's Hippodrome expects to break all business records this fall and winter.

Jim Cranides, of Olean, has purchased the Peerless Theatre in Hornell, from H. C. Flint, according to word reaching Buffalo's Film Row. Mr. Cranides operates several houses in Olean.

L. G. Barger, manager of the Avondale Theatre in North Tonawanda, is now back on the job after an extended illness. He has been recuperating in Geneva.

Roshea and D. S. Sellers, of Chicago, have been engaged by Managing Director Fred M. Shafer as organist at the Olympic Theatre in Buffalo. A large orchestral organ has been installed. The house re-opened Labor Day with "The Storm." R. V. O'Neill, of Los Angeles, will be assistant organist.

Al Beckerich of the Loew State, Buffalo, and Herman Lorence of the Bellevue, Niagara Falls, are both putting on the "Who's Who" feature, in which local celebrities appear. The backs of the persons are shown one week and patrons asked to guess who the man is. The next week the film shows the face. Winners are given money prizes.

C. Sharp Minor has gone on a month's vacation in his Hudson. The famous Buffalo Lafayette Square organist is being relieved during this period by Joseph A. Raszeja, formerly organist at the Elmwood. Bruce Fowler, manager of the latter house, announces the appointment of Frank Leon, formerly at the Blue Mouse, Seattle, as organist. The Elmwood is installing a big organ, which will be ready September 17, to take the place of the orchestra.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew State, Buffalo, ought to have his salary doubled. He's running the big theatre along and flirting with death as a result. Al steals a minute now and then on Sunday morning to dash into the great out-of-doors in his sporty Elcar.

The old Empire in Buffalo, which for many years was managed by Sam Carver with a picture policy, has been turned into a burlesque house and its name changed to the Garden.

Managers of Binghamton theatres and owners of other places of public amusement are faced with a trying situation. According to information received by D. W. Jones, superintendent of buildings, each place of amusement in the city to keep in business must receive a temporary certificate from the superintendent of buildings by October 1, showing that he has complied with all the regulations of the local building code. Then after the new standard building code from the state is received a few weeks later, he must again have his buildings inspected and changes made to conform with the new code, if needed.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Buffalo Loew State, has been named one of the judges of the Enquirer Beauty Contest. Al is always falling into something soft like this. They do say as how Al throws a wicked eye when it comes to judging beauty.

Yeggs entered the Elmwood and North Park, two Buffalo neighborhood theatres and "souped" the safes. A goodly sum was realized for the "soupees."

The Elvin Theatre has opened in Endicott, N. Y. The new house seats 1,000. Simplex projection machines and a Hertner Transverter are used in the booth. A fine organ is used. The Elvin is operated by a company consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin H. Dittrich and Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ammerman. The Elvin is located on West Main street in the Southern Tier town.

Edwin O. Weinberg, former manager of the Buffalo Strand, who is now in charge of the Strand in Syracuse, will manage the Mark-Strand in Troy when that imposing edifice opens to the public about January 1. Edgar Weill, who has been on leave of absence from the Strand management for six months on account of ill health, will return October 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Weinberg will spend October in Atlantic City and other resorts along the coast, and during November and December Mr. Weinberg will be either at the Strand, New York, or the Strand, Brooklyn, collecting ideas for the new Troy Theatre, which will seat 2,400 and be one of the first houses in the Mark chain.

BUFFALO

H. P. Dygert Reports New Appointments

Manager George A. Hickey has engaged the services of two new salesmen. They are H. L. Levy, formerly at First National, and M. H. Goldstein, formerly with F. N. in Albany. Mr. Levy will cover the Rochester district, while Mr. Goldstein will take care of Syracuse. The new Goldwyn office at 509 Pearl street will be ready September 1.

Sherman Webster, formerly special representative for Select, is now representing Nu-Art in the Rochester district. Fred M. Zimmerman, president and general manager, and Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth, had several conferences the past week on the new fall product.

Syd Samson, manager of the Grand & North exchange, has a spotlight for an auto which he wishes to trade off for something. Syd sneaked it off his old car, bought a new one and now finds he can't use it on the new bus. Such is fate! Anything useful will be acceptable. It must not be home brew.

Basil Brady, of Pathe, has got rid of his 1776 Oldsmobile at last and has purchased a new light six model. Someone told Basil better times were coming and he believed it to the extent of a new car. If one would rather have a car than coal, that's one's own business!

Mike Resnick, Film Booking Office salesman, has left for Mount Clemens on his vacation. Al Barnett and his office staff are busy taking over the Wid Gunning product. Margaret Taylor, formerly a member of the First National office force, is now with F. B. O. J. W. Klein has come from New York to cover the Syracuse district. The entire local gang was in Cleveland for a sales conference last week-end.

Sarah Rappaport, formerly with Filkins & Murphy, is now with Educational. John H. Lyons is a new salesman at the same exchange.

George Hickey is leaving the local Goldwyn office. He will be succeeded by Tom Brady, who has been manager of the Hodkinson exchange. Fenton Lawlor has been recommended for the Hodkinson sales managership. It is understood that Mr. Hickey will become district manager for Goldwyn.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Ennis Company Not Daunted by Fire

The Lyric Theatre was practically destroyed by fire at Ennis, Tex., August 23. The Ennis Amusement Company carried $10,000 insurance on the furnishing and equipment and $3,000 insurance was carried by J. M. Calhoun, the owner of the building. The theatre will be rebuilt.

The Pitchford Amusement Park, Okmulgee, Okla., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000. Incorporators are S. L. Owen, Anna Mae Owen and L. Pitchford, all of Okmulgee.

J. C. & L. L. Lewis have purchased the Triangle Theatre at Walnut Ridge, Ark.

Cecil Cupp has bought L. A. Walker's half interest in the Royal Theatre at Arkadelphia, Ark, and is now the sole proprietor.

A new picture show was opened by Mr. Martin at Winslow, Ark., last week.

Robb & Rowley have bought the interest of Mr. Fuller in the R. & R. Theatre in Hillsboro, Texas, and will add many new improvements.

The negro picture theatre at Arkadelphia, was destroyed by fire last week. Origin of the fire unknown. Only $1,000 insurance was carried.

A. H. Stebbins, manager of the Majestic Theatre at Little Rock, has resigned. His successor has not as yet been appointed.

Bob Littlefield will open the Hippodrome Theatre at Dallas, Texas, on September 4, with pictures and vaudeville as the policy.

E. B. Thomas has purchased the half interest owned by Bob Littlefield in the Rex Theatre, at Dallas, Texas, and is now the sole owner.

Hunt and Garland, of the Palace Theatre at Terrell, Texas, have purchased a new organ.

E. M. Berg has opened his Columbia Theatre at McAllen, Texas.

In the Dallas, Texas, office of the American Releasing Corporation, W. H. Carson has relieved J. F. Willingham at the money desk, the latter accepting position as traveler in east Texas.

Dave Reed, former film man, is now traveling in the West as manager for an act and will make Oklahoma and Texas points in the near future.

J. J. Robinson, of New York, has come to Dallas, Texas, from Atlanta, bringing with him a list of nine pictures made with the black and tan element and has established a distributing office at Dallas. The name "Reel Productions" has been selected. The new distributer is meeting with success, he says, in getting play dates with all the negro shows in Oklahoma and Texas.

NICE PEOPLE WERE EVIDENTLY ON A TOOT

Whiskey, wine and cigarettes appealed to these swagger dummies in the lobby of the Capitol Theatre, Hartford, Conn., and the label, "Nice People," gave a kick to Manager Clancy's appeal for business.

A TROPICAL LOBBY A CHANGE FROM THE SNOWS

It's the same idea, but Max Doolittle fixed up banana leaves instead of firs and made the box office of the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, a hacienda instead of a log cabin for "The Dictator."

WILMINGTON

Change Managers of S. E. Houses

Southern Enterprises has made the following changes: A. P. Roberts goes to the Strand, Salisbury, from the Princess, Asheville, succeeding Abe Cooper, who goes to the Piedmont, Charlotte. Claude Lee goes from the Piedmont to the Academy, Charlotte. M. L. Semon returns from the Academy, Charlotte, to the Lyric, Atlanta, which has been closed during the summer.

Phil Gersdorf has been transferred from Macon, Ga., to the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, succeeding G. M. Phillips, who has not yet been re-assigned. Gersdorf has been with Southern Enterprises for two years in Jacksonville and Macon coming here from Detroit.

J. E. Barton has sold the Rialto, Greer, S. C., to C. H. Stokes, a banker of Greer. C. E. Davenport will remain as manager under the new ownership.

Frank Merritt, of Birmingham, has joined the F. B. O. sales force out of Atlanta. Frank Rogers, formerly of Fox, also has joined the same organization.

Randolph Jeter, for several years a trusted employe of Southern Enterprises, Atlanta, was taken into custody charged with attempting to burglarize the company safe which contained $750.

The motion picture industry throughout the Carolinas was deeply shocked by the tragic death of Armand de Rosset Myers, salesman with Southern Enterprises, Inc., of Charlotte on August 26. Mr. Myers in company with a friend was driving his car in Charlotte and in attempting to negotiate a stiff turn the car was upturned, Mr. Myers' skull being fractured, death coming within a few hours.

Mr. Myers was one of the best known and most universally liked film men in the territory. He was a Shriner and his funeral in Charlotte was under Masonic auspices. Floral offerings were the most magnificent ever seen at a Charlotte funeral, almost completely filling the chapel.

The entire trade in the Carolinas extends sympathy to C. E. Peppiatt, manager of the Charlotte exchange of Southern Enterprises, Inc., in the death of his little 2-year-old daughter which occurred August 26.

Martin F. Schnibben, manager of the Opera House, Florence, S. C., is visiting friends and relatives in his former home, Wilmington.

Work on Pryor Brothers' new theatre is being pushed along at a rapid rate and the laying of the foundation has beeen completed. The theatre will open early in 1923.

The New Garden, formerly the old Opera House, Rockingham, N. C., has been opened by the Rockingham Theatre Company. An entire new theatre has been constructed on the site with a seating capacity of 600, equipped both for pictures and road attractions. The Typhoon cooling system has been installed. William G. Atkinson is manager.

PITTSBURGH

Four Fall Victim to Cupid's Wiles

Thomas J. Fordham, manager of the Perry Theatre, Erie, one of the Rowland and Clark houses, was married on August 17 to Miss Anne L. Gagne. The happy young couple enjoyed a two-weeks' wedding journey touring the East. During Mr. Fordham's absence from the city the Perry Theatre was in the charge of Mr. Lesko, manager of Rowland and Clark's Strand Theatre there.

Moe Lewis, proprietor of the Lyric and Colonial Theatres, Altoona, Pa., was married recently in Philadelphia.

John David Smith, better known as "Doc," veteran salesman on the Pittsburgh Pathe office force, was married in Philadelphia to Miss Irene May Sims recently. The "Doc" put one over on his many friends here, but he certainly got a lively reception upon his return to the Steel City.

James Retter, Metro salesman, is another local film man who has succumbed to the wiles of Dan Cupid. The young lady in the case was Miss Ida Dietrich.

Charles T. Hoskins, for eleven years manager of various studios on both the west and east coasts, and more recently manager of the Central Theatre, Detroit, has been appointed manager of the new Cameo Theatre in Pittsburgh, formerly known as the Savoy. The Cameo is entirely rebuilt and seats 750 persons. The opening day was August 16.

Paul Thomas, of the Casino Theatre, Greensburg, Pa., accompanied by his wife, spent a two-weeks' vacation along the Great Lakes.

Manager King, of the Knox Theatre, Knox, Pa., accompanied by his wife and a party of friends, motored to Washington, D. C., recently.

Philip Reich, of the Auditorium Theatre, Meyersdale, Pa., is preparing for the big Somerset County Fair to be held in Meyersdale the week of September 18. Reich always holds dances in his auditorium during this annual fair week.

Fred Gohrs, of the Aris Theatre, Erie, Pa., was a recent Pittsburgh film exchange visitor, as was also Manager McGovern, of the Victoria Theatre, Altoona. Both were busy getting their fall programs lined up.

Leo Barclay and Peter Panagatocas motored to New York recently in the latter's Cadillac sedan. Their object was to meet the "big boss," George Panagatocas, who was returning from Greece with his family.

Harry Thomas, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Pittsburgh; John Donovan, manager of the Manor Theatre, Pittsburgh; Commissioner Deasy, of the East End police force, and Herb Sanders, head of the big Sanders markets, formed a quartette that motored to Atlantic City recently. They made the return trip in one day, in spite of a three-hour layover as a result of motor trouble. Harry says, however, that this kind of riding is too speedy for him.

Harry A. Lande, manager of the Quality Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, is the proud daddy of another baby boy, the seventh child in the Lande household. Mother and son are doing well.

A quintet of the local exchange and theatre boys have returned from a vacation trip in Canada and Atlantic City, and from all reports they certainly must have had one grand time. The boys were Sammy Steinberg, of the S. & S. Film & Supply Company; Eddie Johns, manager of the Wonderland Theatre; Ben Browarsky, manager of the Variety Theatre; William G. Liebler, salesman for the Quality Film Corporation, and Ben Amdur, manager of the Garden Theatre.

Morris Goldstein, owner of the Morris Theatre, North Side, Pittsburgh, has not completely recovered from his sick spell, and is still confined to his home. His many friends hope for an early recovery.

William I. Forrey, manager of the Exhibitors Film Exchange, was still a patient at the Mercy Hospital, suffering from ptomaine poisoning, when last heard from.

Archie Fineman, of the McKee Theatre, Pittsburgh, is a proud daddy, his wife having presented him with a baby girl recently. Mother and daughter are doing well.

Chris Volmer, of the Idle Hour Theatre, Diamond street, is back on the job after a ten-day vacation in Atlantic City with his wife and family. Chris made the trip in his new Willys-Knight car.

The picture house, formerly known as the Casino, at Washington, was re-opened on August 17 by Walken and Bixler and is now known as the Palace. The house seats 400 and has been completely remodeled and redecorated. A stucco front and marquise are the additions to the exterior appearance, while the interior has been repainted and refurnished throughout.

Captain Elmer F. Croco, for thirty years a member of the Pittsburgh fire department, has been chosen by Manager Hoskins, of the new Cameo Theatre, downtown, to act in the capacity of special officer and doorman.

A. Notopoulous, movie magnate, of Altoona, Pa., is vacationing at Mt. Clemens, Mich., whither he motored in his Cadillac sedan.

E. F. Descutner, who recently sold his Avalon Theatre, Avalon, Pa., to James Steele, of the Bellevue Theatre at Bellevue, has leased the LaBelle Theatre at Bellwood, Pa., for one year, from J. J. Burns, Altoona real estate dealer, who owns the building. Mr. Descutner took possession of the LaBelle Theatre September 1.

The Lyceum Theatre, at Bradford, Pa., is being remodeled. Melvin Brothers own this house.

Alterations are completed and the Orpheum Theatre, Altoona, Pa., was re-opened Labor Day.

Aleck Moore's Hilltop Theatre on Warrington avenue, which has been in the hands of the contractors for the past few weeks, for the purpose of remodeling and enlarging, will soon again be open for business. A piece of property adjoining the theatre was recently purchased by Mr. Moore and accordingly the theatre is being widened, and the seating capacity will be increased from 500 to 750. Morris Finkel is manager.

George M. Shapira, formerly on the road for the Apex exchange here, is now located with the local Federated branch. George is a real hustler and should get the business for his new boss.

Fred Smith, of the New Palace Theatre, Penn avenue, has reopened his New Palace Theatre, Glassport, Pa.

Manager McGovern, of the Victoria Theatre, Altoona, Pa., was in Pittsburgh recently film shopping.

It's good business to sell fifteen shows instead of one, without increasing your overhead——

You can do it with

Ruth Roland

in

The Timber Queen

Every retailer knows that it's fine business to sell fifteen of an article at one time, instead of one.

His selling effort is no greater. His overhead is no greater. He has insured against having the balance of the business, with its profit, going to a competitor. With a good article he has pleased the customer and more than pleased himself.

You can do just that thing with "The Timber Queen." Give it a good send-off in your advertising. Get your people in for the first episode.

They are sold for the whole fifteen.

It's a great big Western serial, beautiful, thrilling, splendidly produced. It will live up to every good thing you say of it.

The Range Rider Series

Two reel Western Dramas that any exhibitor can be proud to show—

WESTERN DRAMA is very popular for the reason that people like to be thrilled, like to see the life and romance of the last frontier.

The chief criticism of many Westerns has been due to the stories. People don't like to know beforehand how the picture is going to end.

The Range Rider Series have true feature stories.

Any one of them has enough story to fill a good five reel feature.

And each one has a real wallop for a finish.

Quality sticks out all over them like the quills on a porcupine.

KANSAS CITY

Arbitrators in Initial Meeting

The first meeting of the new Joint Board of Arbitration for the settlement of disputes between members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri and the Kansas City Film Board of Trade was held the afternoon of August 22 at the Hotel Baltimore.

The new plan has met with the approval of exchange managers and exhibitors, as it assures a fair trial of all grievances and speedy correction of all causes of complaint. Some of the cases could not be tried because of the absence of some of the exhibitors, but their cases were continued to the next meeting.

The date for the next meeting has not been agreed upon, but it is thought that it will be in three weeks. An exhibitor having any complaints against exchanges should notify the executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri.

Roy Ballinger, an operator at the Electric Theatre, Independence, Mo., and Luther Lawton, negro vault man at the local Pathe exchange, have been sentenced to six months in the county jail for stealing films from the Pathe exchange. It was estimated by Harry Graham, manager of the exchange, that the total value of all the films taken was around $10,000.

S. F. Meade and his son, of the Meade Theatre at Kingman, were visitors at various film exchanges last week. They have remodeled the Cozy and Elite Theatres at Pratt, Kas. These theatres were recently purchased.

J. P. Moore has reopened his Electric Theatre at St. Joseph, Mo., after making extensive improvements.

Lloyd Ware, who owns the Varsity and Bowersock Theatres at Lawrence, Kas., is spending his vacation in the Ozarks.

Ed Smith has purchased the Lakin Theatre at Great Bend, Kansas.

Carl Muff has purchased the Electric Theatre at Edena, Mo. He formerly owned the Rex Theatre at Clarence, Mo.

S. K. Williams has re-opened the Highland Theatre, Kansas City, for Curry and Green.

George Costa opened the Vine Street Theatre, this city, recently.

Out-of-town visitors seen at the various film exchanges recently have been: Jess Salzberg, Crystal Theatre, Hoisington; O. K. Mason, Regent Theatre, Wichita; W. P. Cuff, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe; G. L. Rugg, Eureka Theatre, Weston; C. R. Wilson, Lyric Theatre, Liberty; Mrs. W. W. Wertenberger, Empress and Olive Theatres, St. Joseph; G. W. Goodnight, Lyric Theatre, Holden; H. O. Doyle, Capitol Theatre, Huntsville; F. G. Weary, Ferris Theatre, Richmond, and Miss Minnie Eakins, Royal Theatre, Nowata, Okla.

CLEVELAND

Liberty Theatre Changes Policy

The Liberty Theatre, only one of the Loew Cleveland houses, now closed, on being re-opened will be devoted to a program of pictures and music. Last season the Liberty, a neighborhood house, had a combination policy of pictures and vaudeville. "Chick" Taylor, formerly of the Doan Theatre, will be the manager.

William Fox has made a leasing arrangement with Paul Gusdanovic of the Strand Theatre, Cleveland, and beginning September 2, this house was devoted exclusively to Fox pictures.

Reade's Hippodrome, formerly B. F. Keith's, opened in Cleveland on August 28 with a combination policy of vaudeville and pictures. There were seven acts, and the picture was "Orphans of the Storm," the second run of it in the city.

The house has been redecorated and a new sign put on the marquise. A large organ also has been installed. W. H. Raynor is the local manager. The owner, Walter Reade, is proprietor of theatres in New Jersey.

The Hippodrome has continuous performances, from 10.30 to 11 p. m. There are two orchestras, one for the vaudeville and one for the pictures. It was announced that the Hippodrome will play all of the United Artists productions.

PHILADELPHIA

Booking Office Is Dissolved

The Chamberlain and Higgins booking office, Shamokin, has been dissolved by mutual consent. Each will attend to its own particular interests.

The new Casino Theatre, Mt. Poco, recently opened by J. O'Hara with a capacity of 750 seats, has enjoyed a prosperous business.

Thomas, the restaurant man and the chief food dispenser in Lansford, has broken ground for his new theatre.

Mrs. White, of the White Theatre, Frankville, has remedeled her house, installing an attractive stucco exterior.

J. J. De Roy, formerly of Pittsburgh, is now connected with the Philadelphia Fox office as road-man.

SAN FRANCISCO

Beatty Purchases the Hippodrome

James Beatty, who conducts the Liberty and Jose Theatres at San Jose, has purchased the Hippodrome Theatre in that city from Ackerman & Harris and will convert it into an exclusive picture house, to be known as Beatty's American Theatre. Extensive improvements are planned, including new decorations by Herman Krause; the installation of a new organ, and new operating room and electrical equipment to cost $6,000. William J. Beatty has been made house director for the three theatres and Herman Kirsken has been appointed director of publicity for all three. The Hippodrome Theatre is a comparatively new house, well located, seating about 2,000.

The Excelsior Theatre, Mission street and Ocean avenue, was opened on the evening of August 22 with "The Bachelor Daddy" as the main attraction. This house, which seats about 2,000, is owned by Robert A. McNeil, R. E. Baines and W. G. Bailey.

The Bijou Theatre, at Elmhurst, has been purchased by A. Stott. The new owner plans to erect a 1,000 seat house on the site at an early date.

The New Shubert Curran Theatre, on Geary street, is nearing completion and the formal opening is set for September 11. While intended for stage productions, moving picture equipment has been provided.

Charles H. Brown, joint lessee with Herbert A. Harris, of the Century Theatre, has returned from a month's stay at Lake Tahoe. The theatre will shortly pass into the management of Oliver Morosco, who will be associated with Brown and Harris in the lease.

Frank J. Costello, formerly general manager for the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, has been made manager of the three theatres conducted at Reno, Nev., by the T. & D. Jr. Circuit. He has been instructed to make alterations and improvements at the Grand Theatre and to introduce his famous prologues at the Majestic. The Rialto Theatre is to be devoted exclusively to road shows and local entertainments.

The Western States Film Exchange, recently incorporated, has secured quarters at 191 Golden Gate avenue.

John Peters, who has conducted the Elm Theatre at Elmhurst for many years, has purchased the Bijou Theatre of that place and is now operating both houses.

J. Smith opened the Radio Theatre at Haywards for the summer months. This is being operated as an airdome.

R. B. Guive, manager of the Selznick branch, who was run down by an automobile, sustaining a broken shoulder blade and a fractured ankle, has recovered sufficiently to be at his desk again.

Edward A. Smith, until recently personal representative for Thomas H. Ince, and formerly manager of the Rialto Theatre, has sailed for Honolulu to take charge of the New Princess Theatre to be opened in that city in October. Louis R. Greenfield, of the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, is interested in the new Hawaiian house, which will be conducted along the same lines that have made the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres so successful.

SEATTLE

Marsden Better After Operation

Robert Marsden, Jr., owner of the Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon, has been seriously ill, and is now recovering from an operation.

Fred Mercy re-opened his Capitol Theatre, the largest house in Yakima, which has been dark all summer, September 2, with "Foolish Wives." This is only one of the houses that are dusting up the box office for the fall season. The general feeling is one of optimism. Throughout the Grays Harbor country the improvement is already a fact, due to good crops, and a more comfortably livable temperature than in Yakima.

J. B. Martyn, of the Haney Theatre, Haney, B. C., who is planning to renew some of his old equipment, has purchased a Power's machine. Mr. Barnett, who owns the Colonial Theatre at Grand View, plans some important changes. He is contemplating a new Colonial house and will shift his old equipment and furnishings to the new location.

Fred Normand, Portland branch manager for Pathe, has resigned to go into business for himself as manager of the Circle Theatre, a downtown house. L. A. Samuelson, inspector-booker from the Seattle office, has succeeded Normand as branch manager in Portland, and W. B. Renfroe, formerly with Vitagraph in San Francisco, takes Samuelson's place in Seattle.

Vitagraph here announces the appointment of Lloyd V. Lamb, of Portland, to the sales staff. He will cover the state of Washington.

Tom O'Neil's new Lark Theatre, McMinville, Oregon, opened September 8.

Twenty-four Seattle movie fans out of many hundred contestants received cash prizes, season tickets to the Columbia theatre, and tickets to "The Storm" in the Star contest on whether Manette heroine of "The Storm" should marry a city man or an outdoor man. The contest attracted wide spread attention and brought worthwhile results.

R. L. Ruggles, owner of the Liberty and Dream theatres, Chehalis, sustained slight injuries recently when his automobile with which he was tinkering, broke loose.

It is reported that O. O. Ruth, who owns the new Vernon Theatre in Mount Vernon, has taken over the Mission, formerly operated by R. K. Dunn, who plans to build another house.

J. G. von Herberg, manager of the Greater Theatres Co., has been in New York on a five weeks' business trip. He will spend two weeks at First National in his capacity as a director and trustee. L. O. Lukan, general manager for First National on the Pacific Coast, after attending a sales conference in San Francisco, went to New York with the intention of returning to Seattle in about two weeks. Guy G. Maxey, Northwest manager, left for San Francisco, with J. Beckman and M. Castle of the Seattle staff, to attend the sales conference there.

CANADA

Make Change in Grand's Policy

Manager Minhinnick of the Grand Theatre, London, Ontario, has adopted a combination policy for the fall and winter season of pictures and vaudeville, with an occasional dramatic road show, programs being changed twice weekly. Only one show is given each evening.

Leonard Bishop has returned as treasurer of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, after having been with the Capitol Theatre in Calgary, Alberta, for some months under Manager John Hazza.

Max Allen, formerly identified with Allen Theatre interests in Western Canada, has personally acquired the Walkerville Theatre, Walkerville, Ontario, and has taken charge as manager. Earl Horton is the director of the new orchestra at the Walkerville.

Albert Weaver-Winston, late conductor of the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, Edmonton, Alberta, has been engaged as the musical director of Allen's Palace Theatre, Calgary, for which he has organized an entirely new orchestra. He has had seventeen years' experience with orchestral work in Chicago, St. Joseph, Mo., and Edmonton.

A. R. McNichol, owner of the Lyceum, Starland and College theatres, Winnipeg, returned to that city on September 10 after making a business trip to New York City and Toronto.

Z. Goldberg has once more become the proprietor of the Sun Theatre, Montreal, having resumed control of the house after it had been taken over for a short time by Messrs. H. Smith and I. Sourkes, two local exchange men.

Monroe Salisbury was the guest of honor at the last meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Manitoba, which was held in Manitoba Hall, Winnipeg, with President R. Kershaw in the chair.

Col. Arthur Sullivan and Dr. Wilmot of Winnipeg have bought the Province Theatre, Winnipeg, from John Schuberg of Vancouver, B. C., Jack Ward will continue as manager of the Province, it is announced.

The Gaiety Theatre, Portage avenue, Winnipeg, is scheduled for early opening under the direction of its new owners, the Capital Loan Company, after improvements have been made in the building.

Edward Benedict, a well-known Toronto artist, has been appointed organist of Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, in which has been installed the largest theatre organ in Canada.

Clarence Robson, manager of the Strand Theatre, Toronto, had the satisfaction of holding "The Loves of Pharaoh" over for the third straight week, starting September 11, despite the knocking criticism of the Toronto Telegram.

Although the balcony of the Arcade Theatre, 859 St. Catherine street, East Montreal, was badly burned in an early morning fire, Manager A. Denis made such a rapid clean-up of the debris and water that the theatre was re-opened within twenty-four hours and good business continued.

Capt. Frank Goodale, manager of Loew's Ottawa Theatre, Ottawa, has announced that it was due to an oversight at the Loew offices in Montreal that the city taxes on the theatre in Ottawa were not paid. The City of Ottawa entered suit for the amount of the taxes due, but the claim was quickly settled, he stated.

THE GOVERNOR WIELDED A WICKED BRUSH

After pasting William Allen White one, Governor Allen, of Kansas, pasted the first Paramount Week poster, just to keep his hand in it. He made a pretty fair job of it at that.

Manager Ben Stapleton of the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, is now classed among the exhibitors who have added a radio feature to moving picture performances. A large radio receiving set has been installed in the Centre Theatre and radio concerts are being given every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday evenings when a special program of music is sent out by a local broadcasting station.

Theatre patronage has been keeping at a high level in Ottawa since the first big impulse of the summer was experienced by local exhibitors during the week of August 7, when great crowds swarmed into practically all of the houses.

The La Plaza Theatre, Toronto, Ontario, has long been looked upon as a neighborhood institution because of special features which have been presented in conjunction with pictures. The theatre has carried out this idea still further by offering radio concerts at evening performances. Community singing is also being conducted.

R. L. Gregory has sold his theatre, the Wonderland, at Acton, Ontario, to Mr. Silverthorn and has arranged to build a new picture theatre at Brampton, Ontario.

The Opera House at Bathurst, N.B., which was burned last spring, is being rebuilt and will be opened in September. The original theatre was built only two years ago for the presentation of pictures.

The Bijou Theatre, St. Stephen, N. B., which was destroyed by fire last spring, has been rebuilt and will re-open shortly. While building operations were under way, the local curling rink was utilized as a picture theatre. This ring was the first picture house in St. Stephen, by the way, having been used for this purpose twelve years ago.

The Gem Theatre, Fredericton, N. S., is nearing completion and is to be opened as a picture house by F. G. Spencer, of St. John, N. B., who controls theatres in St. John, Fredericton, Woodstock, Windsor, Amherst and other centres of the Maritime Provinces.

Herman Kobold, the new owner of the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has installed himself as the manager of the house, with Walter Dolman, a well-known Winnipeg organist, as musical director. Improvements costing $10,000 were recently made in the Dominion, which is one of the oldest houses in Winnipeg.

Bernard Allen, Toronto, president of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, and Ben Bloom, former supervisor of Allen theatres in Winnipeg, Manitoba, have left on an extensive trip during which they will visit a number of foreign countries. Mr. Allen, who is the father of Jule and J. J. Allen, active heads of the various Allen organizations, returned from a trip around the world not many months ago.

M. E. Nichols, manager of the Capital Film Company, a film exchange of Winnipeg, recently returned to his home city after an extended visit to New York, Montreal and Toronto.

Danny Freeman of Winnipeg, formerly Western Canadian representative of Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd., has become an automobile salesman.

Ben Kauffman of Montreal, local branch manager of Regal Films, Ltd., has again taken over his old position of manager of the Montreal branch of Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., in succession to H. Smith, who resigned to become manager of the Regal Films branch at St. John, N. B.

L. E. Ouimet, former president and general manager of Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Montreal, has left for Los Angeles, to take up the production of a moving picture.

DETROIT

Exhibitors Sign for New Season

H. A. Ross, division manager for Famous Players, with headquarters at the Detroit exchange, reports that the first forty-one Paramount pictures are sold in every key town in the entire territory. John H. Kunsky will show them in Detroit, first run; in Grand Rapids, Charles Seaman will show them at the Strand and Majestic; Paul Schlossman has them for Muskegon; Clyde Quimby will show them in Fort Wayne, at the Jefferson and Strand; W. S. Butterfield will show them in Saginaw, at the Regent and Franklyn—in Flint, at his Palace, Garden and Regent; at Battle Creek, Lipp and Cross will have them; in Bay City, W. C. Watson will show them at the Jefferson and Regent; Wirt S. McLaren will have them for Jackson. Butterfield has Paramount also for his Ann Arbor houses and Port Huron. The entire Fitzpatrick and McElroy circuit has been signed, which takes in the towns of Ludington, Benton Harbor, Saint Joseph, Cadillac, Manistee, Three Rivers, Big Rapids and Alpena. In Monroe, Joseph Denniston has the franchise.

William Schroeder, of Petersburg, has taken over the Everhall Theatre of that town.

W. C. Bennie, of Menominee, has recently installed a new transverter in his house there, in addition to a new pipe organ, and plans on giving a class of film fare and entertainment never before attempted in that city.

The Strand Theatre, Pontiac, which has been closed for some time, has been entirely redecorated and remodelled, and was re-opened on September 3 with an especially ambitious program. The Strand is located in the heart of the business district of Pontiac and is now in a class to be favorably compared with any theatre of the Middle West.

The Regent Theatre at Battle Creek, operated by Lipp and Cross, has been closed to be redecorated and recarpeted. It is planned to re-open the house on September 9.

Robert Dunham, of the Strand, Detroit, has left on July 1 for a camping trip through the northern part of the state, is expected to return soon.

William Koons, manager of the Wonderland Theatre at Vicksburg, has closed the house and is thoroughly redecorating and altering it. The name has been changed to the Garden Theatre and on the opening date a free show for the townspeople will be given. The co-operation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has made this possible.

Al Ruttenburg, of the New Home Theatre, Detroit, is a manager who has been doing a wonderful summer business at his house, despite the fact that he is located in a neighborhood with several other theatres of the same class, which means stiff competition. Capacity houses have been the rule, rather than the exception, daily all summer long, and this can be attributed only to good showmanship.

MILWAUKEE

Fischer Back to Manage New House

After an absence of almost two years, George Fischer, for nine years manager of the Alhambra Theatre, has returned to Milwaukee to re-enter the moving picture field here. Mr. Fischer is directing the completion of the New Milwaukee whose managership he will assume.

According to Mr. Fischer, the New Milwaukee will be one of the finest outskirt houses in the Middle West. It will represent an expenditure of approximately $300,000 and will seat 1,250. The project is backed by merchants in the vicinity of Teutonia avenue, where the theatre is being erected.

Mr. Fischer, during the greater part of the time he was absent from this city, was manager of the Woodlawn Theatre in Chicago.

Charles Brewster has left the Merrill to become house manager of the Butterfly Theatre.

Fred Hassman, formerly of the Merrill, has been appointed assistant manager of the Palace Orpheum which, under its new policy, is showing the highest class vaudeville in the city along with feature pictures. The Palace Orpheum, the largest local theatre has been redecorated at a great expense.

INDIANA

Stiff Fight for Patronage Opens

Managers of picture theatres in Terre Haute are preparing for a stiff battle for patronage for the coming season and all are lining up their forces for action. During the past month some important contracts have been closed and as a result the people of Terre Haute apparently are going to be provided with some high-class photoplay entertainment throughout the fall and winter season.

The Strand Theatre, on Third street, Evansville, will soon be taken over by the management of the Victory Theatre, one of the largest photoplay houses in the southern part of the state, according to word received in Indianapolis. The Strand, it is understood, will be used by the Victory management for the introduction of vaudeville in Evansville.

The new picture theatre recently erected at Decatur for Jesse LeBrun has been named the Cort. The name was selected by three judges from a list submitted by patrons of the theatre during the first week the theatre was opened. Vincent Borman, the winner, was awarded a prize of $25.

Brazil experienced its first Sunday picture show August 27, when the Sourwine Theatre presented its regular program in the afternoon and evening. An ominous rumbling in church circles was heard and there was some talk of arrests and injunctions, but nothing of the kind transpired. The attendance at both the afternoon and evening shows was big.

Oscar Hansen, genial manager of the Jefferson Theatre at Goshen, recently presented a reward to a member of the Goshen police force for having frightened a burglar away from the theatre a few nights ago.

Harry M. Palmer, the progressive manager of the Liberty Theatre at Washington, Ind., has been all smiles recently as a result of a notification he received from the Universal Film Company, informing him he had been adjudged the winner of a national advertising campaign fostered by the company in connection with the presentation of "Robinson Crusoe." Accompanying the notification was a check for $450 as first prize.

The Grand and Cosmo Theatres at Gary have been merged under one management as a result of a recent transaction in which Nick Bikos, owner of the Cosmo, sold the theatre to the Grand Theatre Company. The two theatres, which will be redecorated throughout, will be managed by Peter Kalleres, who has been managing the Grand. The terms of the sale were not made public.

The Why Not Theatre in Greenfield has been sold by the Why Not Realty Company to Frank Rembusch, of Shelbyville, atres in Indiana. The Why Not was built three years ago at a cost of more than $40,000 and is the only theatre in the city. It is understood that Mr. Rembusch will make a number of changes in the interior of the building and will operate it in conjunction with the other theatres in his chain.

Two suits against proprietors of motion picture shows in Converse and Ashley, Ind., were filed recently in the United States They allege violation of the copyright law in the reproduction of music. One charges that music copyrighted by the Leo Feist, Inc., of New York, has been reproduced and featured by Russell Rhoades, of Converse, and the other was filed by the Irving Berlin Company, of New York, against Clarence McClish, of Ashley.

Work on the foundation of Bloomington's new picture theatre was started this week. The building, which is to be 66 by 132 feet in dimensions, will be erected for Harry Vonderschmitt, owner of the Liberty Theatre at Washington, Ind. It will be practically three stories high and in addition to the theatre will be occupied by two store rooms on the first floor and four office rooms on the second floor. It will cost approximately $50,000. Harry M. Palmer, manager of the Liberty at Washington, will be the directing head.

Programs of Indianapolis' downtown picture theatres for the fall and winter season indicate no dearth of first-run photoplay features; in fact the pre-season announcements of the various downtown show houses disclose that many fine films have been booked. It is not far from the exact state of affairs to say that the one-a-week patron is due for sore perplexion this season on the choice of which theatre to visit. The Circle's fall season was inaugurated last week—also the theatre's sixth birthday—with Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader." The fall season at the Ohio, according to Harry F. Koch, was started with the DeMille production, "Nice People," and Loew's State, which has been closed during the summer, opened this week with Rudolph Valentino in "Blood and Sand"

In the Independent Field

Newsy Bits

That the exchange map of Detroit will be radically changed within the next few weeks is a certainty. Exchangemen there are gossiping about the activities of a certain promoter who for the past few months has negotiated stunts that were short of startling. But he has reached the end of his rope and his passing is only a question of time.

Observations in the bigger cities of the Middlewest and West proved conclusively that the important theatres are patronizing the independent exchanges and booking their box office attractions.

Louis Burston, the producer, was in Chicago for several days last week, but not because he had planned to lay over in the Windy City. On the contrary the transportation regulations of the N. Y. C. had much to do with Burston's helated departure for the Coast.

J. Charles Davis, 2d, exploitation manager and assistant to President W. E. Shallenberger, of the Arrow Film Corporation, stopped off in Columbus, O., on Monday of this week to show "Night Life in Hollywood" to the censors there. The picture was o. k.d.

The Warner Brothers are expected to make some important announcement within the next few days relative to their distrihution plans in Detroit. Dave Warner is in charge of the Detroit Warner exchange, but information reaching this office from the Ford metropolis has it that the Warners are negotiating with local capital, which will he interested with them in the distrihution of the pictures in Michigan.

Nat Lefkowitz, manager of the Cincinnati office of the Standard Film Service, ranks among the youngest exchange heads in the country, hut despite this fact Nat's record is as good as that of the foremost manager in the country. His exchange does as much business in one week as all the other independent exchanges income put together.

There is some talk in Cleveland to the effect that the Skirboll Brothers, who operate exchanges in Pittsburgh and in the Ohio city, will establish another exchange in Detroit. This report, however, was not verified.

Sam Werner of the Federated Exchange of St. Louis, while looking forward to a big season, informed the writer of this department that business in that section, owing to the bad hreaks in weather, was only slightly hetter than it was a month ago. Nevertheless, Sam has more pictnre contracts for next season than he had in September, 1921, for the following season. Which does show improvefnent.

The first prints of Ivan Ahramson's "The Wildness of Youth" was received by the various exchanges in the Middlewest on Friday and Saturday. The Western exchanges received these prints on Monday.

Henry Friedman, brother of Joe Friedman, president of Celebrated Film Players Corporation of Chicago, and the Federated Exchanges of America, Inc., is an extremely husy man these days. While Borther Joe is aattending to the executive work of the two enterprises, Henry Friedman is taking splendid care of the Chicago office and enjoys the good will and friendship of every exhibitor in that territory.

The Week in Review

THE independent market right is going through a most dangerous crisis. Reports from Washington indicate a determination on the part of Governmental authorities to collect an unfair 5 per cent sales tax. Already this has thrown several exchanges out of business. The tax due, under the interpretation of the Treasury Department of the law, amounts to more than $1,000,000. Deputy sheriffs have appeared at various offices with threats. Several companies have been warned that unless the tax is paid immediately they will "have to suffer the consequences of being dealt with drastically." And these threats coming from sheriffs one need not ponder long to ascertain just what this "drastic action" implies.

IF ever there was a time when independents had to get together in combating a detrimental interest it is here—and now. Only through united action, concerted action, backed with every inch of fight that can be mustered together, can some relief be obtained in Washington. The tax is unfair. And discriminatory, according to many experts. These will be present at a meeting that will be held at Hotel Astor shortly under the auspices of MOVING PICTURE WORLD at the request of independents. Let's all get together. Let's act determinedly and effectively—and this sort of action can come only from solidity within the independent field. And we can solidify our forces. We must.

THIS tax question is the concern of every independent producer, distributor and exchangeman. It strikes at the very fundamentals of our enterprises. There are a score of moves that can be made. These will all be submitted at the meeting at the Astor. But make up your mind to fight. The army that laid down never won any war—and certainly those independents, who "lay down" in this campaign, will forfeit their business, for that is precisely what collection of that 5 per cent sales tax means.

NO more wonderful a spectacle ever greeted us than the one we encountered at Hotel Sinton in Cincinnati on Monday night. The occasion was the Cincinnati reception to Al Lichtman, who was this week the guest of that enterprising exchangeman, Harry Charnas, in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland. Two hundred exhibitors from southern Ohio and Kentucky were on hand to greet the new independent distributor, who, in the course of his eloquent address, told what he thought about independents and their future. Elsewhere in this issue the entire trip of the Charnas party is reported. Our own big chief, Mr. Robert E. Welsh, was one of the guests of honor.

THAT trip successfully engineered by Mr. Charnas personally with the aid of his wide-awake and popular publicity director. Frank Hard of Cleveland, marked the inauguration of a new and more prosperous era in the local distribution of independent pictures. And we will dare say that Mr. Charnas will be repaid a hundred times for every cent expended. This tour accomplished a world of good for independents in general. It "sold" hundreds of exhibitors who heretofore have refused to be "sold" on independent pictures. But these four dinners and special showings of Al Lichtman's "Rich Men's Wives" furnished the trade with a long-sought opportunity. They came—these "show-me exhibitors." they saw Al Lichtman's greatest and artistic box office knockout, "Rich Men's Wives"—and Al Lichtman, the greatest salesman the independent market ever had, conquered them. And conquered them, he did, for there was not a single man in that audience of which we were a member in Cincinnati, who did not have a better understanding of just what the independent market was trying to do. And not one man in that audience will ever give a deaf ear to any salesmen soliciting dates on box office pictures.

COMES announcement from Lou Rogers' office that he contemplates establishing a string of 22 exchanges throughout the country for the distribution of independent pictures. The plan is co-operative. It is a worthwhile proposition submitted by a capable and substantial showman. But it all comes down to the one question—good pictures. That's what independents need and want now in quantity. With good box office pictures to distribute Mr. Rogers' equitable plan cannot help meet with the favor of exchangemen.

WITHIN the next two weeks this department will publish a complete and accurate list of local State rights exchanges in this country, classifying them in the order of their standing in the various territories. We have carefully checked up on this data. When this list is published there will be no doubt as to who the reliable and real independent exchanges in your territory are. And the promoters and "flyers" will not be overlooked in this list either.

Trade Notes

Broadway is housing a number of elahorate and high-class billhoard signs advertising independent features. C. C. Burr, of Affiliated Distributors, has two illuminated signs on Broadway at 47th street. This week Ivan Abramson leased an attractive spot at Broadway and 49th street. Warner Brothers, too, are covering the city with 24-sheets, advertising their eight coming productions.

A hevy of some of the hest known stars in New York will in all probability attend the first showing of Arrow Film Corporation's new special feature, "Night Life In Hollywood," at David Starkman's Woods Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J.

Negotiations are under way, according to a report that has reached this department, whereby Johnny Hines, who has just completed "Sure-Fire Flint" for C. C. Burr, will be starred in a production that Mrs. William Harris will stage at one of the Broadway theatres. This engagement, if it materializes, will in no way interfere with Hines' film producing program. He has three more features to make for C. C. Burr.

Reports from exchangemen in San Francisco and Los Angeles indicate that exhibitors there are shopping and that the independent exchanges are getting an unusually hig percentage of the exhibitor huyers. All of the hig indepenednt pictures already announced have been hooked for showings at the hig Los Angeles houses.

According to cahle reports from Paris Max Linder has abandoned all idea of confining his production activities to France. It is now reported that he will make his pictures in America.

"Orphans of The Storm" is being extensively exploited in England and France under its original and more popular title, "The Two Orphans." According to semi-official reports, Jeff McCarthy is exploiting the picture in England.

Marcus Loew won considerable puhlicity in English newspapers. One paper in particular devoted two full columns to an interview given out hy Mr. Loew relative to film conditions as he found them in England.

Raleigh King has acquired the world rights distrihution to "Creation," the American rights for which is still open, according to a report received by this department.

Dave Mountain, export manager of Arrow, seems to he particularly enthusiastic regarding the improvement of the film business in foreign land.

Speaking of improvement in the film business, this department has received some very encouraging reports from South American huyers, many of whom have visited New York during the past few weeks seeking product.

The Soviet Government of Russia already has made at least four attempts to induce American directors to go to that troublous country and make pictures, going so far as offering every financial inducement. However, America, despite its Prohihition, still seems good to these directors.

At last it's come out. "Bella Donna" is reported by Paramount as the title of the first pictnre Pola Negri will make in this country.

Independents Call on M. P. World to Aid in Combat Against Tax; Plan Get-together of Film Men

Because the five per cent tax on independent pictures—which the Government is determined on collecting, despite the contention that the statute in its present interpretation is unfair and illegal—threatens the future of independent distributors and producers and to throw many of them into bankruptcy several exchanges already having been forced to go out of business because of their inability to pay the tax, the Independent Department of Moving Picture World has been urged by many producers and distributors to call a meeting of independent film men for the purpose of ascertaining ways and means of effectually combating the governmental program. Within the next ten days a meeting of the independent men will be held at the Hotel Astor in New York. Every independent producer and distributor and exchangeman is invited.

In order that the necessary arrangements can be made within the next ten days, every firm or individual, in any way connected with the independent market, who is desirous of being on hand, is invited to either write, phone or wire Roger Ferri, Independent Editor, Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Present at the meeting, which will be preceded by a luncheon, will be all of the big independent producers and distributors in the East. Exchangemen are welcome, but announcement of their intentions to be on hand must be in this office not later than Saturday, September 23.

The situation developed as a result of the determination of the Federal authorities to collect the tax, is the most menacing with which independents have ever been called upon to contend. Two exchangemen, one in Detroit and another in Indianapolis, have been forced out of the business because of the tax. The Detroit distributor, unable to pay the tax, was forced to stand by and see Government authorities sell his exchange.

This week a collector from the tax office visited the Warner Brothers' headquarters and threatened to attach that firm if the tax of $50,000 were not paid. Several other national distributors have encountered a similar experience. Thus far the Government authorities have been silent to the pleadings of independents.

Already the movement inaugurated by MOVING PICTURE WORLD to bring the independents into one body and thereby present a solid front in the fight against the tax has met with the commendation of innumerable distributors and exchangemen. The meeting, which is the most important one ever called for independents, will bring together all the big independent distributors.

Authorities on taxation from this city and Washington will be on hand as will also be a number of nationally prominent attorneys who will assist the independents. It is hoped that at this meeting a definite program will be worked out and the proper steps taken to effectively obtain a change in the interpretation placed on the statute by Washington officials.

ARTHUR BROMBERG

Owner of Bromberg Exchanges in Atlanta, Charlotte and New Orleans, says South is booming independent pictures.

Lester Scott to Make Sales Trip

Carrying the first print of "Sure-Fire Flint" featuring Johnny Hines, Lester Scott, sales manager of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., will leave shortly on a coast to coast trip.

Herman Garfield, the Cleveland picture man, has purchased the screen rights to the "Buster Brown" cartoon title from John Leffler and Richard F. Outcault, the originator of the cartoons. Garfield announced in New York this week that production on this series will be made on the Coast, where plans are being rapidly completed.

Mr. Garfield announced also the sale of the rights to the Michigan territory on his feature, "The Parish Priest," based on the famous play. Frank E. Beecher of Detroit purchased the picture.

"Night Life in Hollywood" opens at Doc Horater's Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, O., next Monday, Sept. 18, for an indefinite run. Charley Davis, assistant to Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, who successfully exploited that new Arrow special in Atlantic City, will also handle the campaign in Toledo.

There is a movement on foot in Philadelphia to revive the old Salesmen's Association in that territory. The association suspended its meetings during the summer and at the next meeting later this month new officers will be elected.

Bob Lynch of the Metro Exchange, Philadelphia, took a very important nautical role in the pageant at Atlantic City last week and in his 16-foot motor boat hummed things up for a while prior to the arrival of good old Daddy Neptune.

This department is in receipt of many letters seeking to ascertain the whereabouts of M. H. Burnside, who was in New York selling territories on "Yankee Doodle, Jr." Efforts to locate him in New York by various exchangemen and this department have failed. There are several letters marked "important" in this office.

Phil Goldstone, producer of "Deserted at the Altar" and the Richard Talmadge pictures, blew into town this week. He is at the Astor, where he will make his headquarters for a couple of weeks.

Dave Starkman, who, in addition to running an exchange in Philly for distribution of "The Love Slave," got back his Woods Theatre on the Boardwalk in Atlantic City on September 1, was in town last week and lined up some excellent attractions of an independent nature that will be exploited at his house. Starkman is anxious to hear from independents who have expliotable pictures that they believe would go over on the Boardwalk.

Toronto exchanges are still in a bad way, although conditions there are generally improving. Particularly true is this of the film business, exhibitors in eastern Canada reporting greatly increased box office receipts during the past three weeks, with the increases steadily improving.

Just what Al Kahn of the Federated Exchanges of Omaha and Kansas City intends doing is problematical. Al hasn't had much to say lately, but his friends in the trade are looking forward optimistically to a surprisng announcement from him.

Arrow Triumphs Again!

ARROW Film Corporation has again scored. This time with "Night Life in Hollywood." We knew the picture possibilities, but we did not for an instance suspect that it would inspire the stunts that heralded the coming of this picture at the Woods Theatre in Atlantic City, N. J., where the exploitation literally attracted attention second only to that devoted to the international pageant that was held there. Despite the lateness of the season, the picture opened at a top figure of one dollar and reports at press time indicated that every house record there would be broken before the first week expired. The title has possibilities galore. Arrow gave the trade "Ten Nights In a Barroom," a picture that opened the eyes of exhibitors throughout the country as to the possibilities of independent pictures of box office merit. ROGER FERRI.

Internal Revenue Collectors Use Sheriffs to Force Tax Payment

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 14—(Special)—The Internal Revenue Department is determined to collect the five per cent. tax on all sales of films made between May, 1919, to January 1, 1922, according to announcement made here today. Treasury officials, backed by deputy sheriffs, have already served notice on a number of independents that the tax is due and must be paid without further delay. It is unofficially estimated here that collection of the tax involves over $1,000,000.

Harry G. Kosch, counsel for the Independent Producers and Distributors, Inc., has been in constant touch with the local authorities, who are determined to collect the tax and have notified their local agents to that effect. Inquiry relative to the provisions of the law have been made also by the Will Hays organization.

New England Exhibitors and Cohen Urge Booking of Independent Films

BOSTON, MASS., Sept. 12 (Special).—The annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Massachusetts today endorsed the campaign of Moving Picture World for bigger and better independent productions. The Bay State exhibitors, who voiced the sentiment of exhibitors in other New England States, commended the independents and voted to give the independent picture every consideration. In fact, the convention from the independent producer and distributors' angle was a huge success.

One resolution passed by the exhibitors urged all theatre owners to encourage the production of good independent pictures by using as many of them as possible and giving them preference. President Sydney S. Cohen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who made the principal address, discussing exhibitors and independent pictures, in part said:

"To place the distribution of pictures on a business basis would be to cut down materially the cost and afford the producer of independent pictures an opportunity to bring his product directly to the theatre owner and the public. I believe that we must get away from this system of clogging our booking dates. When you remove this iniquitous distribution system and encourage the independent producer, you will be able to remove the shackles that have been put around the exhibitors. There are more independent productions of merit in the world today than ever before, and if the exhibitors will encourage the independent producers, next year there will be three times as many.

"The independent wants definite encouragement to make pictures. If they are giving you a square deal, it is up to you to stand by them. We have been merchandising our product wrong. But one thing is certain and that is that the exhibitor must encourage the independent producer and distributor by furnishing the dates."

To Road-Show Houdini Film

"The Man from Beyond," Houdini's special feature which scored such a pronounced success during its recent run at the Times Square Theatre, New York, and which is now being sold on the states rights plan, will be routed as a road show in a number of territories throughout the country this season.

The show is called the Houdini Wonder Show of 1922. It consists of "The Man from Beyond," which is its principal component part, and a program of spiritualism and mystery, prepared by Houdini and presented by mystifiers of his selection.

Try-out performances were given at the Liberty Theatre, Staten Island, September 7-10, where the show registered so successfully that a long route is being laid out for it in the New York territory.

Skirboll Brothers of Pittsburgh this week made it known that all their State rights distribution in that territory will be done through their newly formed company, the Iron City Exchange. They already have acquired the western Pennsylvania rights to the C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett special, "Secrets of Paris."

Harry Lande, who operates exchanges in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Cleveland, has arranged for special showings of Ivan Abramson's "Wildness of Youth," the first Graphic release, in those territories the week of October 9.

"Wildness of Youth" will have its premier showing in this country on October 2 at the Arcadia Theatre in Reading, Pa.

The Fontenelle Feature Film Company of Omaha this week acquired distribution rights to the C. B. C.-Hallroom Boys' comedy series of two-reelers.

Berlowitz & Mills, who operate the Elk Exchange in New York City, will open a Graphic Exchange in Buffalo. The exchange will be located in Franklin street, Buffalo. The product of the new exchange will consist of features, two-reel comedies and western dramas, as well as single-reel cartoons and novelty subjects.

Sam Zierler, whose Commonwealth exchange in New York is second to no independent exchange in the country, announced this week that the Eastman Theatre, Rochester's $5,000,000 theatre, will show the new Clara Kimball Young special, "The Hand of Nara."

Al Lichtman, president of Al Lichtman Corporation, returned to New York on Thursday morning, following a visit to the Harry Charnas exchanges in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit and Chicago, where he and others were the guest of that popular exchangeman at showings of "Rich Men's Wives."

BLAZED TRAILS PRODUCTION FORCES IN ACTION

Director George Irving talking over script of "Lost In a Big City," which Arrow will distribute, with Star John Lowell, Author L. Case Russell, standing next to Director Irving.

Independents Here Keep Studios Busy

Independent production activities in the eastern studios are on the buzz again, judging from reports that have come to this department during the past week. Announcement that John McCutcheon had completed a new independent production, "When the Cows Come Home," was made Wednesday. Several independent distributors, including Arrow and Lou Rogers, are considering the picture's possibilities. The cast is a good one and includes: Gladys Leslie, Maurice Costello, Robert Elliott, Norma Sherra, Ernest Hilliard and Edna May Spooner.

Burton King has organized his new company for the production of his newest independent picture, "The Shylock of Wall Street." Gene Burnell, who starred in "Determination" and who has been increasing her popularity through her personal appearances throughout the country, will play the stellar role. Others in the cast, which is an all-star one, include Zena Keefe and Dore Davidson. Mr. King will direct.

Now that he has completed "Sure Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, for C. C. Burr, Director Dell Henderson is concentrating all his efforts on the selection of the cast for "Jacqueline," the Pine Tree Company picture, based on a story by James Oliver Curwood, which Arrow Film Corporation will State right.

Just when Whitman Bennett will start work on his Betty Blythe feature has not been made known. Mr. Whitman, in association with Charley Burr, has just completed his latest production, "Secrets of Paris," with an all-star cast.

Miss Ruth McNamara, a society woman of Richmond, Virginia, plays the role of a social secretary in a film production, "The House of Solomon," in which William Strauss heads the all-star cast.

George Hackathorne, who played the "little minister" in the Famous Players production of that title appears in a character role in the Eric Von Stroheim production, "Merry Go Round," which is being filmed in California. Mr. Hackathorne appears as a hunchback, adding this to his long list of characterizations.

Madge Kennedy, Kenma screen star, returned from Saranac Lake last Wednesday and on the following day saw, for the first time, the screening of "The Purple Highway" as it had been cut, titled and edited just as it will be shown on Broadway next month. Henry Kolker directed this picture. Rufus Steele developed the story from a play, "Dear Me," a John Golden stage success.

It is not generally known that Edy Darclea, who played the featured female role in a Fox special "Nero," and who is being starred by Unity Pictures in "Why Do Men Marry?" is also to appear in the featured female role in another production to be released in America shortly. She was selected by Henry Kolker for the lead in "Saint 'Ilario," adapted from F. Marion Crawford's famous story.

Vincent Coleman will be in New York a few weeks longer, as the play in which he appears with Doris Kenyon "Up the Ladder" a William A. Brady production, is to move from the Majestic Theatre, Brooklyn, to other New York theatres within the next month. His stage work is a change for Mr. Coleman. He has been appearing in films continuously for the past year, having played opposite five of the best known woman stars.

One of the busiest screen stars these days is Mary Alden, famous for her mother roles in "The Old Nest" and other big productions. She recently finished work in "Notoriety," a Bobby North production; she is about to be starred in "A Woman's Woman" a United Artists release. She appeared with Richard Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy" and she is now in the vicinity of San Juan, Porto Rico, making another picture.

J. B. Warner, the new cowboy star, has completed "Crimson Gold," his third western picture.

Special for Bryan

A special showing of "After Six Days," Weiss Brothers' feature spectacle of the Old Testament, was given on Wednesday of last week for the benefit of William Jennings Bryan, who expressed himself as highly pleased with the production and handling of the Bible.

Skirbolls to Run Detroit Exchange

DETROIT, MICH., Sept. 14 (Special)—Arrangements have been virtually completed whereby the Skirboll Brothers, of Cleveland and Pittsburgh, will obtain control of the Warner exchange in this city. Dave Warner, a relative of Warner Brothers, has been operating the local office. Skirboll Brothers handle the Warner product in Cleveland and Pittsburgh, in the former city as the Iron City Exchange, while in the latter town under the name of Gold Seal Productions.

It is expected that the manager of the Detroit exchange will be named within a few days. Several well known film men have been mentioned. It was stated here that in the deal is represented much New York capital. Just what the status of Dave Warner will be has not yet been made known, however.

Abe Warner, of Warner Brothers, passed through the city en route to the Coast last week.

All was hustle and bustle at the Standard Film Service Exchange in the Film Building this week, for Al Lichtman, of Lichtman Productions; Harry Charnas, owner of the exchange, and the trade press editors were the guests of the exchange at a showing of "Rich Men's Wives." The party left Thursday night for Cleveland on the lake steamer.

While business in Michigan in general has not been what exchangemen and exhibitors had hoped it was, it is picking up gradually, with every indication for a big improvement by the latter part of November.

Statistics at the bigger exchanges here show that exhibitors are paying better prices for big independent pictures, and these increases in many instances are, in proportion, greater than some being paid for program features.

The downtown Detroit theatres are shopping for big State rights possibilities. This is a good omen, say the local boys, who for many years had sought an audience with them, but in vain.

Favorite Pictures Exchange is still doing big business on "Burn 'Em Up Barnes."

Dave Mundstuk and Minter are still at loggerheads over the status of the exchange that the former sold to the latter last Fall.

Northwest

HUGH RENNIE, resident manager for Arrow in Seattle, is spending two weeks in Walla Walla, Spokane, and Eastern Washington, and is securing some nice contracts.

Barney S. Rose, formerly with the Denver Arrow, has been transferred to the Seattle territory. He will cover Washington and Oregon.

Prints of "Stralght from Paris" have been received at the Seattle Arrow Exchange. Release date is September 15, and bookings are open. Clara Kimball Young is starred. Rights for four states have been purchased for this feature. Prints of "My Wandering Boy" are expected within ten days and will be released throughout the entire eight Northwest states.

Ernest Van Pelt, special representative for Sacred Films, Inc., is in Seattle arranging for showings of Sacred Films in Seattle and Portland. This series of twelve one-reel productions is distributed through DeLuxe Feature Film Company and will show at the Seattle Columbia Theatre.

E. Marshall Taylor, one of the well-known exhibitors of the Northwest, formerly with Jensen & Von Herberg in Wenatchee, Bremerton and Portland, plans a trip through Montana as special representative of DeLuxe Feature Film Co.

According to Joe Muller, manager of Ackerman & Harris' Palace Hip Theatre in Seattle, the big Educational super-feature, "The Battle of Jutland" brought in the best business of the year, during the week of August 12. No particular exploitation accompanied the production, other than a bit of extra newspaper advertising.

B. A. Hawkinson, formerly with First National in Seattle, is now covering Montana for Educational, out of the Seattle office.

L. K. Brin, who handles the Warner Brothers product through his Kwality exchanges in Seattle, has been making a trip through the key cities of Montana. He reports business conditions improved. "School Days," which has been playing to gratifying business through the entire Pacific Northwest, will open in Spokane, September 2, at the Auditorium Theatre.

Jack Lannon and J. T. Sheffield of Greater Features, Inc., on a recent motor trip to Portland, contracted for the 1922-1923 series of twenty-six Hallroom Boys comedies in two reels, for the northwest Pacific territory. Greater Features, Inc., has handled all previous Hallroom Boys series, including the original series in 1919, and are just completing the twenty-six released during last year through Federated. On the strength of their confidence in the quality and the manner in which these comedies have become established with theatre men and public alike, they are happy to make the announcement that the new series will be distributed through their exchanges for the coming season.

Signal honor has been accorded Sergeant Loyal T. R. Snyder, who has been a member of the Citizen's Military Training Camp in the aerial service and rifle shooting during the past month. Sergeant Snyder, a lad of seventeen, was one of four men out of six hundred making a record which entitled him to be chosen to go to Camp Perry, Ohio, for an additional month's training. Shoots at Camp Perry will take place September 27 and 28. Sergeant Perry is a graduate of Broadway High School and is enrolled for the law course in the University of Washington. Owing to the honor he has won, which will keep him away from college at the opening of the semester the Dean has granted him special leave. Snyder is the owner of six scenics, which are released through the Seattle Film Exchange, and is also interested in this firm. His mother, Mrs. Nina R. Snyder, is owner of the Seattle Film Exchange, and the only woman in Seattle so identified with the film business. The four boys were complimented by the regular army men at Camp Lewis, upon their departure for Camp Perry.

F. W. Bowan has returned from a week's business trip to Portland in the interests of the West Coast Distributing Co., which has offices at 2022 Third Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Chicago

Universal's Randolph Theatre in the Loop section last week played the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation special, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," which ran the most intense run of heat this city has ever experienced. In spite of that fact the picture held up well in comparison with business done at the other houses.

Frank Zambreno, president of Unity and Progress Pictures Corporation, ranks as one of the most popular film men in the country. Mr. Zambreno has no trouble in getting top and choice dates. He had two pictures on the Loop last week. They were "Broken Silence," an Arrow-James Oliver Curwood picture, at the Star, and "Back to Yellow Jacket," a Ben Wilson-Arrow feature, at Barbee's Loop Theatre.

Having received a telegram from Manager Dave Starkman, of the Woods Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., where Arrow's latest feature, "Night Life in Hollywood" opened last Monday night, to the effect that that picture broke all records at that house, Mr. Zambreno immediately opened negotiations with Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, of Arrow, to take over that feature for this section.

Joe Friedman, owner and manager of Celebrated Film Players Corporation here and president of Federated Film Exchanges of America, returned on Monday of this week after spending a hard-earned vacation in Michigan.

Ci Griever, of the Griever Exchange, is making rapid progress here and in the market for good features.

Louis Burston, producer of "Forget Me Not," which is now being released by Metro, was in town and visited the independent exchanges along Wabash avenue.

Manager McCurdy, of the Randolph Theatre, here, is a booster for independent pictures.

Warner Brothers' "From Rags to Riches," starring Wesley Barry, will be given its premier showing at the wonderful Chicago theatre. Balaban & Katz are State righting the Warner pictures in this territory.

Just what the future status of the Reelcraft exchange here will be still remains a mystery among exhibitors. This exchange is selling the new series of Jack Hoxies in opposition to the Ben Wilson series, which are exceedingly popular hereabouts. Despite the fact that the new series is being sold at bargain counter prices, exhibitors seem to be passing them up, the general impression being that they are away below the standard of the Wilson features.

Pittsburgh

Never before in the history of the independent market was the future so bright. In this territory a number of first run houses that never used independent pictures are falling in line, according to the bookings on record at the various exchange offices.

Bill Finkel, special representative of Quality Exchange here, went to Cincinnati, where he planned making several changes in the personnel of the other Harry Lande exchange there.

Joe Skirboll has organized the Iron City Exchange in this city for the exploitation and distribution of Warner Brothers' productions, which he will distribute in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Simeral Exchange here announced this week the acquisition of a series of six Jack Hoxie westerns, produced by Ben Wilson from Arrow Film Corporation.

A new exchange building is being erected on Forbes street, Pittshurgh's film row, and will be ready for occupancy the latter part of December. Several independent exchanges now out of the new film district expect to move into this new building.

Columbia Film Exchange here is also planning to move into new and larger quarters. This firm is now sharing part of the first floor of the old Film Building in Ninth street. Business with this firm has been so progressive that these larger quarters are imperative.

According to Manager Davis of Columbia Film Exchange, exhibitors in this territory are besieging his office with requests for dates on C. C. Burrs latest Johnny Hines special, "Sure Fire Flint."

The visit to Pittsburgh of the trade press editors and other prominent film men as the guests of Harry Charnas, owner of Federated Film Exchange here, at the initial showing of Al Lichtman's "Rich Men's Wives" was a gala occasion. It was a success from every angle and Joe Lefke, manager of the exchange, is still receiving congratulations from exhibitors who attended. Al Lichtman was the principal speaker.

Rich Men's Wives" opened at the State Theatre here on Monday to splendid business. The newspaper reviews were commendable, with the result that the engagement promised to be a humdinger from box office viewpoint, despite the opposition across the street, where Harold Lloyd starred in "Grandma's Boy," Rodolph Valentino playing the second week in "Blood and sand" and "Monte Cristo," all of which were elaborately exploited.

Klein Sells Rights

"Is a Mother to Blame?" has been sold for Argentine, Uraguay and Paraguay by the Edward L. Klein Company, 162 West Forty-second street, New York, which organization controls the foreign rights to this production, which is being distributed by the Medal Film Corporation.

This Crowd—

isn't even a marker to the hundreds of thousands of people who will pack their way into theatres all over the country to see the outstanding motion picture sensation of the season.

Rialto Plans Chain of Twenty-two Exchanges

Louis T. Rogers, president of the Rialto Productions, announces plans are being formulated to open twenty-two exchanges, to be known as the Rialto Film Exchanges; each manager will own his own exchange and work on a co-operative plan. A similar plan will be made with the producers of pictures. Nat Levine, former president of the Plymouth Pictures, has been engaged as general sales manager. There will be five district managers, at advantageous points, who will also share in the co-operative plan.

Rialto has already contracted for ten productions and arrangements are now being consummated for the balance of its first year output. The franchise calls for a series of twenty-six features to be released one every other week; also one single-reel or two-reelers, consisting of comedies, cartoons and scenics, one to be released each week. There will be a series of four special productions, the first of which will be "Retribution," the story of Lucretia Borgia. This six-reel production played the Park Theatre, New York, for four weeks, and received praise from the daily press critics and trade papers. The second special will be "Smiles and Tears," adapted from Rudyard Kipling's famous story, "Gunga Din."

Rialto states a few territories are still open, and that a new auditing system has been instituted by Michael D. Fields that will be of benefit to both producers and exchangemen.

Equity Special Opens at the Cameo

Daniel Carson Goodman's "What's Wrong With the Women?" which is now being distributed on the State right market by Equity Pictures, will open at the Cameo Theatre, New York, on Sunday, September 17. The Equity picture was booked at the B. S. Moss house by Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Film, who is distributing the feature in the New York territory.

"What's Wrong With the Women?" will, in addition, play over the entire U. B. O. circuit in New York. These are the first reports of big bookings on the picture received at the Equity office, although it is understood that negotiations are now under way in other territories where the picture has been sold.

Frank Cassidy, formerly advance man for the Al G. Barnes circus, joined the Warner Brothers exploitation force, headed by Eddie Bonns, and he will take charge of the float built by Warners for exploitation of the big seven productions set down for release next season.

Louis Baum, vice president of Equity Film Corporation of New York, is in Seattle and the Northwest, selling state right son "What's Wrong With the Women?"

State Rights Gossip

Arthur Bromberg, that live-wire from down South, who operates a string of progressive exchanges in Atlanta, Charlotte and New Orleans, visited New York last week and will remain in the metropolis until the latter part of the month. He motored all the way.

Exhibitors in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit received a genuine treat at the testimonial dinner that Harry Charnes, head of the Standard Film Exchanges in those cities, accorded to Al Lichtman, president of Preferred Pictures Corporation, on the occasion of trade showing of that firm's initial picture, "Rich Men's Wives," on Sept. 10, 11, 12 and 13, respectively.

Rumors in Pittsburgh have it that several exchanges there will undergo changes in ownership. Business with some of the exchanges last year was the worst ever, and several of the boys fell by the wayside, the financial strain being too great.

Sol Lesser, who together with Mike Rosenberg and Brother Irving Lesser, who is in charge of the New York office, operate several exchanges in San Francisco and Los Angeles, is due in New York late this month.

Albany, N. Y., from all indications is developing into quite an exchange centre, several newcomers planning to establish exchanges there. There are estimated to be a trifle over 490 theatres north of the Yonkers line, and with exchanges in Buffalo and Albany film men and exhibitors seem agreed that a better service could be effected. On the surface, however, such an arrangement, to the writer, seems an extravagant move right now.

Bennett Says Cast Is Great

Whitman Bennett, who with Charles C. Burr, has produced a melodrama under the title of "The Secrets of Paris," which is a screen version of Eugene Sue's famous novel of "The Mysteries of Paris" claims that the cast in this picture is the strongest he ever assembled during his long career as a picture man.

For years Mr. Bennett was the assistant of Jesse Lasky, and later assistant production manager for Famous Players-Lasky. During that time he helped to produce many well known pictures, and at the same time, was instrumental in the aiding of bringing forth many well known screen stars.

"The Secrets of Paris" will soon be ready for the market. It is expected that it will be first shown in New York at one of the leading Broadway houses.

Frank S. Mattison of S. M. Sanford Productions arrived in Los Angeles from New York this week, according to a wire received here.

Some sort of litigation has developed over "Madame San Gene," which Producers Security Corporation announced for State rights release several weeks ago. Last week Aubrey Kennedy announced the completion of a picture with a similar title.

Murray W. Garson has purchased the screen rights to "Way Down South."

Aywon Film Exchange of New York and the Harry Charnas exchanges in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Pittsburgh have bought the territorial rights to the Anchor special, "The American Toreador."

Lee-Bradford are getting many inquiries on their latest September release, "Orphan Sally," produced by Superior Productions.

"Flash and Bond," with Lon Chaney and Noah Beery, has been sold by De Luxe Film Exchange for Washington, Idaho and Oregon.

Sol Lesser, the Coast independent producer and distributor, arrived in New York this week with a print of the latest Jackie Coogan picture, "Oliver Twist."

"More To Be Pitied Than Scorned," the C. B. C. Film Sales feature, the first of the "Big Six" porgram which Apollo Film Exchange is releasing in New York, is booked for a showing at B. S. Moss' Broadway in New York week of September 18.

Plans Long Run for "Notoriety"

Information from the offices of L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, producers and distributors of Will Nigh's coming special, "Notoriety," point to plans for an extended Broadway run on that production. The feature is nearing its final length, and a week or two will find it cut down to exhibition footage. When that is done, the feature will be booked for a prolonged run on Broadway, according to arrangements now being made by the producers.

First run houses along the White Way have, it is said, shown a desire to book "Notoriety" after its completion ever since cutting began. The calibre of the picture as shown from the 100,000 feet that were shot, proved, the producers say, that "Notoriety" stands head and shoulders above the average feature, and is easily big enough to stand an extended run on Broadway. As matters now stand, Weber & North must take the choice between housing "Notoriety" in a legitimate theatre or booking it into one of the first-run picture theatres.

F. J. Lipson, former manager for Film Booking Offices in Omaha and Seattle, has resigned to become Denver manager for L. K. Brin of Kwality Productions, which handles Warner Brothers Productions in the Pacific Northwest. Mr. Lipson is well known throughout the territory, having been associated with Mr. Brin in the film business ten years ago. Since that time he has been identified with other exchanges in different parts of the United States. Lipson will open an exclusive exchange in Denver and will have entire charge of the territory. Mr. Brin has just returned from Montana, where he reports exhibitors are enthusiastic over the season's outlook.

During an eight-day run of "School Days" in Spokane at the Auditorium Theatre the Spokane "Chronicle" extended an invitation to all school teachers to view the picture as their guest. The run opened September 2, and the "Chronicle" cooperated with front page publicity. The picture made a record.

Phil Goldstone announces the following sales on "Deserted at the Altar": New England, Pioneer Film Corp., Boston; Southern New Jersey and Eastern Penn., Twentieth Century Film Co., Philadelphia. Goldstone is en route to the Coast, where he will produce a new special for the independent market.

Justice Richard P. Lydon of the New York Supreme Court has dismissed the suit brought by Frank M. Sanford and Loraine C. McHenry against Excelsior Features for failure to prosecute same. The suit covered the distribution of "Brown of Harvard," and the plaintiffs alleged they fulfilled their part of the contract, but that the defendants refused to deliver the positive or reprints of the picture.

Theodore Johnson, manager of Reliance Distributing Corporation, has left for a two weeks' trip through eastern Washington.

Weiss-Goldin Case Is Again Before Court

Horace Goldin, who gives the illusion, "Sawing a Woman in Half," has secured from Justice Robert McC. Marsh of the New York Supreme Court, a temporary stay, enjoining the Clarion Photoplay, Inc., from exhibiting their motion picture, which portrays the sawing of a woman in half, and purports to expose how the illusion is done. A motion to make the injunction permanent, appoint a receiver for the motion picture production, and compel an accounting by the defendents of the receipts from the production has been set down for argument before Justice Francis Martin in the Special Term of the Supreme Court on September 18.

Goldin already has a motion before the court to punish the defendants for contempt of court on a decision by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, recently rendered, which he says barred defendants from exhibiting the picture, but which he declares has been ignored, and the picture exhibited all over the country, doing his act irreparable damage. The present stay granted by Justice Marsh is a result of this allegation, and for the further reason that Goldin now also asks for the appointment of a receiver, an accounting, and that damages in the sum of $100,000 be awarded him.

Justice Frances Martin of the New York Supreme Court will, on September 18, hear arguments on motion to vacate the alleged service of a summons on Hyman Winik in suit brought against him by Triangle Film Corporation to recover the value of certain notes. W. C. Kesting says the summons was improperly served on him and claims that it can be personally served on Winik on his return from Europe in October.

Bookings on "The Curse of Drink," according to Bobby North, are unusually heavy. According to the statement from Apollo Exchange in New York, bookings on this picture for a one-week period ran up to $12,000.

"Night Life in Hollywood" Repeats Arrow History at Hard-Boiled Resort

By ROGER FERRI

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 14.—(Special)—Arrow Film Corporation has another "Ten Nights In a Barroom." And judging from the attendance that has welcomed the premier showing of Arrow's latest special, "Night Life in Hollywood" at David Starkman's Woods Theatre here, this new box office wonder will get away to an even bigger and better sendoff than that accorded the "Blazed Trails" production when it was shown in Providence, R. I., last December.

In the face of the stiffest opposition to which any picture or legitimate attraction has ever been subjected, "The Storm," playing at nearby houses at 30 cents top and Eleanor Painter opening only a couple of blocks away at the Apollo in a new musical comedy, "Night Life in Hollywood" opened at the Woods house to greatest crowds ever packed in that playhouse. The top figure was one dollar and despite that price Manager Starkman was compelled to shut the box office at eight o'clock, holding the crowd in the lobby for a solid hour. This marvelous business continued throughout the week, with the management forced to give special performances, thus repeating history, for it will be recalled that when "Ten Nights" opened in Providence a similar step had to be taken.

The picture was unanimously praised by critics and audiences alike as "the greatest and most remarkable picture ever shown in Atlantic City." It seems as if the entire resort is boosting this picture, which has caught on remarkably, with every promise that the only way Manager Starkman will be able to accommodate all those who have expressed a desire to see the picture is to continue the showing indefinitely. This picture has every qualification of a knockout and properly handled can be made to repeat the same big business it is doing here in any part of the country.

Newspapers here and in Philadelphia are commenting at length on the picture, which is furnishing the public with a complete and agreeable surprise, full of melodrama, good humor, clean and wholesome. Incidentally it is the first picture ever shown in Atlantic City at one dollar top that ever showed the huge profit that it recorded as early as Wednesday. Indications on Wednesday were that the picture at the end of the current week would show a gross business of thrice that done here by any picture at a similar scale of prices.

The exploitation campaign that heralded the coming of the picture was the most remarkable to which Atlantic City was ever treated, even the hard-boiled city fathers opening up their hearts and allowing Manager Starkman and J. Charles Davis, 2nd, the Arrow exploitation head, to stage stunts that would have landed the ordinary agent in jail. In fact, this pair, in the vernacular of the show business, proved to the natives that, after all, Atlantic City is not unlike any other city in the country, and that intelligent, persistent and systematic exploitation and advertising does pay—and pay big dividends, too.

The town and immediate vicinity was plastered with lithographs and window cards. In addition to this, Arrow representatives copped 28 of the best 24-sheet stands in Atlantic City and the immediate section. The newspaper campaign was conducted on a large scale, the natives being played to on an elaborate basis.

For special stuff, Mr. Davis communicated with the pageant committee, for be it remembered that while this preliminary campaign was going on Atlantic City was busily selecting the prettiest girl in America. Although the time for entering floats in the pageant had passed, he succeeded in entering a float representative and exploitative of "Night Life In Hollywood," and Woods theatre. This happened on the Thursday prior to the Monday opening.

Every available decorater was put to work to build this float, the carpenter and property man at Woods' coming in handy. The chair, for it was a rolling chair parade that featured the pageant, was decorated one-half in royal purple and one-half in gold. It was a simple affair, but effective. Cutout letters of contrasting colors reading "Woods Theatre, Night Life In Hollywood" were put on both sides of the chair. A large painted sign with the same wording was also used.

To make this attraction more effective the services of two beauties were obtained, and these represented Hollywood bathing girls, attiring them in one-piece suits. The "gal" dressed in purple was seated on the gold side of the chair and the one attired in gold on the purple side. The spectacle was magnificent and stopped the parade.

As a further and equally effective stunt, Arrow Film Corporation offered to star in pictures one of the winners of the many contests that featured the festivities. The pageant committee jumped at this proposition, which was widely advertised, with the picture and theatre prominently mentioned. The story of this offer was syndicated throughout the country and "played up" by both Philadelphia and local newspapers. The proposition was announced from the stage at the grand finale of the pageant when a public reception was given to Miss America. It was announced too, that the winner would appear at the Woods Theatre on Monday, Sept. 11, when she would officially sign a contract.

This announcement was made by the official announcer to some 15,000 people on the Steel Pier on Saturday, Sept. 9, and it almost caused a riot. The announcement of winner and proposition was broadcasted by radio. The Monday feature at the theatre was embodied in newspaper advertising and by means of cards distributed on the Boardwalk through hotels and stores.

The honor fell to Miss Edria Fisk, of Trenton, N. J., who was selected by the Trenton newspapers. She arrived here too late, however, to get into the Intercity contest, but on account of her unusual beauty and striking appearance, the committee selected her to represent the Queen of Sheba in the pageant. In that capacity she won first prize in the second division. Immediately she was signed by Mr. Davis, on behalf of Arrow, for part in James Oliver Curwood's production, "Jacqueline," which Dell Henderson will make for Arrow distribution.

Arrow Film Corporation was officially thanked by the pageant committee for its co-operation. In addition to these stunts, oil paintings were placed in hotels, on the Boardwalk, in department and other stores and in the theatre lobby. All this was done in the comparatively short time of five days. Despite this brief period, the opening was the most remarkable theatrical achievement recorded in Atlantic City.

Arrow has another knockout!

Chinese Story in a Big Production

China has, of course, figured in the movies many times during the past ten or twelve years; but not to the same extent as now. There has been in the last year or two a steady provision of Chinese subjects for the stage, the name of some recent successes will readily be recalled; and the screen is following suit, as a glance at the release list of the producing organizations will reveal. One of the big films now being released, "The House of Darkened Windows," is put out by the Eastern Film Corporation.

There is a decided sentiment in favor of China throughout America just now. American financiers, associated with European banks, are backing up the Chinese Republic and propaganda is at work to create in the United States a feeling in favor of the Great Asiatic States. The effect of all this on readers is to dispose them in favor of China.

In making "The House of Darkened Windows," a strong cast of players was chosen and they interpret an exciting story most effectively, it is said. Pains were taken to insure accuracy of settings, costumes, customs, and many real Chinese, it will be observed, appear in the picture.

Unity Film Sold to Atlas Co.

Unity Pictures, Inc., of 723 Seventh avenue, New York City, announces that it has sold the rights of "Why Do Men Marry?" for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey, to the Atlas Film Distributing Company.

This is the production featuring Edy Darclea, who created somewhat of a sensation in the Fox special, "Nero," when shown at a New York theatre recently. Miss Darclea also plays one of the featured roles in the film spectacle, "Sant' Ilario," directed by Henry Kolker. The story, "Sant' Ilario," was written by the famous F. Marion Crawford, and it is said that months were spent in a search for a woman suitable as a type for the character created by F. Marion Crawford—a type who was also an accomplished actress. The search ended with the discovery of Miss Darclea.

"Why Do Men Marry?" is a thrilling society and domestic drama of the exploitable sort. Its title has come in for most favorable comment, interesting, as presumably it does, both men and women. The story, too, is unusual in that the denouement of the story cannot be forecasted. Fifty feet from the final fadeout, the result of the love story is in doubt. Accordingly, the Atlas Company, purchasers of the Greater New York and New Jersey rights, believes it has a highly marketable picture.

First Banks Ready

The first Monty Banks-Federated Film Exchanges, Inc., comedy has been completed by Ben Wilson and is entitled "Pure But Simple." Bruce Mitchell directed. Mr. Mitchell, by the way, is now in New York.

Warner Production Plans for Season of 1923

Why We Joined Will H. Hays

By HARRY M. WARNER

Eighteen big pictures is our production goal for 1923:

And each one of these productions will be made with the best talent available in the industry—meaning, that we will engage the best directors, the best screen players and the best known scenario writers to whip our stories into shape.

All of the eighteen pictures will be made from books and plays which, when made known, will surprise the industry. I say this without exaggeration. And I'll back up any assertion I make.

As has been announced to the trade press, the forthcoming series of seven Warner Brothers pictures have been made from seven popular stories. Each work is known to thousands of people, and the reading percentage of the entire series runs into the millions. Furthermore, the men behind the stories, from the novelist to the directors, the players and the scenario writers, have a following that also runs into the millions.

Coupling these facts with the high standard of production excellence that has been maintained in the making of the pictures—and there you have seven of the big box-office attractions of the season.

We are not only striving to produce money-making attractions, but we have also dedicated ourselves to exhibitor co-operation. By co-operation I mean that we leave no stones unturned in helping the showmen of the country with publicity and advertising suggestions from the time he books the picture until the time he shows it to his patrons.

An instance of the wide scope of our publicity and exploitation campaigns to aid exhibitors can be evidenced from the fact that we are sending a huge float containing the names of our seven productions from New York direct to California. This stunt is unprecedented in the history of motion pictures. And to say that it will help those exhibitors who will play our pictures is putting it mildly.

We have joined the Will H. Hays organization and we are glad to be with him in helping to restore the public confidence in motion pictures and in the industry in general. We believe he will counteract and wipe out all the unscrupulous promoters of motion pictures who are actually stealing the hard earned savings of widows, orphans and the countless others who are regular patrons of the picture theatre.

We believe that Mr. Hays is performing a wonderful service to the industry. We believe that he is wielding a powerful weapon in developing the educational as well as the entertainment value and general usefulness of the motion picture in the eyes of the public. We believe that he will safeguard the interests of all those connected in any way with the industry.

And in advocating the diffusion of accurate and reliable information about the motion picture, in making known the great scope of this wonderful medium for the transmission of clean, wholesome and instructive ideas, he is performing a great service to the industry and the great American public.

And that it why we joined Mr. Hays.

Big Warner Float on Way to Coast

One of the greatest advertising stunts that has been evolved in the industry was launched last week by Eddie Bonns, director of advertising and publicity for Warner Brothers, and his assistant, Lou Marangella, for the forthcoming series of seven Warner pictures.

The advertising stunt is a huge float with seven books mounted on a truck. The float is thirteen feet high, and the total length of the seven books is seventeen feet. The books are in striking colors, and the names of the seven pictures are emblazoned on both sides of the truck.

This huge float will make a tour of the country, beginning in New York and ending in California. On the tour will be a driver for the truck, and a publicity man, who will visit every mayor and governor along the route, carrying with him a letter of introduction from Will H. Hays and Mayor Hylan, of New York.

An unusual number of publicity stunts will be put over, and it is conservatively estimated that many millions of people will see the float display of the Warner pictures.

The seven productions to be advertised by the float include "Rags to Riches" and "Heroes of the Street," both with Wesley Barry; "The Beautiful and Damned," by F. Scott Fitzgerald; "Main Street," by Sinclair Lewis; "Brass," by Charles G. Norris; "A Dangerous Adventure," with Grace Darmond, and "Little Church Around the Corner," by Marion Russell.

The truck will be equipped with a radio amplifier, and reports of current news events and concerts will be given at street corners in the various cities visited. Also, a portable projector will be used on the tour, and during the evening trailers of the Warner pictures will be shown to the public.

The float will tour through New York City for one week, after which it will make a trip to Boston and come back to New York. Then it will proceed direct to the Warner Brothers' West Coast studios.

Upon the completion of the tour, the return route, which in all probability will encompass the South and Southwest, will be mapped out at the Warner coast studios.

First Fall Film

Warner Brothers announce "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production featuring Wesley Barry as their first of seven fall releases. The picture was given a preview presentation at the Symphony Theatre, Venice, Cal., and it is said to have been accorded an unusual reception by both the critics and the public.

The review of the picture by Art Meyer in the Los Angeles Motion Picture Bulletin said:

"Warner Brothers have scored another triumph in 'Rags to Riches,' their latest Wesley Barry feature. It is a splendid production with a wonderful moral. It is one of the few pictures that have been produced recently that really gives you something to think about."

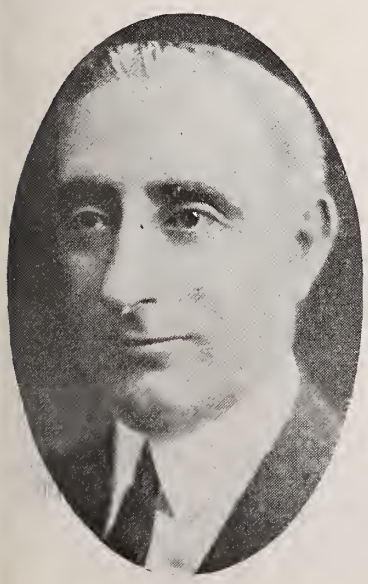
Foreign Outlook Is Brighter

The foreign distribution of the Warner Brothers productions is handled by Gus Schlesinger, general manager of the foreign department, who by virtue of his long and varied experience in the industry is a specialist in the marketing of foreign pictures.

The present outlook in the foreign market is brighter than it has been for many years, according to Mr. Schlesinger.

"For many years the foreign producers have been earnestly striving to duplicate and outstrip the efforts of American producers," said Mr. Schlesinger, "but a keen survey of their pictures proves that they still have a long way to travel in the making of super-box-office features.

"Big pictures in the true sense of the word, with popular screen stars, and good powerful dramatic stories will find a ready market with foreign buyers," concluded Mr. Schlesinger.



HARRY RAPF

Film Seven Noted Books and Plays

The roster of seven productions to be released by the Warner Brothers for the coming season include three Harry Rapf productions, and four Warner features, directed by prominent directors and adapted by well-known scenario writers from seven popular books and stage plays. A group of prominent screen players were engaged to interpret the varied roles for each production.

"Rags to Riches," featuring Wesley Barry, is announced for release in September. This is a Harry Rapf production, directed by Wallace Worsley and adapted from the stage play and book of Charles A. Taylor by William Nigh and Walter De Leon.

"The Beautiful and Damned," with Marie Prevost and Kenneth Harlan in the leading roles, is named as the second release. S. L. and Jack Warner produced the picture, E. Mason Hopper directed, and Olga Printzlau adapted it for the screen. The novel was written by F. Scott Fitzgerald.

"Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce, features Marie Prevost. It is a Harry Rapf production, directed by Sidney Franklin who has been responsible for "Smilin' Through," "East is West," and many other screen successes. Monte M. Katterjohn adapted the story for the screen.

"Heroes of the Street" starring Wesley Barry, is a Harry Rapf production directed by William Beaudine. The book and stage play by Lem Parker has enjoyed years of undiminished popularity. The setting of the story is the colorful slum section of New York.

"A Dangerous Adventure," featuring Grace Darmond, is a story of strange adventure in the African jungles. The production was made by S. L. and Jack Warner, and the story was written by Frances Guihan.

"Main Street," Warner Brothers says, is the greatest novel ever written of rural America. It was written by Sinclair Lewis, and it was produced by S. L. and Jack Warner. It is said to be replete with exploitation possibilities. Julien Josephson adapted it for the screen.

"Little Church Around the Corner," in its many years before the public as a stage play and as a book, has become known all over the world. The story was written by Marion Russell, produced by S. L. and Jack Warner, and adapted for the screen by Olga Printzlau.

Harry Rapf Names Box Office Pictures

Harry Rapf, who is producing three productions for the Warner Brothers, namely, "From Rags to Riches," and "Little Heroes of the Street," both featuring Wesley Barry, and "Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce featuring Marie Prevost, is firm in the conviction that the coming season will witness the production of the biggest pictures ever made in the history of the industry.

"The coming season will mark the release of the biggest pictures yet produced," said Mr. Rapf.

"Every scenario writer and every director" continued Mr. Rapf, "is following one light and the motto seems to be 'Good stories well directed.' There was a time when to mention the cost of a picture was to sell it, but now that the motion picture business is becoming established, systematic business pictures that would have cost $500,000 a year or two ago can now be made for half that amount for the reason that there is no waste. There is now a keen rivalry between the motion picture companies not to outspend the other people, but to turn out a picture that the public will flock to see for the least amount possible without sacrificing it in any way.

"After looking over the list of pictures scheduled for production and release and seeing many previews, it strengthens my conviction that there will be pictures on the market this coming season that will exceed all previous years both in amusement value and box office drawing power."

Entire Series Have Been Sold

The entire series of seven forthcoming Warner Brothers productions made from popular novels and stage plays have been sold solid throughout the country, according to Harry M. Warner. An unusual feature of the negotiations is that the seven pictures have not all been completed, and this is said to indicate in no small measure the confidence placed by the buyers of the films in the Warner Brothers.

The seven features include "Rags to Riches" and "Little Heroes of the Street," both starring Wesley Barry, "The Beautiful and Damned," featuring Marie Prevost, "Brass," starring Marie Prevost, "Main Street," the novel by Sinclair Lewis, "A Dangerous Adventure," featuring Grace Darmond, and "Little Church Around the Corner," by Marion Russell.

Work to Maintain High Standard

The encouragement of the independent producers is tending to elevate the motion picture to its greatest and highest standard, according to Sam and Jack Warner, members of the Warner Brothers organization, who are producing a number of the forthcoming series of seven Warner pictures. Both Sam and Jack have been allied with the industry since its infancy, and during this period, they have found that the smaller producing companies are helping to maintain the excellent standard of motion picture production.

"Since 1918, the smaller producers of pictures have had a hard struggle," say Sam and Jack Warner. "But the earnest endeavor to bring forth high class money-making features has been very successful indeed.

"The smaller producing companies have one big advantage over the larger concerns, and that is the personal contact between the producer and the director and the actual filming of the picture. This advantage has proven its worth, for the simple reason that every successful producer has studied the public's demand and knows what will satisfy their amusement appetites.

"In short, the producer is on the ground from the day the picture is started up to and including the day the film is shipped from the cutting room ready for exhibition."

Wesley Barry to Appear Exclusively in Warner Brothers Productions

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, announces that Wesley Barry, who was under contract with Marshall Neilan, has been signed for a number of years to appear exclusively in Warner productions. The contract with Neilan recently expired, and Mr. Warner immediately contracted to have him appear exclusively in feature pictures.

"Freckles" Barry recently completed two productions for the Warner Brothers, "Rags to Riches," and "Little Heroes of the Street," which were produced by Harry Rapf, and directed respectively by Wallace Worsley and William Beaudine.

With the completion of the second picture a tour of the country was planned for Barry. Arrangements were made by S. L. and Jack Warner at the Coast studios with G. H. Dumond, formerly owner and manager of a famous vaudeville act, whereby the latter will take the freckled youngster on a tour of the principal cities of America.

It is expected that with the popularity he has already attained, coupled with his personal appearance tour and the release of the pictures made by Harry Rapf for the Warner Brothers, Wesley Barry will become one of the biggest box-office attractions in the industry.

"Rags to Riches," the first Warner release, is assured first run bookings throughout the country by virtue of the fact that the most representative theatre and exchange men have contracted for the entire series of Warner Brothers productions.

False Advertising Hurts Industry, Says Warner

In reviewing the many evils that are constantly besetting the motion picture industry, Harry M. Warner contends that the attempt by theatre owners and producers and distributors to fool the public with false advertising relative to a picture not only helps to kill off theatre patronage, but also immeasureably hurts the industry.

It is Mr. Warner's firm conviction that if truthful advertising in both the trade and newspaper press is maintained, the industry will be taken out of the rut of its present decadent and hokum stage.

"If the producers and distributors of pictures continue to splurge smooth, but false facts about a picture, this industry will gradually lose its popularity in the eyes of the theatre-going public," said Mr. Warner. "For when this sort of advertising is carried on incessantly, and the picture does not back up the statements made in the newspaper and trade press, the succeeding ads will thereby lose their force and conviction.

"The result of this procedure can readily be surmised. The public will come to look disdainfully on the advertising copy, and as a consequence, theatre owners will be wondering why the crowds do not come to his theatre. This sort of thing has been carried on to excess, and the sooner it is stopped the better it will be for both producer and theatre owner.

"It simply means that when a real box-office attraction comes along, all the smooth phrasing and ballyhooing will do it no good. Because the public has become used to the same line of advertising, because it feels that in the past that same advertising did not truthfully tell about a picture, the public pays no attention to future announcements. Now more than ever before in the history of the business is there a greater need for sane and truthful advertising in both the newspapers and the trade press.

"We have dedicated ourselves to exhibitor co-operation, and in rendering this co-operation we will not wilfully mislead exhibitors into the belief that what is hailed as white will turn out to be black. In other words, our policy will be rigidly adhered to as far as our advertising and publicity copy is concerned. When we are truthfully sold on the merits of our features, we will truthfully tell both exhibitors and public about it.

"To help maintain the public confidence in the motion picture, to help theatre owners derive the maximum results from these attractions, we will constantly endeavor to inform them of the salient features and truthful facts concerning each and every one of our productions. Let us have more advertising in the trade press and in the newspapers, but let that advertising spell real worth in the eyes of those who have made our industry what it is today."

Coming Picture

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" probably will be Mary Pickford's next starring picture for United Artists Corporation. She has already purchased the rights to the Charles Major novel, according to word from the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios. The sum is stated to be one of the largest paid for a story this year.

It is said to be practically certain that Douglas Fairbanks will produce "Monsieur Beaucaire" as his next picture, this being an adaptation of the Booth Tarkington story.

Both Miss Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks will probably start work on these new productions before the close of the year.

F. B. O. Police Film Smashing Records

With the aid of exploitation campaigns executed by the Film Booking Offices field force the Emory Johnson police drama, "In the Name of the Law" is continuing its smashing career in the leading first run houses throughout the country. This F. B. O. release, by means of police tie-ups, has entered into a dozen cities with heavy advertising smashes.

By dedicating the production in each city to the local police chief and his force and by arranging a special showing for police officials, concessions of the most unusual nature are granted, so that cut-outs are placed on all the principal street corners, and banners strung across the main avenues. In many cities this marks the first time that any such permission has been granted for the advertising of a motion picture.

But perhaps the most extraordinary exploitation arranged to aid the picture is the police parade stunt. In Des Moines, Jess Day, manager of the Palace Theatre, stopped traffic half a dozen times during the day. He obtained a motion picture camera with which he "shot" scenes of the police parade, to be shown in connection with "In the Name of the Law" at his theatre.

Practically this same campaign was staged in Portland, Ore., where the picture ran at the Blue Mouse Theatre; in Los Angeles, in Enid, Okla., while similar drives were executed in Cleveland, Buffalo, Atlantic City, Topeka and Schenectady.

To Film Great Poem

The delightful romance of Colonial days, which Henry Wadsworth Longfellow has preserved to future generations in "The Courtship of Miles Standish," is to be reproduced in pictures by Charles Ray. Arthur S. Kane made an announcement to this effect, stating that Mr. Ray will begin production work as soon as possible after the completion of James Whitcomb Riley's "The Girl I Loved," on which he is now engaged. "The Girl I Loved" will follow the current offering, "A Tailor-Made Man."

It is the star's determination, said Mr. Kane, that the picture shall be of great educational value, while taking full advantage of the opportunities for entertainment that are offered.

Jane Novak Starts "Thelma"

Production was started this week on "Thelma," Marie Corelli's world-famous novel, which will be put upon the screen by Chester Bennett with Jane Novak as star. "Thelma" will be distributed through the Film Booking Offices of America.

The picture is being personally directed by Mr. Bennett, and will afford Miss Novak a new type of role inasmuch as she plays the Norwegian girl whose love story has been read by thousands.

"Slim Shoulders" Widely Exploited

Irene Castle in "Slim Shoulders," released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade opened to capacity houses in three different points last Sunday. The theatres and cities where the attraction is playing this week are the Capitol in Detroit; Princess in Quincy, Ill., and the Rialto in Newark.

Next week the shows move on to the Brooklyn Mark Strand, the Princess in Springfield, Ill., and the Capitol in Jackson, Mich.

The opening in Newark on Sunday proved one of the biggest motion picture successes of the season it is stated. An intensive exploitation campaign had been waged throughout the week, closing on Saturday with a big parade through the principal streets of the city. On Saturday morning the models who were seen in the Capitol, New York, revue were met in Newark at the Pennsylvania station by a brass band and escorted to the City Hall, where Mayor Reidenbach welcomed them in the name of the city and presented the principal mannikin with a gold key to the city.

Bamberger's and other big department stores co-operated in the campaign, and on Sunday this store used a full page newspaper advertisement featuring the Promenade.

Other noteworthy campaigns were conducted in Quincy and Detroit.

Thrilling Film to Start October

Associated Exhibitors is planning to start October with the release, on the 1st, of "Head Hunters of the South Seas," Martin Johnson's adventures among the wild tribes of Malekula. The feature is described as five reels of reality—of real adventure, real thrills, real dangers, real people, real emotions and real scenery.

"Head Hunters of the South Seas" bears a relation to "Captured by Cannibals," Martin Johnson's first picture, in that Mr. Johnson and his plucky little wife paid another call on Nagapate, chief of Big Numbers, said to be the cruelest, most savage tribe of cannibals in the Pacific.

Cold Courage for Billie Dove

The next Metro production in which Billie Dove is to be seen at the head of a distinguished cast is "Cold Courage," a screen version of a sea story by Ben Amos Williams, published under the title of "All the Brothers Were Valiant." Irvin Willat will direct.

With Paramount

Pauline Garon, the charming young actress who played opposite Richard Barthelmess in "Tol'able David" and "Sonny," has been engaged by Famous Players-Lasky to play one of the leading roles in Cecil B. DeMille's next production for Paramount.

A Clever Tie-Up for Exploitation

The exceptional exploitative possibilities of the Rex Ingram production for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda," were demonstrated during the showing of the photoplay at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, the entire week of August 20. Store tie-ups and newspaper publicity proved highly effective as interest stimulators. A co-operative arrangement with a leading shoe store resulted in valuable publicity, and the Cleveland Press carried daily stories and photographs of the progress of a widely discussed event.

In the window of a shoe store was shown a pair of slippers worn by Alice Terry, who plays the role of Princess Flavia in "The Prisoner of Zenda." A large sign was displayed, which read: "Those dainty slippers worn by Alice Terry, in the making of the picture production, 'The Prisoner of Zenda.' Can any Cleveland girl wear them? Prizes will be given to those whom the slippers fit."

The Cleveland Press published a detailed daily story about the progress of the competition.

Will Distribute Lichtman Films

Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., will distribute "Rich Men's Wives," B. P. Schulberg's first picture for the Al Lichtman Corporation in Canada. The deal was closed by Henry Ginsberg, sales manager of the Lichtman company, while he was in Canada last week.

New House Opened

A new house of the Donovan Amusement Company, of Taunton, Mass., was opened Labor Day with a musical show and four reels of pictures. The new enterprise is the Auditorium Theatre. Francis H. Moore is projectionist.

PAUL H. SLOANE

New Fox Picture by Sloane

Paul H. Sloane, scenario writer at the New York studios of Fox Film Corporation, is said to have achieved another success with his latest picture, "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." It has been placed on the Fox schedule of specials for the season of 1922-23, and opens an indefinite Broadway engagement at the Lyric Theatre, New York, beginning September 1.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them" is only one of a number of 1922-23 specials for which Mr. Sloane either wrote the scenario or the story and scenario. Among the others are "Silver Wings", featuring Mary Carr, which is in its fourteenth consecutive week at the Apollo Theatre, New York; "My Friend The Devil," with Charles Richman, scheduled for release in November; "The Town That Forgot God," directed by Harry Millarde; "If Winter Comes," from the A. S. M. Hutchinson novel now in the course of production on English soil, and another being made at the Hollywood studios under the working title of "Kentucky Days."

Mr. Sloane, who has been associated with William Fox for almost three years, also wrote the story and scenario of "Over the Hill" and "Thunderclap," two of last year's special features.

Fine Press Book for Coogan Film

The exhibitor booking Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" is going to be benefited with the greatest campaign book ever given the film industry, says Jackie Coogan Productions.

The volume contains approximately 100 pages—each and every one devoted to arguments not to the exhibitor, but for the exhibitor. One section of fifteen pages is devoted to as many stunts of exploitation that both the big and little exhibitor can utilize in like manner and with like results, it is stated. Detailed descriptions of all these stunts run the gamut of exploitation possibilities from beginning to end, the company says.

Forty pages are devoted to press stories ranging from paragraph length to full page length and taking into consideration every phase of the Charles Dickens' masterpiece and its noted star and cast.

A newspaper campaign on the synopsis of "Oliver Twist" consumes another eight pages and messages to the exhibitor from the producers, director, musical score compiler, etc., form another important part of the volume. Detailed descriptions of the records broken in the world premieres and how they were broken is still another interesting portion of the book.

Several double truck rotogravure sections stand out in the book. These contain scenes and portraits of the production and cast supporting Jackie Coogan. They will make excellent pictures for the walls of the exhibitor's offices when he has finished utilizing them on the exploitation of the Coogan production.

A page of accessories is also inserted in the book. Complete music score, etc., is also furnished.

To make the volume complete in every detail, the contract for exhibition of "Oliver Twist" is attached to the back of the book. This contract is in four parts, one original and three duplicate copies. Carbon paper is inserted in the volume and thus the exhibitor keeps intact his contract and exploitation possibilities and all data pertaining to "Oliver Twist."

How Show Value Is to Be Arranged

Before an exhibition value is placed on Constance Talmadge in "East Is West," this Joseph M. Schenck production will be submitted to patrons for a preliminary verdict as to its merits, according to a statement just issued by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., through which it will be distributed.

Mr. Schenck considers "East Is West," not only the greatest picture in which Constance Talmadge has appeared, but one of the biggest box-office attractions of the year.

With the success of "East Is West" as a big time picture absolutely assured, the only problem to be solved between producer, distributor and exhibitor was that of setting the exhibition value. First National explains, in the following statement, how this was done:

"The unusual production cost in which, of course, the screen rights to the play are an important item, make it necessary that unusual precautions be taken in order that the rentals on the picture be determined by actual box-office test runs before any definite exhibition value is placed on the production.

"Accordingly Mr. Schenck and ourselves have agreed on the following plan:

"Play dates for preliminary test runs in six theatres are now arranged. Upon the result of these engagements a temporary or tentative exhibition value will be set, at which rate 40 additional test engagements will be played. Upon the results of the 46 engagements the final exhibitions value for all rentals will be set.

"The general release date has been set for October 23. The test engagements will precede the release date. Exhibitors will be kept informed as to what the picture does at test runs by advertisements in the trade papers."

Mr. Schenck and First National furthermore have agreed that the public must be told of the unusual entertainment value of "East Is West," and a national magazine advertising campaign running over a period of six weeks has been decided upon. Six advertisements will appear weekly in the Saturday Evening Post, and a half-sheet of these ads will be given to exhibitors.

Kohn's Return Is Welcomed

Since the announcement, made recently, that Dependable Pictures Corporation has finished its first production, "Till We Meet Again," and placed it with Associated Exhibitors for release, Morris Kohn, president of the former organization, has, it is said, been deluged with letters and telegrams of congratulation from picture executives and exhibitors in every part of the country.

The tone of these communications shows that the return of Mr. Kohn, who was president of Realart Pictures Corporation until its absorption, to the active leadership of a film enterprise, is warmly welcomed. During his long career in the industry, Mr. Kohn has developed an acquaintance with exhibitors that is country-wide, and won for himself the high esteem of every man connected with pictures.

The cast of "Till We Meet Again" is said to be a notable one, with Mae Marsh, well known for her work in "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "The Face in the Dark," "Hidden Fires," and other big successes, in the leading woman role.

The story, which is said to carry a peculiarly dramatic appeal, is by William Christy Cabanne, who also had charge of the direction.

In Many Houses

More than 100 theatres, representing some of the most important first run houses and circuits in the country, inaugurated the new motion picture season the week beginning September 3, with unusual programs headed in each instance by "Monte Cristo," the Fox special, which is about to enter the sixth week of its indefinite run at the 44th Street Theatre, New York City.

Numerous reports from many of the houses evidence, it is said, the striking effect and drawing power of the spectacular screen version of Alexandre Dumas' classic novel, a large proportion of the theatres having created new box offices records with the opening engagement, it is stated.

Miss Logan Signed by Paramount

Another noted screen actress has been added to Paramount's list of permanent players in the person of Jacqueline Logan. She has been signed for a five-year contract to play leading roles as a member of the Paramount Stock company.

Miss Logan also will appear among the featured players of Mr. Melford's new picture, "Ebb Tide" the other being Lila Lee, James Kirkwood, Raymond Hatton, George Fawcett and Noah Beery.

Returns to Screen

After a year's absence from the screen, Elsie Ferguson, Paramount star, has returned to make the picturization of her stage play, "Outcast," at the Paramount Long Island studio. Miss Ferguson's last work in pictures was in "Peter Ibbetson," in which she was co-starred with Wallace Reid.

Books Preferred

"Rich Men's Wives," Ben Schulberg's first Preferred Picture for the Al Lichtman Corporation is now playing a 96 day booking on the Loew Metropolitan circuit.

This big booking contract which was closed recently by Al Lichtman includes all of the Loews chain of theatres in Greater New York.

Triumph Scored

Cecil B. DeMille's new Paramount production, "Manslaughter," scored a sensational success at its opening at Grauman's Rialto Sunday, according to a telegram received from Los Angeles at the home office of Paramount. One of the biggest crowds in the city's theatrical history waited for hours for the doors to open and the capacity audiences received the picture with tremendous applause.

THE HERALD'S critic said: "'Manslaughter' is a cinematic success by unanimous opinion. It is Cecil DeMille's greatest and most honest effort. This Paramount film will go down as one of the most vital works of motion picture art."

THE EXAMINER said: "'Manslaughter' must be seen. . . . It is a mighty indictment of the spirit of the age. . . . There are many moments of forceful, poignant interest."

"Manslaughter" succeeds Blood and Sand" at the Rialto, the latter picture having just closed a run of several weeks to capacity in order to make room for the DeMille production. It will open, in New York, at the Rivoli Theatre on Sunday, September 17.

Goldwyn Closes Foreign Deal

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has just closed contracts for the placing of its fifth year pictures in a number of foreign countries.

A new contract has been closed for the distribution of fifth year pictures in Japan through the Yanuma Company.

The Liberty Film Company, of Cuba, has taken over the pictures for distribution in Cuba.

In Porto Rico the Goldwyn product will be handled by Selection Film Company.

For the Australasian market a contract has been closed with Australasian Films, represented by Millard Johnson.

Reviewers Praise "Grandma's Boy"

The Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, "Grandma's Boy," produced by Hal Roach, made its New Work debut at the Mark Strand Theatre Sunday, September 3, with this result, it is stated:

From 4 o'clock until the close of last Sunday showing the "S. R. O. in the balcony only" sign was displayed; gatherings at every performance of the day applauded not only at the end of the last reel but frequently during the course of the picture, and the sole adverse criticism uttered by a newspaper reviewer was that the film was too short. On Labor Day, the crowds, seeking admission, were even larger. Packed houses and unrestrained enthusiasm continued the rule on each succeeding day of the week, it is said.

Joseph Plunkett, the Strand's managing director, introduced the feature with an especially attractive prologue, in which the new "Grandma's Boy" song, composed by Herb Crooker, Jean Havez and Pete Wendling, sung by the Strand quartette, scored a hit.

Extracts from a few of the reviews follow: Quinn Martin, in New York "World": "'Grandma's Boy' is the funniest screen comedy which we have seen this year." Frank Vreeland, New York "Herald": "The picture is one of the loud guffaws of the new season." Joseph Mulvaney, New York "American": "It's too short—that's what's the matter with 'Grandma's Boy.'

P. W. G., "Daily News": "In one fell swoop Harold Lloyd has made his first five-reel feature the funniest picture he has ever done and one of the best photoplays of the year." Helen Pollock, "Morning Telegraph": "When you say that 'Grandma's Boy' is Harold Lloyd at his best there isn't much more to be said." Harriette Underhill, New York "Tribune": "'Grandma's Boy' is the best comedy of the season."

J. O. Spearing, New York "Times": "'Grandma's Boy' is amusing nearly always and hilarious a good part of the time." Don Allen, "Evening World": "If you miss 'Grandma's Boy' you'll miss the best thing seen on the screen so far this season." "Evening Journal": "Harold Lloyd was never before so entertaining because he never before had so entertaining a picture."

"Evening Telegram": "In addition to being excruciatingly funny in 'Grandma's Boy', Lloyd shows surprising ability as an emotional player." "Evening Mail": "One would have to go far and wait long before witnessing a picture which provides more genuine entertainment and wholesome, whole-souled amusement."

L. M. R., in New York "Globe": "Here is one of the best comedies that filmdom has given us." The "Sun": "His first ambitious effort is a model among screen farces, and Lloyd romps home with a great burst of speed."

"Bull" Ties Up With a "Tartar"

When "Bull" Montana," the new Metro star, was recently at Long Beach acquiring a further coat of tan so as to make more impressive the part which he is to play in a new series of Metro comedies, he ran across a "tartar" on the beach when he "tied-up" in a friendly wrestling match with an athletic looking young man whom he met on the sands.

It might be mentioned, that Long Beach is one of "Bull's" favorite haunts, and he enjoys himself by tugging and hauling around with the athletic lifeguards, whom, however, he never has any trouble in overcoming in any athletic joust.

But on this special occasion "Bull" tackled an unknown, at least to him, and for twenty minutes the two were the centre of a ring of interested onlookers who at the finish of the bout were unable to decide which was the better man.

"Say," asked "Bull," when both had tired from their efforts and were willing to call it a day, "who are you anyhow—how do you keep in such great shape, and do you wrestle for a living?"

"Nope," answered the hefty young man between gasps, "I don't wrestle for a living, but as you say, I'm in pretty good shape, and I keep in form this way," and he led the marvelling "Bull" to an entrance under the board-walk that opened into H. J. Reilly's place, where Reilly, himself, awaited his star pupil to put him through his daily course of hydrotherapy.

Showmen View "Remembrance"

Close to 200 members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce saw a private screening of Goldwyn's new Rupert Hughes' photoplay, "Remembrance," at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday of this week as guests of the Goldwyn organization.

The screening was arranged by S. Eckman, Jr., in supervisory charge of Goldwyn distribution for the metropolitan district.

Judging from the comments heard after the screening, this film is one of the year's biggest productions—one that should prove even a bigger box-office sensation than "The Old Nest." Its appeal to the heart and to love of home is just as irresistible and it has a new angle in presenting father as the hero of the picture.

Added to Cast

Mary MacLaren, who played the leading feminine role with Wallace Reid in "Across the Continent," has been added to the cast of Elsie Ferguson's new Paramount picture, "Outcast." She will play the important role of Valentine. Miss MacLaren recently played the queen in the "Three Musketeers," with Douglas Fairbanks, and has been appearing in Cosmopolitan pictures lately.

Vitagraph Reports Big Demand

Vitagraph branches are reporting more demand for "A Rogue's Romance" than booking limitations will allow. It is a feature in which two stars, in the roles in which, it is said, they particularly sparkle, divide honors.

In "A Rogue's Romance," Rodolph Valentino is cast as "The Ferret," a cafe dancer, and member of the underworld. It is considered dangerous to cross "The Ferret," and yet Mons. Picard, a role assumed by Earle Williams, deliberately antagonizes this man, and engages in a fist fight with him. From that hour "The Ferret" hounds Picard, and cleverly informs the police of his every move. But Picard is always able to outwit the police, and make an exciting escape. However, he finally is reformed by the love of a girl.

Searching for a Leading Man

The leading man for the "Fighting Blood" series of two-reel subjects, which will be produced by R-C Pictures and released through the Film Booking Offices of America, will be announced in a short time, states that company. Several of the leading screen favorites are being considered for the important role of "Gale Galen," who becomes "Six Second Smith" and eventually middleweight champion. The "Fighting Blood" stories are from the pen of H. C. Witwer, whose initial series of prizefight stories have already been successfully picturized. To date six of the "Fighting Blood" stories have been published in Collier's magazine.

Goldwyn Plans to Aid Exhibitors

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is again out with what is said to be a brand new idea. This time it has to do with the presenting of Goldwyn product. It may be called a "first aid to the exhibitor."

It is a book of 28 pages, 10 3-8 by 13 inches, printed in two colors, and is devoted to a brief printed and pictorial account of Goldwyn productions for the season of 1922-1923. The ten productions completed, or nearing completion, are dealt with at length, two full pages being given to each. Four other pictures, in or approaching, the production stage are briefly considered.

The purpose of the book, as stated above, is to aid the salesmen in presenting Goldwyn pictures to the exhibitor.

A December Release

For the first time in the history of American film production, it is said, a photoplay is to be released simultaneously in the United States and in England. The film is Goldwyn's production of "The Christian," directed by Maurice Tourneur. The release date is December 10.

Fiction Notables on Selznick List

An impressive feature of the Selznick Pictures Corporation 1922-23 season announcement is the calibre of the authors who will furnish the stories for the forthcoming productions.

While Anthony Hope has written many other successful novels and stories he is best known for "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Rupert of Hentzau." It is the latter story which will be one of the series of really big specials of the coming year to be produced by Selznick. The tremendous success of "The Prisoner of Zenda" cannot but help increase the box-office value of "Rupert of Hentzau," which is a sequel to it.

Robert W. Chambers is an author with a real value at the box office. The Chambers story which Selznick will produce is "The Common Law," an internationally famous work of unquestioned theatrical worth.

Eugene Walters is just such another as Robert W. Chambers. His field is the drama and his plays have been among the outstanding successes for years. "The Easiest Way" was the play which brought Mr. Walters the greater part of his distinction. Selznick Company will include it in its 1922-23 program of "Sixteen Only."

Everybody knows Elinor Glyn. Her recently produced stories have been among the biggest money-makers of the year. "Her Unwelcome Lover," adapted from "The Reason Why," one of the best of the Glyn stories, will be offered by Selznick during the coming season.

Many Road Shows for Jackie Coogan Film

Sol Lesser is now en route to New York to establish headquarters for handling one of the biggest road-show campaigns on record, in connection with the Jackie Coogan production, "Oliver Twist," which will be released about October 1.

Mr. Lesser plans to have from thirty to forty roadshows leaving simultaneously from New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, and showing this attraction during the holidays in the large cities of this country and Canada. Each will be fully equipped and in charge of a competent showman, also a musical conductor with special music score, an operator, advance man and second man. Each company will also carry lobby displays, stage decorations to carry out the Dickens period and other necessary accessories.

This production will be shown in theatrical as well as motion picture houses. Mr. Lesser is experienced in road-showing, having so handled "Hearts of the World," "The Spoilers" and "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." He will make his headquarters in New York with his brother, Irving M. Lesser.

There is said to be a strong probability of a Broadway run on this Dickens' film. The production was directed by Frank Lloyd and is in eight reels. The cast includes in addition to Jackie Coogan, Lon Chaney, Gladys Brockwell, George Seigmann, Lionel Belmore and Carl Stockdale.

"Skin Deep" to Be Ince Picture

"Skin Deep," a melodrama produced from an original story by Marc Edmond Jones, will be Thomas H. Ince's next special production for distribution by Associated First National Picture Inc. This follows the Ince success "Hail the Woman."

Coming as it does on the heels of "Hail the Woman," and following such exceptional box office productions as "Lying Lips," "Mother o' Mine" and "The Cup of Life," "Skin Deep" is expected, First National says, to be one of the big attractions of the season. The Ince schedule for 1922 includes eight special productions.

The principal roles in "Skin Deep" are carried by Milton Sills and Florence Vidor, the latter of whom has won new laurels for herself as a result of the work she did as Judith Beresford in "Hail the Woman."

The production was directed by Lambert Hillyer under the supervision of Mr. Ince.

Montana Begins New Play

Bull Montana has recovered sufficiently from his trip to Europe to start work at the Metro studios in Hollywood on his second comedy, "A Punctured Prince," under the direction of Hughie Fay, who has been secured as director by Hunt Stromberg, producer of the Bull Montana Comedies. The first of the series of eight comedies, "The Ladies' Man," was completed before Bull left on his extended vacation.

Philadelphia Likes Ray's New Film

"Charles Ray's photoplay, 'A Tailor Made Man' is just as good as the charming comedy Grant Mitchell starred a few seasons ago," said the Public Ledger when this United Artists release was shown at the Aldine theatre, Philadelphia. "'A Tailor Made Man' is a noteworthy addition to the screen in every way," said the Inquirer. "In it Charles Ray does without doubt the best work of his career. He plays with wit, charm, enthusiasm, mirth, sympathy and understanding."

"Witness the rejuvenation of Charles Ray," said the Evening Public Ledger. "In his screen adaptation of 'A Tailor Made Man' there returns the Charles Ray of old, honest human and sometimes overpoweringly lifelike. The rush of action in Charles Ray's screen adaptation of 'A Tailor Made Man' makes it most interesting," said the critic for the North American.

Elinor Glyn Is Directing

Elinor Glyn, noted English novelist, has been acting as a Goldwyn director for a short time in Paris. The action of her story, "Six Days," accepted by Goldwyn for production this fall, takes place partly in Paris and Miss Glyn has been in that city taking "atmospheric scenes" for the picture. When "Six Days" goes actually into production, however, a Goldwyn director will be in charge.

The continuity for "Six Days" has been prepared by Violet Clark, who prepared "Madonnas and Men," "Wings of Pride," "Love Without Question," "No Experience Required" and other successes.

"Do and Dare" Mix

In "Do and Dare," an early fall release, starring Tom Mix, William Fox has selected a comedy-drama for this virile screen performer which, with its elements of humor, interest and entertainment values promises to outstrip all past productions in which he has been featured, Fox says. It was written by Marion Brooks and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

Mix does some daring riding, transfering himself at one time from the saddle of a horse to the fusilage of an air machine and at another place slides down the 45-degree angle of a mountain side aside his favorite and famous steed, "Tony." Claire Adams plays opposite the Fox star and does her work creditably.

New Casting Office

Mabel Bardine has opened a casting office in conjunction with Maxine Alton, the play broker. Miss Alton will continue to act as authors' representative and Miss Bardine will do general casting.

'Grandma's Boy' Smashes Record

"Grandma's Boy" has captured New York. What had been scheduled as a single week's run for the Harold Lloyd—Associated Exhibitors super attraction at the Mark Strand Theatre was less than half finished when Joseph Plunkett, managing director, announced the continuation of the run during a second week. Hence "Grandma's Boy," which opened on Broadway September 3, is still there.

"The house has been packed every afternoon and every night since the engagement began," declares Mr. Plunkett. "The attendance has smashed—not merely broken—the record for this time of the year. It may have done more than that. I shall have to wait for the complete figures before I can tell the extent of this Harold Lloyd triumph. It is astounding."

Metro Purchases Play

"The Famous Mrs. Fair," the successful drama which was one of the outstanding hits of the New York stage two seasons ago, has been purchased for production as a motion picture, to be directed by Fred Niblo and released by Metro Pictures Corporation. It will be the second of a series of four photoplays, presented by Louis B. Mayer, which Mr. Niblo will direct for distribution by Metro.

New Picture Goes to Playgoers

Officials of Attractions Distributing Corporation, have announced that that organization has placed its forthcoming feature, "The Man and the Moment," from the novel of that name by Elinor Glyn, with Playgoers Pictures for handling. B. P. Schulberg is president, and J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of Attractions.

Begins Producing

J. Ray Friedgen, who has been identified with many notable screen successes in the past ten years, has entered the ranks of producers on his own account as president of Effanem Photoplays, Inc., a New York corporation. His first production, "When the Cows Come Home," has just been completed.

Goes to Arkansas

Arthur Swanke, former Milwaukee advertising man, later advertising manager of the Palace, Hippodrome and Rialto theatres of Fort Worth, Texas, is now exploitation and advertising man of the Rialto and Mission theatres in El Dorado, Arkansas.

First National Picture Finished

What is expected to be perhaps the finest of the seasons "Big Time" productions, says First National, has just been completed at the United Studios. Late this week marked the actual filming of the final scene in Guy Bates Post's second screen vehicle for First National release, "Omar, the Tentmaker," an adaptation of Richard Walton Tully's stage play of the same name that served Post on the speaking stage for over four years. "Omar, the Tentmaker" will follow "The Masquerader," and like its predecessor, was directed by James Young. It is a colorful story of Persia in the days when Omar Khayyam wrote the Rubaiyat.

What is said to be one of the strongest supporting casts ever assembled, was with Mr. Post on this picture. Virginia Brown Faire, Nigel de Bruliere, Noah Beery, Rose Dione, Patsy Ruth Miller, Douglas Gerrard, Brois Karloff, Maurice (Lefty) B. Flynn, Edward M. Kimball, Walter Long, Evelyn Selbis, John Gribner, Will Jim Hatton, George Rigas and Gordon Mullen played the leading roles.

Says Character Fits to a "T"

"West of Chicago," the Charles Jones production for Fox is packed with tense dramatic situations, it is said. The attempt of a rascally foreman to have the owner of the ranch where he works put out of the way, that he may get possession of the property, starts a train of quick-moving incidents.

Jones, according to reports, has never had a character that better fitted his personality. All of his breezy dash and remarkable physical ability brought into play during the unfolding of the plot. The breadth of action suggested by the title is fully carried out in the scenes of this photoplay, Fox states. Conspicuous in the support of the virile star is charming Renee Adoree.

The story was written by George Scarborough, and the production was directed by Scott Dunlap and C. R. Wallace.

Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was In Flower," Cosmopolitan's picturization of Charles Major's historical romance of the reign of King Henry VIII, opened Thursday night at the Criterion Theatre before a packed audience of film firstnighters who, it is said, by every clever device of theatric art, were transported back to the Tudor period of the picture.

The spectacular pageantry of kings and courts depicted so realistically on the silver screen, says Cosmopolitan, were reflected in the harmonious decorations of the theatre, so that the spectator might easily imagine himself in Hampton Court Palace personally witnessing the royal revels, and political and love intrigues of Bluff King Hal's court.

Milton Crandall Joins Hodkinson

Simultaneously with the announcement of the acquisition of Harry McDonald and J. Frank Shea by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation comes the report that Milton Crandall, exploiteer, has been added to the department headed by McDonald to give special attention to productions which will go out as Hodkinson super-entertainment such as the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade now being offered exhibitors with Mrs. Castle's newest picture "Slim Shoulders." Other productions will have similiar original methods of presentation to assist exhibitors in obtaining big receipts.

Crandall with that originality which has characterized his work in the field has already put in some exceptionally good exploitation stunts in the St. Louis territory in connection with the engagement of "Slim Shoulders" and the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade for the re-opening of the Delmonte Theatre September.

Early Releases

Because, says F. B. O., of its excellent reception at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where it is this week completing its run, "The Hound of the Baskervilles," a screen version of the Sherlock Holmes novel of the same name, has been scheduled for early release by the Film Booking Offices of America, which is releasing this feature. This production will be offered to exhibitors early in October, and will follow "The Snowshoe Trail," starring Jane Novak, which is the current F. B. O. release.

"The Hound of the Baskervilles" will add to the variety of the F. B. O. feature program. The famous detective story will be the only mystery picture on the F. B. O. list and will reach the exhibitor at a time when there are practically no features of this type available, it is said.

Grauman Books Semon Comedies

Vitagraph's Los Angeles branch announces the booking of a series of Larry Semon comedies by Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre. Sid Grauman has signed for the series, which opens with "Golf." September 3-11 will be "Larry Semon Week" in Los Angeles. Forty-one Los Angeles theatres have booked Semon productions for that week.

"The Rubaiyat"

So many inquiries are reaching the offices of the Eastern Film Corporation relative to the releasing arrangements of "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam," directed by Ferdinand Earle, that the company wishes to take the opportunity of stating that a definite announcement on the subject will be make after Labor Day.

Film Completed

Al St. John's first two-reel special comedy for Fall release has been completed, according to announcement by the Fox Film Corporation. It is called "All Wet," and a great part of the action takes place under water.

"Prisoner of Zenda" Praised

Substantiating the excellent impression registered by the Rex Ingram production for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the Astor Theatre, New York, come expressions of congratulation to Mr. Ingram and Metro from various sections of the country where pre-release showings have been held.

Characteristic of these reports is one from P. F. Schwie of the Duluth Theatre Company who says: "We expected much and got even more from this picture which is worthy in every way of the creator and distributors of 'The Four Horsemen.'"

The Better Film Committee of Atlanta, headed by Mrs. B. M. Boykin who is also president of the Atlanta Woman's Club, praised the cast, scenery and costuming, and the fact that it is true to text, unusual in conception and remarkable in stage setting and endorsing it as an "A-1 production and recommend its showing in every community."

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Sixteen Year Old Boy Plans Campaign to Sell Way Down East to Full Houses

DOWN in Mendenhall, Miss., there is a sixteen-year-old boy who one of these days is going to be heard from. He is James F. Thames, Jr., and he recently sent to Charles E. Moyer, of United Artists, his campaign on "Way Down East" at the Y. M. C. A. Theatre, D'lo.

The Y books the better class of attractions, but it does not make much of an effort to sell what it shows. James heard that they had booked the Griffith production and he itched to put it over the right way. He is still in school, but it was vacation time, and a year ago he put over "The Mark of Zorro" and enjoyed the work, so he hunted up the Y secretary, F. C. Wilcoxon and offered to do the publicity work. Mr. Wilcoxon was glad to accept the proffered aid.

Busy At Once

Nothing was at hand in the way of advertising matter, but the young man knew all about the release, so he went to work and advertised the coming of the picture in the leading county paper. He backed this with home-made window and tack cards reading, "Let's All Go. 'Way Down East,' Y. M. C. A., August 14-15".

He followed this with a really big accomplishment. The local ball team came on the field one afternoon with every man wearing a banner on his back for the attraction. Of course it was done "for the Y", and was easier than if worked by an independent house, but it was a clever stunt and it had D'lo and Mendenhall talking for a week.

Painted His Own

Still the advertising was non est, so James got some card inks and made up a new set of window announcements, carrying portraits of the stars and the producer cut from fan magazines. He used the barber shop ceiling cards, and in both towns he had empty boxes on the street with signs on inside, bottom and outside signs asking the passer not to look within —which of course they did.

By this time the advertising had come along, and post cards and heralds were mailed into a number of the surrounding towns. Then he talked the stationer into a window hookup, using slates in anticipation of the opening of the school season. The text was "Slates carry a written message. 'Way Down East' carries a living message of good cheer to all those who see this wonderful entertainment."

Used Street Cars

He used a minimum of newspaper display because the "Y" had been doing no advertising at all and any display was large through lack of earlier competition. A two-eights was as good as a half page.

The opening day a bannered interurban car told the outlying towns that the picture was on display.

It was not a part of his job, but when he found that no effort had been made toward getting a musical accompaniment, he rustled a band of four pieces, and in default of the musical score told the impromptu leader about what he wanted, as he had seen the production at Jackson.

The first day it rained in torrents and the second day was not only election, but a big funeral threatened business, yet they packed the house both days and broke all records.

Good Work

This would be good work done by an agent of experience, but when it is considered that it was planned and carried out by a sixteen-year-old school boy, it shames some of the older exhibitors who complain that they cannot exploit. This youngster got it over in a town of less than one thousand population.

And we are proud to take some small part of the credit, for he writes Moyer:

If any of this is good enough to find its way into the trade papers, please send an account to Mr. Sargent's Department in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. I am a consistent reader of his columns and from them and his book, Picture Theatre Advertising, is really where I got started.

Interior Exploitation

H. B. Garner, of the Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Fla., took his snow lobby inside the house for "I Am the Law." On the last night show before the feature opened, the house lights went on green, a load of ice was dumped into the fan duct and about a bushel of finely cut snow was thrown into the blowers.

It came as a surprise and the audience went out talking of the novel stunt, with the result that the receipts for the Curwood feature climbed surprisingly. The surprise element was the big angle of the idea, but there was also the suggestion that he must be going to all this trouble for a worthwhile picture.

Hooked Up Pickles to Mr. Snell's Show

You can't always tell when your advertising bread upon the waters will be washed back buttered up and with brown sugar on it.

A. L. Snell, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., was among those sold by Lem Stewart on the idea of Paramount hustling at the recent convention of Southern Enterprises managers. He uses the back of his personal automobile as a special stand for Paramount arguments.

Recently he had a sign reading that "Paramount means the best Pictures," with the added information that the Imperial had them. A few days later a local grocer came out with an entire window of Paramount Pickles and a sign which read: "If Paramount pictures which are shown at the Imperial theatre, are the best pictures, then Paramount Pickles are the best pickles."

The grocer was clever enough to see that Mr. Snell was working for him if he worked for the manager, and the hook-up came as a surprise to Mr. Snell.

Red Ink

Max Rosenfield, the Golem prevaricator, takes an entire sheet of nice white paper to announce that Leslie Whelan, Paramounteer, red inked the front page of a paper in Petersburg, Va., to announce the coming of Gloria Swanson. Max opines that this is the biggest jog the city has sustained since the newspapers printed the story of Lee's surrender. That's an awful slam at Petersburg. Anyhow, it goes to show that the red ink extra has not been forgotten. Gloria was playing in "Beyond the Rocks" at the Palace Theatre.

HOW O. T. TAYLOR PUT OVER "LEADING CITIZEN"

Note how the side stands and the centre panel are matched as to shape to get uniformity of display in the lobby of the Weir Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash. The central panel is illuminated, the current being led into the device from the ceiling.

Igloo on Wheels a Topeka Exploit

E. D. Keilman, of the Grand Theatre, Topeka, writes that he made enough money out of "Nanook of the North" to pay off the losses on several weeks of poor business in the summer. He put out a float with a boy dressed in furs, posing beside a realistic igloo, and he got illustrations both for that and his prologue, which apparently used the same igloo, making a double use of an effective property.

The Topeka theatres were down to the last gasp in a hot summer and Mr. Keilman figured that if he could get them coming it would be with a cool play, so he picked out Nanook, and his faith was more than justified.

He offers the opinion that he was the first to play Nanook as a feature instead of as a filler. In this he is wrong. Most houses playing this production have capitalized the ice and snow, playing it above the longer subject, and one or two houses have even used the float idea for street exploitation. Mr. Keilman makes no new record, but he assuredly held his own.

A Pathe Release

MAKING A PROLOGUE AND A FLOAT OF THE SAME IDEA

E. D. Keilmann, of the Grand Theatre, Topeka, made an igloo for "Nanook of the North" and used it on a float for a ballyhoo and then took it inside and made it the basis of his prologue, getting double use of the material and more than twice the effect.

Huh!

Bill Johnson, Lem Stewart's deputy in the Texas section of Southern Enterprises, with a desk in Dallas, starts off a story with "Men in shirt sleeves stood in front of the Hippodrome theatre, Ft. Worth, during the run of the picture, Over the Border, and actually shivered because of the psychological effect Manager Gould's snow storm had upon them."

We'll admit that Bill possesses imagination without arguing the matter. He has.

Took Lobby Showing to Sister Theatre

Because the Savoy Theatre was temporarily closed for renovation, Roy L. Smart, of Anniston, Ala., decided that it might as well work for the sister house, and he made a fine display for Constance Talmadge in "Polly of the Follies," which was to be played at the Noble Theatre.

He made a false proscenium with lattice work and then filled in the opening with cut-outs of dancing girls against some wood flippers, lettering the title on a banner which was placed in front of the display to serve as a mask for the temporary footlights.

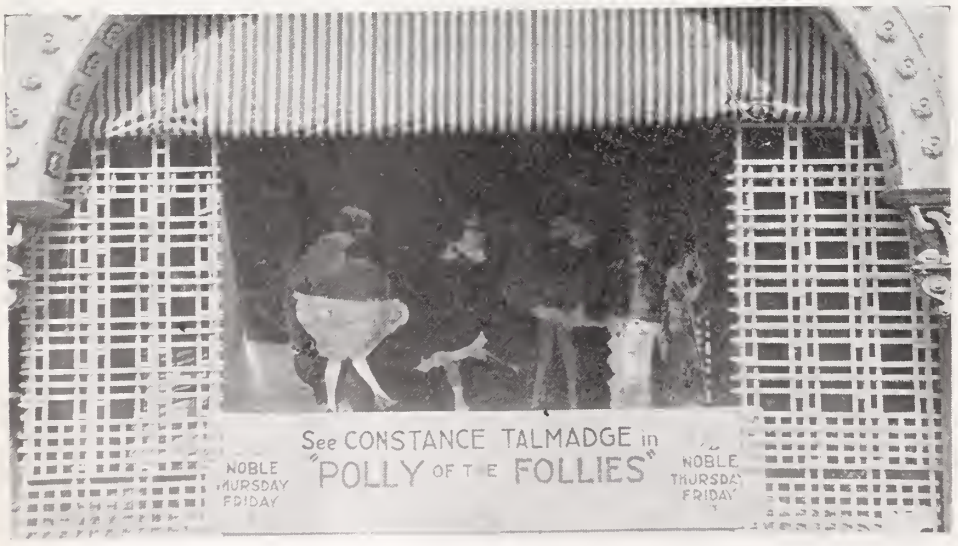
It cost him $8.75 to get up this eye-catcher and it put up business to a little more than a third above the average.

The same idea can be modified for lobby work in the house in which a picture is shown by cutting entrances in the lattice work where the opening is sufficiently large. The floor banner will in itself be enough of a novelty to get attention.

Free Perambulators

Serialization of "The Masqueraders" in one of the Dallas newspapers gave the Hope Theatre the advantage of thirty-five distribution autos for perambulators.

The campaign was started without mention of the presentation of the play at the Hope, and the story was started before the theatre advertising was placed over the signs announcing the start of the serial.



A First National Release

USING THE LOBBY OF ONE HOUSE TO ADVERTISE ANOTHER

Roy Smart, of Anniston, Ala., took advantage of the temporary closing of the Savoy Theatre to put over Constance Talmadge in "Polly of the Follies" at the Noble Theatre. This can be worked in a live lobby mornings, and will help to make sales for this popular production.

Vari Colored Lights Helped a Vitagraph

J. H. Edgar Hart coppered the solid color lobby by going to the other extreme for The Sheik's Wife at the Palace theatre, El Paso, Texas. He dipped his lights blue, mauve, yellow, pink, green and orange and put them all through the lobby and under the marquise. It was so different that it would have made a display by itself, but he added some oriental arches at the street line, with the title lettered in gold.

In his general advertising he was careful to sell the European origin of the picture and to get interest through a comparison with The Sheik and other American-produced plays with desert settings. He did not argue that he could not sell it because it had no American stars. He told himself he could sell it for that very reason, and a twenty per cent. increase on a fifteen dollar investment speaks for itself.

Goes to the Dogs for Exploitation

Putting over "Sonny" at the Orpheum Theatre, Boston, Hal Olver, First National exploiteer, bought a collie pup for $18 of the firm's money, used it for a nine day window stunt, and tied the pup to a circulation stunt engineered in the Advertiser, whereby the dog was given to some reader. That meant a nine day showing and 150 inches of reading matter at a cost of eighteen dollars, which is reasonably cheap.

3,000 Window Cards

In addition Olver put out 3,000 cards reading: "Mother and 'Sonny' Week," with the additional information that "Sonny buys his shoes here" or whatever would fit the store. Corset shops and beauty parlors merely stated that "Sonny" was at the Orpheum on the specified dates. With smaller advertisements than usual, the picture was put over at an exploitation cost of $59.50 to the third best business the house has done since Loew took it over.

It should be added that the pup was supposed to be the son of the dog used in "Sonny."

MAKING A 24-SHEET BRING IN AN INCREASED BUSINESS

Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., worked this stunt twice with good results. This is a cutout from the 24-sheet on "The Woman Who Walked Alone," and it brought an additional ten per cent. Note the reflector on the marquise.

Boosted a Tenth on a Six-Sheet Cutout

Sometimes a small stunt will put a picture over. For "Reported Missing," Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., used part of a 24-sheet cutout in front of the house. Just above this he placed Owen Moore's portrait in a real life preserver and surrounded this with a pasteboard circle lettered with the title and star. A reflector on one of the marquise lights was centred on this upper display.

It was not much of a stunt, but he put business over for a ten percent. boost and a ten per cent. boost these days is as welcome as a mint julep.

It All Depends

Exploitation does not always mean spending a lot of money. Often a couple of dollars will get more coin than a fifty dollar investment if it is handled right. Tunstill liked the poster, so he played it up and found that his patrons shared his impression.

It worked so well that Tunstill took a repeat on "The Woman Who Walked Alone," making his cut from the 24-sheet, and getting the same result. He cannot keep it up without changing pace, but it will work for a time.

Lobby Lizards See Thrills on Screen

Something in lobby work was installed in the Madison Theatre, Peoria, lately in the shape of a thrill recorder, first worked on "One Clear Call."

The description sent in lacks all of the essential details, but it seems to be a column of mercury operated in a tube by means of compressed air. It is supposed to register the thrill on the screen for the benefit of the picture shoppers: the higher the column, the greater the thrill.

According to the ingenious press agent, the operator works the air pressure from the booth to accord with the picture being screened. You do not have to be as particular as all this, but you can make it something to be talked about for a time long enough to bring back the cost of the device.

A dial indicator, worked by a cord and counterweight would probably be just as good and a great deal cheaper. The mercury column was probably put in to make it look a little more scientific.

Threw Money Away

The Arrow Film Corporation has been having a lot of fun lately advertising "The Innocent Cheat."

Small baggage tags were printed up with the statement that "You throw money away" unless you book the Arrow production at once. Pennies were attached to the cord with a dab of sealing wax and these novelties were thrown out, one at a time, from the window of the office into the group of exhibitors gathered below. Several exhibitors were hurt in the scrambles for the cards.

This idea, which was devised by C. R. Seelye, general manager of the New York Arrow Exchange, will give a change from the balloon-passes idea. Throw a couple of dollars off the roof of some tall building at an announced time and you will have the entire population waiting below. Throw in a few dimes and quarters.

Boys and Noise

Boys and noise were the keynotes of Earl Settle's campaign when "Penrod" came to the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla. Settle loaded the kids on an automobile and they supplied the noise. To help along, he gave them all a plentiful supply of iodine freckles and a pass before he put them on the truck. The freckles helped the ballyhoo and the passes gave the kids increased yelling powers.

Settle used a different rig for his lobby banners. He employed two placed V-shape, with the point of the V at the rear. As the banners were inside the lobby line this gave more publicity to the strips than one banner straight across, since the passers-by got it at a glance instead of having to follow the banner along. We do not recall having seen it done just this way before, and pass the idea along because it is good.

Whether your theatre permits an attractive lobby display or not on The Loves of Pharaoh, do not neglect the advertising possibilities of mild incense burning within the theatre, foyer or lobby.

"Smell" is a sense that does not rank as high intellectually as the senses of the ear and the eye.

But the sense of smell is more emotional and stirs the imagination more deeply than either seeing or hearing.

Whet the appetite, stir the imaginations of your prospects for the magnificent Egyptian LOVES OF PHARAOH, and you'll enjoy additional success as well as increased word of mouth advertising.

Lem L. Stewart, in a special bulletin to Southern Enterprises managers.

SLANTING THE BANNERS ON AN INSIDE LOBBY HELPS

They are easier to read from the street, and are better than the straight sign. This placement is the idea of Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla., and shows the dress for Barry in "Penrod." It got extra business.

Beall Makes Cleanup on Griffith Release

Ray Beall, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., made a campaign on "Orphans of the Storm," which put this picture over to a big extra business on a five-day run which omitted both Saturday and Sunday, the picture opening on Monday and closing on Friday. He did better than one-third above the average "book" for those five days, and did it at a cost of only $60, making his own lobby display and driving hard an exploitation, which did not cost much.

The lobby is shown in the accompanying cut. The central structure is supposed to be the Bastile and was done in grey, with white mortar. The cutouts in the windows on either side are from the one and three sheets. The side pieces show the square before the prison, with a mob painted on, and the houses were done in brown. The guillontine is built up of wood, with a cutout from the six sheet and retouched. In this, Mother Frochard is supposed to be the executioner. The knife is silvered with red splashes to suggest blood on the cutting edge. The clouds are dark grey sateen, to suggest an overcast, gloomy sky, while the figure of Danton, which was not available on the paper, was cut out and painted by Mr. Beall.

He started with the "three kisses" teaser from the press sheet, using it in three parts, single column and scattering, then hooking-up with the full display across two columns. This was done a week in advance of the date and at the same time ones and window cards were posted and placed.

Three thousand throwaways were placed in automobiles and handed out by the ushers on the street, and three thousand heralds were used for the departing audiences.

A special showing was given the day before the opening, which brought nearly a column in each paper on the opening day, and representative citizens were also invited to the private screening.

Street cars were bannered and an empty car was specially decorated and used to pull in from the outlying towns, while a banner was stretched across the main street and an A board perambulator was kept out.

A United Artists Release.

THE GUILLOTINE WILL GET YOU IF YOU DON'T WATCH OUT

Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C. This is mostly hand painting done by the manager himself, and it was only one of a number of stunts worked on this picture.

The car stunt was contributed by one of the street railway men who held a season pass.

With a Monday to Friday showing the engagement showed a better financial return than most towns gave on a better booking, because Mr. Beall kept pushing it along for thirteen days, never stopping until the cans were ready to be returned to the express office.

Played His Luck

Down South the window displays for the United Cigar stores are shilled from point to point over a circuit. In Columbia, S. C., one display had been shipped out and the next had not arrived, so Warren Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, persuaded the manager to let him have the space and bridge the gap. It took a little argument, but he got it.

Sixteen stills and a window card brought better results than any other display Mr. Irvin has ever had, for the United picks its locations very carefully and this was the star corner in town.

The attraction was "Borderland," which was having its first showing in the Southern Enterprises territory, and freak exploitation could not be used on a story of this description, so the window came in especially handy.

Extra newspaper space was used to gain additional readers on the unusual type of story and business climbed up in spite of the opposition of a super feature which had been vigorously campaigned.

Including the newspaper spaces the extra cost was only $12 for a strong increase in attendance.

A First National Release.

LINKED "SMILIN' THROUGH" TO THE TELEPHONE COMPANY

Binghamton, N. Y., got some telephone instruction along with Norma Talmadge exploitation and each display helped sell the other in the window of a well situated candy store. This is a good idea for other "voice" titles to employ.

Got 'Smilin' Through' Linked to Display

The Strand Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., worked a capital hook-up idea on Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through." The straight telephone hook-up has been recorded before. It has worked in all sections of the country.

Binghamton went a bit further and persuaded the telephone people to make a display with them in a candy store window.

In back were the 11 by 22s and other advertising matter for Miss Talmadge and a back card reading: "Let your voice have a smile. It wins friends and makes others happy, so let your messages come 'Smilin' Through.'" Maybe that will work in Binghamton, but we can mention at least one suburban exchange where the bull-headed central is lucky to get off with her life instead of collecting smiles—but it reads all right.

Anyhow, in front was a display of the 167 parts which go to make up the telephone set, with bits of cable and other matters of interest, which served to draw a crowd, and when a man or woman comes to a dead stop in front of a window, it is easier to get them inside than where you have to halt them first, so the confectioner also took a profit.

Animated Blacksmith for Keaton Comedy

G. R. Stewart, of the Isis and America Theatres, Casper, Wyo., put Buster Keaton in "The Blacksmith" ahead of the five-reel feature, knowing that it would bring him the greater business, and to get it over he animated a cutout.

He took the head from a Keaton poster and supplied it with a body, which was set in back of a real anvil. The left arm held a tongs, which rested on the anvil, and the right apparently grasped the heavy sledge.

In reality the sledge was mounted on an extended handle and with the cutout as a fulcrum a small boy had no difficulty in pounding the surface of the anvil with the heavy head. A wheel and a couple of horseshoes completed the stage setting.

A First National Release

The Keaton Cutout

This gave both sound and motion for a lobby attractor and attracted more attention than could the largest stand of paper devised. It literally pounded the coin into the box office and Mr. Stewart can stand a lot of that sort of hammering.

Progressive

Just to get them in early, the Majestic Theare, Kalamazoo, announced that at the first production of "Penrod" the admission price would be progressive. The first twenty-five boys in line got in free, the next quarter century paid a nickel, the next ten cents, the next fifteen and after that the regular twenty cent price went into effect. You can imagine the mob of kids the announcement drew.

Roy Tillson doubled for "Penrod" and "My Boy," which divided the week and used this to put over the split week with the juvenile rivals. Each boy in attendance on the first show was given a whistle with the injunction that it would be taken away from him if he did not blow it on the street after the show. That was an excess of caution.

Practical Presswork

H. A. Gillespie, of the Liberty Theatre, Yakima, Wash., is made the subject of a cartoon write-up in a recent issue of the Herald. Like the good press agent he is, he diverts what was intended as a general write-up to the ice cooled air in the Liberty, and puts over that hot weather argument.

But the interesting point is the editorial explanation as to why Mr. Gillespie gets so much press stuff into the Herald. After explaining that he was early made a helper to his father, who has a sheet in a smaller town, the Herald editor goes on to reminisce of a time when the modern press on which the Herald is now published went wrong and for a few issues the old-fashioned hand press had to be worked to get an edition out.

Mr. Gillespie came over to help out and got a larger run than the rated capacity of the press when it was new. Since then he has been the white-haired boy around the Herald office, though the editor adds: "There are other reasons."

Brightly Colored

G. M. Phillips, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, took the hotel scene in "Reckless Youth" as his lobby suggestion and made a very effective show.

From the centre of the ceiling he hung a large Japanese lantern, from which eight wires were stretched to the walls. On each wire were hung two smaller lanterns. The wires, themselves, were covered with twisted crepe paper, giving a canopy effect. Serpentines were also thrown over the wires and the objects about the lobby were sprinkled with confetti.

The result was gay and both eye and house-filling.

A Little Different

Working it on a slightly new angle, the exploitation man for First National around New York, arranged with a White Plains newspaper to help him pick ten women of local fame to be Constance Talmadge's guests at the first showing of "Polly of the Follies" at the Lynn Theatre.

According to the story, Miss Talmadge, herself, was to have come up, but sent her regrets, and the pressman substituted for her. The ten women were supposed to report their impressions to Miss Talmadge, via the paper, and this made the old stunt worth half a page.

Irish Prima Donna for Desert Feature

Niagara Falls, Ont., had a fashionable time lately when Fox's "Arabian Love" played the Webb Theatre. The Clifton hotel had as a guest, Miss Patricia O'Connor, the Irish prima donna, and they changed her nationality and made her the feature of an "Arabian Night" at the hotel and she also took part at a prologue in the theatre.

The stunt was advertised in the local and Buffalo papers, and the event attained an importance all out of proportion to the place of presentation, for the hotel put the stunt over in a large way as an advertisement, and the Webb trailed on the publicity.

Most live hotel managers will welcome a chance to jazz things up if they are properly approached, but they want something that will make good with their guests. They found this in the Arabian atmosphere of the title and play and they were able to turn their ballroom into a fairyland.

Even in the small towns you can get a proportionate return, and add the hotel manager to the circulation manager of the newspapers as an advertising aid. Try it once, with "Arabian Love" or a similar desert play, then take an encore with some South Seas title and again whenever you can work a colorful entertainment.

Booked

It is years older than the picture business itself, but Mrs. Lillian Collins, of the Burke and Virginian Theatres, got out "What I Know About Women" for "The Sheik" and offered Valentino as the author. Of course, the inside pages were blank.

A new twist was mailing these out in an envelope marked: "Confidential—for married women only" and sending it to the flappers. This might have hurt the scheme in some places, but she knew her town, and she pulled in all but the bedridden.

USES A BIG PERAMBULATOR FOR A POPULAR SERIAL

THIS GILDED CAGE WAS CONSTRUCTED OF LATHS

Bill Robson, Paramounteer, built it for the show window of a fashionable Pittsburgh store when Miss Swanson was shown at the Olympic and it was regarded as sufficient of a novelty to be a grace instead of a disgrace to the store.

A Neat Decoration Won a Hard Window

Bill Robson, the Paramounteer, knows that sometimes it is easier to get a difficult window with a good stunt than less valuable spaces with straight accessories, and when Gloria Swanson came to the Olympic theatre, Pittsburgh, in "Her Gilded Cage," he went after the best location in town.

The foundation was a bundle of lath and a bottom board, out of which he fabricated a cage, which was painted with gold paint. This was hung well to the rear of the window, against a black drape, with lighter drapery on the sides. Hidden spot lights were thrown upon the object.

The store had its dress department make a costume for the finest doll in stock and roughly approximated the costume for a lay figure in full size. This latter was placed to the left of the display, balanced by an ermine stole, thrown carelessly over a chair at the right. Both were also lighted by spots.

The frame down front gives the title, star and theatre in a neat lettering appropriate to the general air of the display, and it attracted more attention than a window filled with stills could have gained. Too many exploiters, when they go after a window, want it all. Bill knows that enough is plenty and gets in where others cannot enter.

Two Clowns Helped on Love's Boomerang

H. B. Clarke, of the Majestic theatre, Memphis, decided to play up the circus angle of "Love's Boomerang," and he hired two clowns to stick around the lobby and keep things jazzed up. They succeeded so well that the police had to be called on several occasions to keep the sidewalk cleared. The clowns cost $21 and business was bettered something like $150.

In addition to the clowns, the display included a circus layout on a platform. This was borrowed from a toy store for a credit card and was composed of the jointed animals which can be posed in all sorts of impossible postures. A ring was laid out with some of the animals performing their stunts while the remainder were waiting their turns. It gave emphasis to the sawdust angle of the story and helped to put over the placard which spoke of circus atmosphere.

Mr. Clarke says those sticks attached to the banners are boomerangs. We would like to bet him a box of cigars against a second-hand cigarette but that they will not boomerang, but they made the lobby looking interesting. A real boomerang looks more like a better L with a large curve instead of an angle, in case you wish to adapt the idea. Better cut them out of tin or compo board as they are mean things to cut from wood. They are widest at the curve and taper rather sharply toward the points. They will look more interesting than the flat sticks.

A Mixed Ballyhoo

A girl, a Chinaman, a monkey and a goat were the mixed factors in a ballyhoo parade staged for the Rialto Theatre, Omaha. All four were to be found in "Hurricane's Gal," but the strange combination hit Omaha just right, rolled up the receipts and unrolled the tickets.

Faked the Chink

The Chinaman had to be faked with a white man and the girl was a boy, but the goat and monkey were the real goods, though the goat gave Manager Johnson no little trouble, since the animal first engaged was poisoned the day before the stunt was scheduled and he had to start a hurried search for an understudy.

The quartet was worked for a teaser the first day and with signs for the succeeding days, parading the streets in an automobile.

Finds the Hook Up to "One Clear Call"

Some managers have complained that they could get no hook-up to "One Clear Call," overlooking the fact that the Klan rider was as good as a hook-up, but the Rialto Theatre, Tulsa, Okla., has located the right angle.

It landed the merchants on a hook-up on telephone numbers, "One Clear Call" on any number getting whatever the advertiser had to offer. Of course, they landed the telephone company, as well, for the display helped to make telephone business.

Going Some

When the international balloon contests were being held in the Middle West, George Schade, of Sandusky, kicked in with a contest of his own, sending out a flock of air bubbles, to some of which passes were tied.

One of the balloons with passes for "The Invisible Fear," came into the hands of Mrs. Grace Kearns, of Youngstown, 125 miles distant.

After Schade worked the newspapers for stories on the travels of the balloon, he sent Mrs. Kearns a dollar instead of the two seats, with the injunction to spend it only on First National pictures in her home town. The press stories were well worth the dollar.

THERE WAS SOMETHING FUNNY ABOUT THIS EXPLOITATION

There were two things: First, the clowns were funny, and those boomerangs are funnier still, but they helped pay the rent when H. B. Clarke played up the circus angle to put over "Love's Boomerang" in Memphis.

Roped in Title Is Good Selling Idea

A year or so ago the banner with Tom Mix's name spelled with lariat was a common stunt, but it was dropped and forgotten until it was revived the other day by Charles H. Amos, of the Strand theatre, Spartanburg. He used a couple of heads for decoration and then spelled out the star's name in quarter-inch rope.

It was a novelty again and did more to sell "For Big Stakes" than any amount of argument. It was backed up with a cutout from the six-sheet and with a pair of ones and some stills, but the rope lettering did the major part of the selling and provided a sightly banner at a very small cost.

In laying it out, use a board foundation and tack through the rope or use staples. Merely write out the legend and then follow the light outline with the rope. It is very little trouble and makes a big flash.

ROPING THEM IN WITH MANILA SCRIPT TITLES

This is not new, but the idea has died down and is so old as to be new again. It was revived by Charles H. Amos, of the Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., and it attracted a great deal more attention than could be gained with the best painting.

Built Up Posters Help Lobby Work

John W. Creamer, of the Strand theatre, Chillicothe, Mo., has been experimenting with built-up posters and sends in a pretty display for the U. P. Trail, which still seems to be going the rounds. It does not seem to be really safe to place a snow lobby design so close to the radiator top, but perhaps Mr. Creamer pins his faith to the coal strike.

A Hodkinson Release

A Plain Lobby Frame

The basis of the display is a cutout from the one sheet mounted on eight-ply cardboard, which, Mr. Creamer explains, allows the figure to curl slightly, which helps the effect. There is a ground piece in front of the figures and the backing is simply a large sheet of news print paper, sketched in, with a "forest" of willow twigs.

The effect is very good and the use of news print paper cuts the cost very decidedly. Most web pressmen do not run the paper entirely off the roll, and the portion remaining can be had very cheaply if it is not given away. Where a display is to be used for only a day or two; it is plenty strong enough, and much cheaper than cloth.

Connie's Own Stage Earned Big Advance

Making a stage for "Polly of the Follies" put the business at the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., some two hundred dollars above the summer average.

Manager of theatres Frank J. Miller and resident manager I. L. Shields, planned a twelve-foot stage for seven cutouts from the paper on the Constance Talmadge play, with a futuristic backing and a footlights trough which illuminated the cutouts.

The figures were all taken from a single 24-sheet and gave a better idea of the variety of this story than could be told in words. A two hundred dollar jump down south in August means more than it would in cooler sections and it is to be taken that the idea is good as well as the star. Moreover it leaves a piece of display apparatus that will be useful in other stunts, so the original cost can be written off—and the original cost was reported to be well below ten dollars.

Street Cleaners Pushed a Feature

Even the street cleaners helped push "In the Name of the Law" to a cleanup when it played the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit. Covered square cans are used in Detroit instead of the more common round cans and since it was "for the police," it was a simple matter to put every member of the street department solidly behind the title.

Ideal Exploitation Sold Paramountown

About the best exploitation idea for the Paramountown short length comes from Warren Irvin, of the Imperial theatre, Columbia, S. C. The cut shows only part of the scheme as the star idea was extended to the underside of the marquise over the sidewalk.

A Clever Exploitation

Tinsel stars were made from compoboard and on each was pasted a head of one of the Paramount stars shown in the picture. The largest star was placed over the box office and carried the head of May McAvoy, who was seen in "The Top of New York" as the second feature of the bill.

The idea made a splendid flash and brought increased business in the face of unusual opposition. It can be adapted to any form of lobby and extended to window displays.

They Paid Interest

Bill Robson, Pittsburgh Paramounteer, who has not been figuring in the news of late, came forward with fake bonds for "The Bonded Woman." It was a six page railroad folder, with press book stuff inside, and done into the semblance of a bond on the front cover.

Selling Miss Compson Along Proper Lines

This is more nearly our idea of a good display for Betty Compson in "The Bonded Woman." It suggests at a glance the triangle of the girl, the man of the cities and the man of the isles. It is a revealing sort of cut and silently eloquent. It was planned for Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington. It uses the bromidic line about being her greatest triumph since "The Miracle Man," but it tells better than many other displays the theme of the story in a few well-written lines which merely supplement the cut. Novel points are the light rule work panel back of the head which breaks the bareness of the space without hurting the white space value, and the placement of the figures of the two men. You will note that each has his arms uplifted along the line which forms the sketchy actual triangle, so that the vision is carried from one essential point to the other. It may not mean a very great deal, but it helps more than is apparent at a glance on the general theory that it is better to do a thing properly than wrongly.

ANOTHER TREATMENT

The second example shows how the Century Theatre, Baltimore, used the same idea but shoved the cut over to one side with no material loss in effect. Very evidently this is taken from the plan book, but the copy used in Washington is better than that for the Baltimore space. The use of the New York press notices is relied upon to put this over, and the patron does not always respond. Down South Miss Compson seems to be putting herself over better than the reviewers can place her and she is rapidly coming to the front as a drawing card of magnitude. In such a case, the New York reviews are largely wasted and talk of the play itself would probably sell the play better than the criticisms.

Ruff Stuff Is Made From Plan Book Ad

Ralph Ruffner sends in a pretty half page made on the lines of a Universal Weekly display, plus a half tone. He had the layout adapted and then added the cut to give balance and attraction. And he worked it on a Paramount picture. At least Ruff credits the idea to the Universal, though the inset is common enough to be classed as public property. At any rate that is where Ruffner got the idea, and he gives credit. He sells very nicely a Pickford reissue. He offers it as "The year's biggest novelty, Mary Pickford, as she appeared twelve years ago in 'Going Straight' (when she was King Baggot's Leading Lady). The picture has been re-edited and interspersed with humorous and burlesque sub-titles calculated to send any audience into roars of laughter, despite the apparent seriousness of the story on the screen." That's our idea of selling a kidded reissue. It tells the patron just what to expect and he is not disappointed. It puts the idea over with precisely the right angle to make the greatest capital out of the idea. Another of Ruff's appeals is a four column drop of nearly fifteen inches for "The Top of New York." For this he could get no assistance from the exchange, so he used a sketch of the skyline of lower New York for a bottom piece, the signature at the top and a series of eight reverse circles for his eight program items, for they want a long show in Vancouver and they come to spend the evening. There is nothing but the title to offer, but it is presented so promisingly that Ruff writes they played to standing room all the week. One display for Meighan in "If You Believe It, It's So" carries the characteristic line: "The week's a total loss if you fail to visit the Capitol during this engagement." The town does not respond as readily to jazz writing as do most American cities, and Ruff wisely cuts out his bubbling lines and offers a more serious argument, though it is impossible for him to write the commonplace. His style of expression is too individual to be entirely repressed, but he manages to suit his enthusiasm to the temper of his clientele; a trait of immeasurable value.

Praised by Paper

The local paper went out of its way to give Raymond B. Jones a puff for his poster portrait of Ethel Clayton in oils and gold flake when she was shown at the Orpheum Theatre, Topeka, Kans. Mr. Jones sends in a photograph of the poster, but the color values are all askew and it will not reproduce even as well as in the photograph—which is not saying much, for there is an utter lack of contrast in the flat print. This leads to the belief that the background is powdered with gold leaf which looks like a million dollars in the lobby, but less than thirty cents in the photograph. But the story offers a suggestion. If you can really paint—and Mr. Jones is clearly a good draftsman, try a gold background or gold and a rich green or heavy crimson. It will lighten up the picture like a spotlight and you will thank Mr. Jones for the suggestion. Another novel point seems to be cutting the letters to form the star's name out of cardboard and affixing them to the canvas, slightly raised. If you can handle the idea perhaps you can get as good a notice as Mr. Jones did. What pleases him

Los Angeles Artist Does the Impossible

Just when we had come to the conclusion that there was something in the climate of Los Angeles which ruined artists, comes the California theatre with a display for "The Tailor Made Man" which might have been drawn in Baltimore. This is 135 lines across four, and the artist has kept entirely away from all filigree work and flossy sketches, achieving a solid effect which helps to create the impression of a real success. Then the agent has planned his lines so as to use the space and still get the effect of white, since there is only small sizes of type and not a line of display to detract from the announcement. The cut is a bit washy. It barely shows up, but the plug hat is what gets over to match the title and you can see that it is Ray if you look at it closely. A little art work on the cut would have aided considerably, but apart from that this display lives up to the rules of good workmanship as not one Los Angeles advertisement in a thousand does. It goes to show that it can be done if the artist will only work in with an intelligent agent. For the opening week Earle Hall Payne got three pages of hook-up. This is the hold over announcement, and is as welcome as the breath of Spring after a hard winter. This sort of thing is encouraging. None of our money is being wasted in the Los Angeles papers, but it is depressing to see an entire town go wrong week after week as Los Angeles habitually does. There may even be hope for Grauman's now, but we shall have to be shown.

Proposals on Cards Startled His Town

G. R. Stewart, of the American Theatre, Casper, Wyo., believes in shaking up his townsfolk now and then. He did it to the limit lately on a stunt for Max Linder in "Be My Wife." He had cards printed with the title on one side in a bold type ad, on the other "I was only joking. Come and laugh. Max Linder (cut) in 'Be My Wife,' America Theatre, Sunday and Monday." The cut was the one in which Max is shown with his hair standing on end. These were distributed at the theatre as the house was emptying and on the streets in the intervals, the distributor being in evening clothes. He was careful to offer them only to women and with the one line side uppermost. Later on the local cutups got them and helped out by passing them on to others. Mr. Stewart also sends in a display advertisement in which he has adapted the classified advertising free ticket stunt to his own displays, arguing that what is good for the newspaper is just as good for his

This is a new angle on a familiar stunt, and a good one.

Circled Features Get Individuality

There is little to this hundred lines by three from the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, to draw the admiration of the artist. There is nothing artistic about it, but it puts over a week's attractions in three hundred lines and puts each over with the same emphasis. In a straight paneling, those at the top and bottom are apt to get more attention than the centre ones, and those at the top will get more attention than the bottom. Here you get the same impression on all seven attractions because the circles give each a white space display not possible with the same size type and evenly proportioned oblong panels. There is nothing artistic about the space, but it is a pretty display of advertising ability. Between the two we infinitely prefer advertising to art, and from the advertising angle this display is a capital model to follow. The display is for the revival of seven Paramounts which is the direct result of our prosperity campaign of some weeks ago. These time-tried hits are still being booked around and are cleaning-up in most localities where they are used, for all seven are the type of play you wish to see again. This explains the "First Annual Revival Week" of the central circle, which is put in reverse to gain contrast. The theory of working reverse here is sound, but in practise it works only where you get a black sufficiently good to make it stand out. The main idea is to give extra prominence to the key announcement and at the same time to hold it away from the white circles. In theory this is good, but the ink was poor. Next time we think better results would accrue from the use of a heavier line around the circle. The Pantheon is a week stand, and handling seven attractions in as many days is evidently a new stunt for the agent, but he met the situation with one of the best solutions.

Another Open Letter

H. W. Twyman, of the Lafayette Theatre, Charlottesville, Va., wanted to put over "Beyond the Rocks," so he took his usual space for an open letter telling his public all about the story and the author and the stars, and the fact that it was about to be published in book form and calling attention to the fact that he was playing it day and date with all of the large cities, which latter proves Mr. Twyman to be possessed of large imagination, for August 14-15 was most assuredly not the first run date in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. We think this rather weakens his argument, since there must be some fans in town who know that this is not true. The open letter would have been better without this feature.

Used Kiddie Clothes for Ballyhoo Window

W. C. Benson, of the Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., stripped the window of a kiddie clothes shop for "Is Matrimony a Failure?" The cost was practically nothing, but it put the idea over better than his newspaper work because it made a real tie-up. He sends in a photograph, but the whites are too yellow to make a cut from and you don't really need a map. It is just a strip carrying the title, with a few stills on cards lettered for the theatre.

Mr. Benson also sends in some of his house programs, which is one of his specialties. He shows that it is still possible to get pretty ten and twelve point faces out of a job office if you kick long and hard enough. This is the third town from which he has sent in programs, and he always gets them right, though he has to fight the printers to achieve any result.

A TALE OF TWO WORLDS. Just the sort of picture for a mixed crowd, went over great with me and you can safely promise them something good. Advertising; newspaper, lobby and billboards. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRING. This was a substitute and if I thought I was going to get any more like this I would leave town before my patrons run me out. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor and glad of it. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Okla.

COME ON OVER. Pleased hundred percent, the best comedy I ever ran, plenty of pep in this picture. Advertising; lobby, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. O. W. Harris, Sapulpa, Okla.

EARTHBOUND. This picture was received by our audience as a very great picture since it teaches a very powerful lesson. Don't fail to book it. Advertising; one and three sheets and slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pa.

FOR THOSE WE LOVE. Walked out on it, crook story and my audience don't like them, it is just another picture, it is the first poor Goldwyn we have played. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

INVISIBLE POWER. Frank Lloyd Production. Found this picture harsh sometimes but pretty good taking it all the way through. Advertising; paper slides and photos. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; good. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York

MAN WITH TWO MOTHERS. Good. Pleased hundred percent. Will stand boosting. O. W. Harris, Sapulpa, Okla.

THE SILVER HORDE. Although an old picture it gave good satisfaction. Several favorable comments and no complaints. Rex Beach's pictures always take here. Advertising; newspaper and lobby display. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, N. D.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. This picture was well liked by our audiences, but why I can't tell you as we (of the theatre) saw it. There was a lot of the good old "hokum" and a very ordinary production, slow and cumbersome in action, but they liked it and what they liked about it I can't tell you, so I was satisfied, but we cannot help but wonder why, when we starved to death on pictures as good as "The Good Provider" and others. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

WALL FLOWER. Miss Moore is well liked here. A good story. Pleased hundred percent. Advertising; good. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, as well as many other discriminating exhibitors, book their shows by the reports you send.

A tip is a tip, but a straight tip is a real tip.

Straight tips are the only sort to send in and as far as anyone has ever said, there is nothing in these columns that isn't a straight tip.

Let's make the reports even more useful. What do you want to know that isn't now in these reports? Would the type of town (as mining, agricultural, etc.) help any? Would the size (population) make it easier for you to apply reports to your own case? Anything else?

Straight From The Shoulder aims to be THE EXHIBITOR'S OWN TIP EXCHANGE. Come in with reports and come in with criticism.—VAN.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

THE MADNESS OF LOVE. Only fair entertainment. Advertising; one sheet, newspapers, electric sign. Attendance; poor. Patronage; general. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

Hodkinson

AT THE SIGN OF THE JACK O'LANTERN. Very good program picture with good comedy parts. Pleased eighty percent here. No complaints. Good for any audience. Advertised; newspaper, lobby display. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, N. D.

CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. A very good picture. Had lots of favorable comments. Buy it, you won't go wrong. Advertising; billboard and newspapers. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. John A. Schwalin, Rialto theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

FACE OF THE WORLD. At $10 this picture was placed about right. Most distributors would have called it a special and asked $25 for it. Then you would have had to take lots of time explaining to the public why the poorest pictures are called Specials and go at the highest prices. Advertising; posters. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

JANE AYRE. Fair picture, well acted. Not popular except with some who read the book. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. J. A. Flourney, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Ga.

THE U. P. TRAIL. Just an ordinary program picture. Pleased some but too much rough acting for many. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; rural. Attendance; very good. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, N. Y.

Metro

CONQUERING POWER. A corking good picture. Beautifully staged and perfectly acted picture. Pleased 100 per cent. Advertising; sixes, threes, ones and newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

I CAN EXPLAIN. Gareth Hughes. Neither Metro nor Hughes could explain this picture in a hundred years. This is the worst that our screen ever saw and if you have it bought, set it out, you will be money ahead. No story and the acting is awful, meant to be comedy, but every piece of business misses fire. Attendance; more than should have seen it for our good. Patronage; small town. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

PUPPETS OF FATE. Very good program picture that will satisfy. Attendance; fair. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

Paramount

BACHELOR DADDY. Here you have the sweetest and best picture of the year. Everybody entirely satisfied. We want more like this. Advertising; one six, one three sheet, two ones, slides and program. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

CITY OF SILENT MEN. An excellent picture, pleased everyone. Photography very good, especially in interior prison scenes. Boost it strong and you will not regret it. Is equal to many specials. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; rural. Attendance; good. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

DANGEROUS LIES. A high class society feature. No good for a mining district. Advertising; ones, photos. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

ENCHANTMENT. A distinct and pleasant surprise. It pleased thoroughly. First Marion Davies picture we ever had any luck with. It is good. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

EXCUSE MY DUST. Played this after reading comments of "Straight From the Shoulder Film Reports" and surely was not disappointed. Everybody pleased. We book all pictures this way now as it means satisfaction. Better be safe than sorry, especially in a small town. Come on all you good fellows and commit yourselves on what you have played for the betterment of the industry. Patronage; village and country. Attendance; fair. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

FIND THE WOMAN. Fair picture. A good mystery story. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Fred R. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

FOOTLIGHTS.. A good society picture which will please. Elsie Ferguson plays part well. Advertising; ones, photos and three sheets. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, W. Virginia.

FOR THE DEFENSE. One of the best mystery dramas Miss Clayton has been starred in for months. Advertising; regular. Patronage; general. Attendance; light. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

GET-RICH-QUICK WALLINGFORD. A clever comedy drama that pleased those who saw it. Advertising; six, threes, ones, lobby and sidewalk painting. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Jack W. Oglivie, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

HER FACE VALUE. A good, pleasing program picture. Wanda Hawley is always lovely to look upon and generally gives a satisfactory performance. This is fully up to her standard. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. W. E. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

IF YOU BELIEVE IT, IT'S SO. One of the best Meigham pictures released. Enjoyed by everybody. Advertising; lobby, newspapers, windows. Patronage; general. Attendance; very good. S. J. Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE? A really keen farce comedy that held up two nights against a strong tent show, it was really appreciated. Drew strong on girls and young people and a host of "Old Heads." Nothing big, but satisfied. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Bellville, Kansas.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE? Fails to answer the question but provides some mighty fine comedy. Was well liked here. Advertising; newspaper, lobby, billboard and V. Pa. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

MALE AND FEMALE. Patrons raved about it. Some saw it twice. Book it and advertise heavy. Advertising; ones, threes, photos. Patronage; general. Attendance; extra good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. The unusualness of this picture is the outstanding feature. Holt's personality is very pleasing. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. Jack fills the bill in a good South Sea Island story. It is tense and holds interest well. Photography good. Advertising; regular. Patronage; general. Attendance; just fair. H. J. Lougaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

MISS LULU BETT. A very good production that pleased eighty-five percent; but lay off it if you expect to make money on it. They simply won't come to see it for some unknown reason. Advertising; heralds, newspapers, posters and mail list. Patronage; general. Attendance; rotten. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Bellville, Kansas.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. Bebe Daniels and Jack Holt. I don't like to see Bebe in this kind of a picture but it was pretty good. Don't pay too much for it because they did not spend much in making it. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Okla.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels drew fairly well but the picture did not come up to expectations from the patrons' viewpoint. Not bad but it could have been better. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Mr. Odom Speaks His Mind

Walter Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi, says: "I feel that exhibitors all over the whole picture show world should take time and write your department information for exhibitors. This information is not for exhibitors alone, it goes to the picture producers; and when they read where some good brother exhibitor has sung the praises of a good picture, it puts new life into the picture maker.

"Self praise is no good. But when he sees it coming in from the reliable Straight From The Shoulder reporters, he knows that the praise is worth something, for it is not bought praise."

Never was there truer words spoken. Mr. Odom says the comments on bad pictures spur the producer to avoid errors. He's right. MORE REPORTS MEAN BETTER BOOKINGS.

NANCY FROM NOWHERE. A very good comedy drama. Patrons well pleased. Advertising; three, ones, slide. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, N. Y.

LET'S BE FASHIONABLE. Only fair program picture. In our opinion weakest one the star has made. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very poor. H. L. Bennett, Victoria Theatre, Parsons, West Virginia.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. A highbrow feature that will delight the better element and disappoint all others. Pleased fifty per cent. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED. Pleased quite generally. About as good as I have seen Hart in. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel Connecticut.

OVER THE BORDER. A good Royal Mounted Police story with plenty of snow to affect this hot weather. Plot, characterization and photography very good. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. H. J. Lougaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

OVER THE BORDER. Good picture. Wonderful scenery. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Placerville, California.

RIGHT TO LOVE. Mae Murray. Good picture which pleased the people. Good business. Patronage; general. Wm. Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Selznick

REPORTED MISSING. Here's one that will "make good" anywhere. Owen Moore is at his best in this role, and Tom Wilson kept the audience in a continuous roar. Advertising; newspapers, lobby, program. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

United Artists

DISRAELI. Exceptionally good picture that drew a number of people who never came before. However, the superb acting of George Arliss could not make the picture interesting for the "regulars." The average audience has not the mentality to enjoy such a picture. Unless your audience is exceptional, it will be over their heads. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

Universal

ACROSS THE DEADLINE. Frank Mayo has won for himself a good following and this picture, I feel, pleases everyone. Patronage, best. Attendance, only fair. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

DANGEROUS LITTLE DEMON. If this little star continues to make pictures like the ones that she has made in the past three or four, every exhibitor can look for another drawing card like Constance Talmadge. This picture pleased 100 per cent., playing it on July Fourth and it was a wonderful holiday attraction. Advertising, usual. Patronage, every class. Attendance, wonderful. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

MAN TO MAN. This will please any audience. It is not a picture that will only appeal to lovers of Western drama, as it has an appeal that will reach out and get them all. It offers all the action and thrills that anyone wants. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, very good. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

Vitagraph

INNER CHAMBER. A well produced picture that will please the majority. Advertising, billboards, newspapers. Patronage, high class. Attendance, good. John A. Schwalin, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

PRODIGAL JUDGE. I did a good business on this, second night better than usual so am led to believe my people liked it. I call it a mighty good picture. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

SHEIK'S WIFE. For me, the biggest piece of junk I've ever shown; patrons were all disappointed. Advertising, ones and threes. Patronage, general. Attendance, good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

Comedies

THE BOAT (First National). An excellent two-reel comedy; much better than the average but hardly worth the price. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

BRIGHT EYES (First National). Ben Turpin comedies go over fairly well for me, but this one is hardly up to the standard put out by that star. No fault of Turpin; the plot calls for too little action. Advertising, newspaper. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

CENTURY COMEDIES (Universal). These are excellent two-reel comedies; you can't get away from that. With us they're nearly as good as the Fox Sunshines. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

SNOOKY'S TWIN TROUBLES (Federated). Snooky comedies very popular here. This one unusually good. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

STRAPHANGER (Century - Universal). This is far above the average in the comedy line and went big here. If you use it, give it extra advertising. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

TOONERVILLE COMEDIES (Educational and First National). These two-reelers are put out by both companies and seem to be all very good, but why does First National charge so much more for theirs? To us they are no better than those from Educational. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

Serials

ROBINSON CRUSOE (Universal). On the third episode, holding up fairly well. Really cannot tell much about it as we have opposition on Friday night. It seems to be a very good serial. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). One of the best serials out in a long time. Small towns should use this serial by all means on Saturdays and it will increase box-office receipts. I listened to a few who do not like serials and quit for awhile; but there is nothing that will draw in a small town like a good serial on Saturdays for a filler. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Praising You

"I like your Straight From The Shoulder reports, for most of these come from the smaller towns and they are honest-to-goodness opinions." — M. Vennum, Okaw Theatre, Findlay, Illinois.

Short Subjects

PATHE PLAYLETS. We have played about ten of these and they seemed to be well liked with other short subjects. Some of them are very good; some, not so good. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

SPORT REVIEWS AND GOLDWYN GRAPHICS. They have the punch and pep; educational also. Will please any audience. Book these, they are a good series. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

State Rights

GIRL FROM PORCUPINE (Arrow). Very good Curwood picture and will please most any audience. Faire Binney summers here and always draws a crowd. She was present in the audience and made a few remarks. We turned them away. Aside from this, it is a picture well worth booking. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

RANGER AND THE LAW (Capitol). If you are looking for "fighting" you will find about four reels in this; one continuous fight from beginning to end. For me, only fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

WHEN DAWN CAME (Producers Security). A good picture and drew well. J. H. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

Consensus of Published Reviews

When Husbands Deceive

(Leah Baird—Associated Exhibitors—5,608 feet)

M. P. W.—A perfectly safe bet when strong drama is desired.

E. H.—It is strong drama from start to finish depicting aspects of married life in a forceful manner. Should prove thoroughly pleasing to the star's followers and give general good satisfaction.

F. D.—With a particularly attractive title, "When Husbands Deceive," Leah Baird's latest offering measures up satisfactorily.

N.—This picture is undoubtedly the best Leah Baird has appeared in up to date. Abounds in dramatic and melodramatic situations.

T. R.—An interesting domestic drama with plenty of forceful action in it.

East Is West

(Constance Talmadge—First National—7,737 feet)

M. P. W.—If you play "East Is West" put in a few more rows of seats. When the combination of your exploitation and the early visitors' word of mouth eulogies gets under way you'll need 'em.

T. R.—We have no hesitation in terming it an "exceptional" picture.

N.—In all it is a picture which should make a barrel of money. It carries the breath of a romance and charm and we catalogue it as a sure-fire hit. Dust off your S. R. O. sign.

F. D.—Sure fire success. Brush up the "S. R. O." sign—you'll need it for this one.

E. H.—Here is a picture which promises to bring as much money to the box offices of exhibitors as any production offered so far this season. It has every angle of audience appeal and is certain to be an exceptionally strong feature.

The Hands of Nara

(Clara Kimball Young—Metro—6,000 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture starts off with a punch and maintains a good rate of speed in development of plot, despite the necessity for elaborate characterization.

F. D.—Another "miracle" picture with theme that has no universal appeal.

N.—Possesses possibilities.

T. R.—The star's name may prove a good box office asset during initial showings of this picture, but patrons whose expectations of entertainment are based on memories of better productions in which Miss Young has appeared will be doomed to disappointment.

E. H.—Too lengthy and involved subtitles, poor direction and poor lighting make this adaptation of an interesting story rather negligible entertainment.

Dusk to Dawn

(Florence Vidor—Associated Exhibitors—5,200 feet)

M. P. W.—Florence Vidor shines in double role.

N.—The fine cast and the high artistic mounting given this production are the two biggest points of appeal. The story will go all right with an intelligent audience, but it will be unusually hard for many folks to follow its devious paths.

F. D.—Richly mounted production given to a most unusual theme; reaches a high standard technically.

T. R.—It does, however, suffice to hold the attention and, to say the least, is a story that will create a discussion.

E. H.—An intriguing picture in which the star ably portrays a dual role.

Through the Storm

(Edith Stockton—Universal—5,905 feet)

M. P. W.—The theme of "Through the Storm" is as familiar as moving pictures, but the dignified and entirely interesting treatment it receives in a fine production retains the spectator's attention.

T. R.—A fairly entertaining story that will possibly cover the average appeal.

N.—Just what success the feature will have depends entirely on the class of the house in which it plays and the price of admission the patron pays.

F. D.—Conventional material a little handicap for this.

E. H.—Conventional and unconvincing story handled with little finesse.

Paid Back

(Gladys Brockwell—Universal)

M. P. W.—Chiefly because of the South Sea atmosphere, this Universal drama, built upon a vendetta theme and featuring a cast of well-known players, should prove popular entertainment.

E. H.—Very well acted for the most part and some charming South Sea island shots.

N.—It is a story, conveniently told, relying upon melodramatic situations for its highlights.

T. R.—Good entertainment value although the material affords little or no newness in the shape of a plot.

F. D.—Outdoor scenes and actionful story make this satisfactory.

Just Tony

(Tom Mix—Fox—5,233 feet)

M. P. W.—Because of the direct appeal of the magnificent horse and his "acting" ability the picture will appeal to any class of theatregoers.

F. D.—A good entertainment and you can promise an unusual one.

N.—One of the most unusual and interesting westerns that has been shown in a long time.

T. R.—An excellent attraction, altogether different from the usual run of Western pictures.

E. H.—A picture that is as unusual as it is excellent. Stands out as a rare offering of its type.

Don't Shoot

(Herbert Rawlinson—Universal—5,130 feet)

M. P. W.—The story strikes a popular note and as treated here by a capable director and cast should be an easily salable product.

T. R.—It is an entertaining crook drama with fairly logical situations taking place that stimulate tightening interest during the progress of the story.

F. D.—Crook story makes picture of average entertainment.

N.—An interesting crook tale.

E. H.—A crook play with a diffeent twist. The type of story that should prove popular with most picturegoers.

"A Tailor-Made Man"

Charles Ray Scores Heavily in His First Release Through United Artists Corporation.

Reviewed by W. E. Keefe

Charles Ray's first picture released through United Artists should prove a sure-fire attraction with any audience. It is one of the best and most human pictures of the year. In the role of a clothes presser who confiscates a dress suit, breaks into society and when the opportunity arrives proves he has real ability, his work is intensely human and sincere, with fine humorous touches and he gets the audience.

Ray's clean-cut whimsical humor when he thrusts himself into the midst of a social gathering and despite ridicule and sarcasm meets the big financier is a remarkable piece of dramatic and humorous construction.

There is real drama when Ray after becoming the financier's secretary races to reach the strikers with an arbitration agreement despite opposition from crooked labor leaders. The suspense is built up faultlessly and when he collapses with victory almost in sight, the star's work is wonderful and the climax unusually thrilling.

A splendid bit of direction and editing takes place when Ray meets the labor delegation. This scene which covers considerable footage is entirely in pantomine without sub-titles. It shows the ebb and flow of an argument and Los Angeles audiences sat enthralled watching the changing facial expressions of the star and other actors. For dramatic intensity in drawing on the imagination and thought processes of an audience these scenes have probably never been surpassed.

The direction and scenario are excellent and the comedy touches and dramatic features are exquisitely blended. It is well edited and the photography and lighting are very good.

The large supporting cast is composed of prominent players all of whom do excellent work. Douglas Gerrard's work as a crooked politician stands out while Eddie Gribbon scores as a labor leader and Victor Potel gets over some splendid bits of comedy. Ethel Grandin does beautiful work opposite Ray. She has charm and grace and sincerity.

Exhibitors can go the limit on "A Tailor-Made Man."

Story

John Paul Bart, a poor clothespresser, has a unique theory on the psychology of clothes. When a dress suit is left in his care, he dons it and succeeds in getting into a swell reception. Despite ridicule he attracts the attention of Nathan, the president of a steamship company, who invites him on a cruise. Trouble with labor leaders gives Bart the opportunity to prove that he has real ability, and in a dramatic manner he succeeds in preventing the walkout after he becomes an employee of Nathan. One of the labor leaders is in love with Tanya, Bart's sweetheart, who was a fellow-worker in the tailor shop, and he tries to overthrow Bart. Failing, he exposes him as a clothes presser who stole a suit. Bart, humiliated, returns to the shop, but the steamship president follows him there and praises him. All ends happily with Bart's engagement to Tanya and his return to the work in which he has proven to successful.

"The Snitching Hour"

Five-Reel Comedy Stars Arthur Housman Effectively—Made by Herbert Steiner

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Arthur Housman's first appearance as the star in a five-reel comedy presents a somewhat distinctive class of entertainment. The story of a wild night, told in feature length in a consistently humorous vein, is a success of a finer type than might perhaps be imagined. Much of the comedy is subtle and is upheld by an interesting story.

Housman is a graceful anti-prohibitionist as he has proved before and gets many laughs for his clever performance. His conception of the man who is a social nuisance but who proves that a trip to your host's wine cellar may after all be doing him a good turn, is expressed vividly but not hilariously. His characterization goes deeper than obvious comedy and wins along with the laughs, a response of sympathy now and then.

Although every scene contributes entertainment, it seems probable that the whole would have more of a punch if it were shortened. This might insure its success with feminine fans. As it now stands it is a long treatment of subject-matter that finds its heartiest appreciation with men.

Nita Naldi is one of the most attractive features. In this she uses her arts as a siren to further her career as a Fifth avenue crook and as an actress walks away with high honors. The whole cast is excellent, as is the directing. The photography is very clear and the settings, both exterior and interior, show the same good taste that is evident in the other features of the production.

The Cast

Bunny.....Arthur Housman
Lois Dickerson.....Gladys Leslie
Mr. Dickerson.....Frank Currier
The "Countess".....Nita Naldi
Larry.....George Lessey

Story and Scenario by Lewis Allen Browne.

Direction by Alan Crosland

Length, 4,850 feet.

The Story

Lois Dickerson is engaged to Bunny whom she threatens to abandon unless he stops drinking. He is one of the guests at a week-end party which her father gives for a lady whom he believes to be a Countess. The lady is none other than Fannie of Fifth Avenue and is on the trail of a ruby belonging to Dickerson. Finally with the aid of her companion she discovers that Dickerson has hid the stone in his wine cellar in one of the bottles. Before she can get to it, Bunny has invaded the wine cellar, cracked a bottle of Burgundy and in a drunken stupor, pocketed the ruby. Thus he saves the stone, gets back into the graces of Dickerson and claims Lois, only after considerable turmoil before the crooks are exposed.

Exploitation Angles: If you have played "Why Announce Your Marriage," hook your publicity to Housman's hit in that play, a role which passed him on to stellar honors. If you have not had it, offer him as a new type of comedian, and play hard to put him over, making your chief appeal to the men. You might tie a prohibition vote to this.

"The Ghost Breaker"

Wallace Reid in Entertaining Paramount Picture of Feuds in Kentucky and Ghosts in Spain

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Again Wallace Reid appears in a picture without a racing car, in fact, there is no auto at all in "The Ghost Breaker," his latest Paramount picture. It is a spook story, and while it lacks the pep of some of his previous comedies, it will provide good entertainment for the masses, due to the weird and uncanny effects of spooks in a medieval castle clad in white robes and in armor; also to the mystery element and to some excellent comedy.

The action shifts half way around the world, starting in a feudal castle in Spain, then changing to a feud in Kentucky, with scenes in New York and aboard ship and then back in Spain. The scenes in and around the ship, while not vital to the story, allow for the introduction of good, clean comedy on the part of Walter Hiers as the negro valet, which kept the audience at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, in continual laughter.

This picture could be shortened to advantage, and the manner in which Reid meets and wins the confidence of the Senorita stretches the spectator's credulity, but when this situation is accepted, the action around the castle holds the interest, though the manner in which the star eludes the men in armor who are surrounding him is not clearly depicted. The scene where Hiers chases the supposed ghosts and then starts a crap game, winning their armor, is good burlesque.

As the Senorita, Lila Lee has a congenial role which fits her personality, and Walter Hiers in black-face scores an individual hit. There is something lacking in the star's delineation of the "Ghost Breaker" and he does not do his best work. The remainder of the cast are good in their respective roles, though Arthur Carewe at times appears camera-conscious. The photography and lighting are excellent, particularly in the castle scenes in Spain, and the sub-titles are snappy.

Mary Jarvis.....Francis Raymond
Maurice.....Snitz Edwards

Adapted from play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard.

Scenario by Jack Cunningham.
Directed by Alfred Green.
Length, 5,130 Feet.

The Story

Senorita Maria, in want of money, decides to try and find treasure believed to be hidden in a deserted castle. She enlists the aid of her cousin the duke, and then goes to New York to secure plans telling of the location of the treasure, which are in a private museum. Her cousin follows her. In New York Warren Jarvis, who has been involved in a Kentucky feud, seeks refuge in her room in fleeing from the police after he has shot his opponent. Hearing of her trouble and that the castle is haunted, they join forces and she smuggles Jarvis aboard ship in her wardrobe trunk.

Arriving in Spain, it does not take Jarvis long to find out that the Duke is at the bottom of the affair. In an encounter with the spooks they flee after Jarvis wounds the Duke who then confesses his complicity in the affair. Jarvis and the Senorita continue the quest and though they do not find gold they do find a treasure—love.

"Remembrance"

A Goldwyn Picture That Touches the High Spots of Pathos and Humor Under the Deft Direction of a Master Author.

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

In "Remembrance" Rupert Hughes has made for Goldwyn a picture that will probably be a sure-fire hit with the public in general, but to look at it from a critical standpoint it cannot be said that it is entirely free from faults.

Starting off with an interest-gripping sequence of events, some humorous and some pathetic, it gives promise in the beginning of being a picture extraordinary, and in fact, for a goodly portion of the film the spectator's emotions are carried along on a surge of feeling engendered by the life-like story and the remarkably fine acting of Claude Gillingwater. It must be said also that the acting of the entire cast is exceptionally good, and the sets, in many instances are very fine.

Mr. Hughes, with the usual Hughes accomplishment of being able to bring out with a few deft touches the high lights of a story or film, has sustained his reputation in that line in this picture, but it cannot go unremarked that he allowed at least one inconsistent touch to creep in when he shows a man, sick unto death, for several days and in an almost constant delirium, being the recipient of frequent visits from all members of his family.

However, this fault can readily be overlooked in the general excellence of the production throughout most of its length. The sick-room scenes, while a little too long drawn out, are more than overbalanced on the favorable side of the ledger by the interest which the story creates—by its genuineness, by its subtle touches of pathos, and its deft humor.

With "Remembrance," Goldwyn has made for the public a picture that is bound to catch its fancy. Its pathos strikes deep, but its humor enlivens it with the necessary lightness to bring a smile, where only a moment before there was a lump in the throat. Rupert Hughes, with his keen insight into what the mass of the picture-going public desires, has succeeded in giving to it just what it wants.—T. S. daP.

Story, Scenario and Direction by Rupert Hughes.
Length, 5,650 Feet.

The Story

J. P. Grout, a prosperous merchant who has risen to riches by hard work, is looked upon by his wife and children, who attempt to be social leaders, merely as the font from which to draw money for their high living expenses. One daughter, however, has no social aspirations, and it is on her that the love interest of the story hinges.

Grout's health finally fails under the strain of meeting his family's extravagant tastes, and during his illness his family comes to realize how inconsiderate of him it has been, and upon his recovery he discovers that he has a more laudable household.

"Timothy's Quest"

A Picture That You Can Proudly Recommend to Any Class of Patrons—Distributed by American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"Timothy's Quest" is so rich in human appeal that it will reach any class of patrons. It is Kate Douglas Wiggin's story interpreted for the screen with an infallible sympathy and charm. It jogs along through the New England country scenes like the old white horse whose name is not mentioned in the cast, but who contributes a friendly touch whenever he appears. It is wholesome to the last degree. A gentle mixture of pathos and comedy, it offers delightful entertainment that scores because it is genuine.

The screen version has avoided any too saccharine effect, and because of this merit it will surely win approval from the critical. In handling subject-matter of this type, where two orphaned children set out to find some one who will adopt them, and meet with success because of their lovable natures, there is considerable difficulty in keeping the story from being too idealistic. This fault has been avoided to a remarkable extent, partly because of the clever comedy touches.

There is no exception to the fine quality of the acting. Each character is defined with crystal clearness and invested with a sincerity that is largely responsible for the strong human appeal of the picture.

It would be hard to improve upon the two principals, Master Joseph Depew and Baby Helen Rowland. They have been directed so as to bring out all their natural charm and added to that is an evident interest in everything they undertake. If any cuts are made in the picture, and it may be advisable to do so, the scenes which are somewhat taxing emotionally to Timothy might be shortened. The subordinate roles are so uniformly good that it would seem partial to mention any one in particular.

Credit is due without stint to the director, Sidney Olcott. To the smallest detail he has equipped the delightfully old-fashioned scenes with an accurate knowledge of what is appropriate. The photography is excellent.

The picture is the type of offering which you can recommend unequivocally to the mothers and to the women's clubs of your neighborhood.

Adapted From the Book of the Same Name By Kate Douglas Wiggin.
Scenario by Katherine Stuart.
Direction by Sidney Olcott.
Length, 6,377 Feet.

The Story

Timothy, an orphan of the slums, learns that he is to be sent to an asylum. With a little girl he protects he sets out in quest of the real home of his dreams, and possibly he will adopt a mother. From a freight car they alight in the country and finally select a house they like. But the spinster who lives there declines to do any adopting that day, or ever allow herself to be adopted. Timothy pleads to be taken for the sake of the baby girl, and as the days go by the spinster's heart becomes softer. Finally, after strange occurrences and dramatic moments, she has a chance to give up Timothy. But it is too late, and he is begged to stay.

Dorothy Dalton Excellent in Paramount Melodrama Packed with Thrills

Reviewed by Marguerite Kent

A melodrama packed with thrills and action is this Paramount feature which again gives us Dorothy Dalton in the role of a dance hall favorite. As a hot weather pitcure it is a success for its snow scenes and its woodsy settings, contrive to make the middle-western audiences forget the hottest September in many years.

The title does not refer to the stellar role, but the lure of the North with its hidden gold, with the action centering about a dance hall and a tiny store. The thrills come fast and thick, beginning with the death of the parents of a baby, and running through its adoption by the dance hall girl, the burning of the dance hall by the reform element, a fight on a tilting raft in mid-stream and the "shooting" of a falls. A number of good touches lift the picture from the commonplace, showing the touch of a good director's hand, one of these being the method by which the news of the faithless husband is brought.

Miss Dalton is at her best, being particularly good in the scene where she sells her kisses to provide a bank account for the baby. Edward J. Brady plays a convincing role as the gambler, and does especially well in the scene where he is stalked by the wolves. Mitchell Lewis plays the heavy with a picturesque villainy that wins a bit of sympathy for the lonely trapper. David Powell, as the prospector, puts up a good fight in the raft scenes.

There is nothing particularly new to the plot, but the good old scenes are played up in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired. If we must have melodramas of the frozen North, let them be as good as this one.

The Cast

Charlotte Woods, a dancer...Dorothy Dalton
Ralph Stevens, a prospector....David Powell
Beauregard, a trapper.....Mitchell Lewis
Edward Brent, a gambler..Edward J. Brady
Gore.....Will Walling
Eleanor Du Bois.....Leigh Wyant
Irishman ..... Lucien Littlefield
Judge Green..... .....George Williams

Story by J. E. Nash.

Scenario by J. E. Nash and Philip Hurn.
Direction by Irvin Willat.

Length, 5,417 feet.

The Story

Beauregard, a trapper, finds a crying baby beside its frozen parents in the far north, and takes it to Charlotte, the dance hall favorite, hoping to win a kiss as his reward. Charlotte, really the wife of a gambler, adopts the baby, and sells her kisses to provide a bank account for the child. After the burning of the dance hall, by the reform element, Charlotte and her gambler-husband open a store, which the faithless husband sells to Beauregard, including Charlotte and the baby. Charlotte kills the trapper, and the fleeing husband is pursued by a prospector. A fight follows, the husband goes ashore where he is killed by wolves. Charlotte and the baby find happiness with the prospector.

Exploitation Angles: After the star play up the sale of kisses, asking your patrons what they would give for the privilege. Stress also the fact that this role is in line with those in which she has won her greatest success.

"Why Do Men Marry?"

Unity Pictures Produces Italian Feature—Intrigue Is Predominating Motive

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Luxurious settings and a story that displays some effective intrigue, keep the spectator interested in this production which was made in Italy and stars Edy Darclea, who made an impression in "Nero" by her performance of the slave girl. In this she plays a double role that has been designed with more than usual originality.

The story follows up the adventures of the two characters, with many complications and some neatly devised substitutions, showing a skillfully prepared scenario. First as a lady of royalty and then as a popular actress whose destinies are suddenly placed in the hands of two men gambling for the highest prizes, the star has a chance for picturesque contrasts. Her characterization of the actress is not always sure, but she is possessed of so much physical charm that she will be attractive to many.

Imperfect lighting has detracted from the effect of many of the scenes, notwithstanding the advantage of some rich interiors and a number of beautiful outdoor shots. The big scenes in the theatre have been well directed. They seem superior to some of the dramatic scenes in which only the principals are seen, and in which the melodrama is too highly accented.

With the exception of Edy Darclea who plays Flavia and Mousseline, the cast of performers is not credited.

Adapted from the story by Leo Gozler.
Direction by Genina.
Length, 5,000 feet.

The Story

The Duke of Glendome and Count Mavoc are both anxious to marry the beautiful royal favorite, Flavia. Glendome is in love with her, and Mavoc with her money. They hear of the arrival of a popular actress, Mousseline, who is almost the exact image of Flavia. Glendome makes a bet with Mavoc in which the first one of the two men who marries either of the women will receive $50,000. Mavoc, in need of funds, takes him seriously and runs off with Mousseline after a hasty ceremony. Soon after, Glendome marries Flavia and Mavoc, believing he has been tricked, determines to get even. He gets in his foul play while Glendome is out of town and almost ruins Flavia's reputation. Upon Glendome's return he offers to atone for the sum of $100,000 but Glendome settles the account with pistols—and wins.

Exploitation Angles: This title is a temptation to make a sensational campaign, but if you make this error you will have to pay for it later, since the story will not justify the campaign and your patrons will resent what they will feel to be an imposition. Sell it instead as an interesting study of Italian methods with a star who has already won favor in one of the season's big productions.

In "A Tailor-Made Man," Charles Ray's first picture for United Artists, he has a picture that should get over with any audience. The comedy touches and dramatic features are so exquisitely blended that they hold you. Ray's work is human, sincere and humorous. His acting when he "borrows" a dress suit and invades a fashionable function is a remarkable piece of dramatic and humorous work. This picture scored a tremendous hit with Los Angeles audiences and should prove a sure-fire winner.—W. E. K.

"Headin' North"

Arrow Production, Starring Pete Morrison, Keeps High Tension

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

High tension is maintained through most of the action in this picture of the Northern timber district. This is done by a rapid-fire method of piling one dramatic incident upon another with an inexhaustible energy that commands at least for a time, the closest attention.

As with many out-door pictures of action, there is more attention given to accumulating the thrills than to making the theme seem plausible. It results in a crudeness that is to some extent permissible. The whole trend of the story carries out an idea that seems improbable—that of the dead girl's friend setting out to kill a man whom he does not even know and has little reasons for suspecting of being guilty of deliberately plotting her death. This merely serves as a vehicle, however, for the drama. Accidents follow with great rapidity, the felling of the giant tree and its victim, the broken canoe paddle, the payroll robbery and the lynching being only a few of the exciting moments that are to be found.

The forest backgrounds are used to pictorial advantage. Pete Morrison has a heroic role, which he handles modestly, and has the capable support of Dorothea Dickinson.

The Cast

The Boob.....Barney Furey

Story and Scenario by Barney Furey.

Length, 4,257 Feet.

The Story

Arthur Stowell elopes with Madge Mullins and through his carelessness in driving she is thrown down hill and is killed. Bob Ryan, who has been in love with her for years, determines to get Stowell, whom he knows was unworthy of her. He arrives in a timber district and saves the life of Frances Wilson, caught in a runaway. Bull Thompson robs the wagon carrying the payroll to the men and traps Bob so that all believe him to be guilty. Before the lynching the town boob discloses some startling evidence that clears Bob and convicts Thompson whom he then shoots. Thompson confesses that he is really Stowell but was not intentionally responsible for the death of Madge. Frances proves such a strong attraction that Bob decides to accept a job in the town and stay.

"Caught Bluffing"

Interesting Story and Fine Photography in Universal Picture With Frank Mayo.

Reviewed by Charles M. Inman

While opinions may clash as to the appropriateness of "Caught Bluffing" as a title for Frank Mayo's latest starring vehicle, all will be willing to admit that it is an intensely interesting screen story and that the camera, at least, has done no bluffing in its delineation of some wonderfully picturesque scenery and some vivid and thrilling episodes. It comprises both drama and melo-drama at their best, with the plot laid in a scenic environment that lends boldness and ruggedness to the beauty of the presentation, and, while there are no comedy situations to relieve the tensity of the action, there is the inevitable thread of love that runs through the story and finally brings a happy termination.

"Caught Bluffing" gives ample range of opportunity for some real dramatic ability and is essentially an offering in which Frank Mayo has a rare chance to show his mettle. There is no gainsaying the fact that he does so and that his characterization of the proprietor of the Klondike gambling hell is a work of art and never overdone. Edna Murphy, who plays opposite to him, also has a part that calls for some strong emotional acting that at times borders on the highly dramatic. Her portrayal leaves little to be desired. The other characters are well cast, and as a whole, the screen story moves along smoothly and holds the interest throughout its entirety. There is little doubt that it will please the larger part of any audience and add immensely to any program. It has much to recommend it.

The Story

John Oxford is proprietor of a gambling hell in the Klondike region. He refuses to accept the play of Wallace Towers, a bookkeeper for the Katadin Mining Company, and ejects from his place two gamblers who are found cheating. These gamblers get hold of Towers and skin him not only of his own money but of a large sum belonging to the mining company. In the meantime Doris Henry, Towers' sweetheart, is on her way out to marry him, and arrives just after Towers has fled. College Kate is an inveterate gambler and cannot resist the gambling tables and loses all. A self-inflicted pistol shot ends her career and, as her lifeless body tumbles from a balcony into the midst of the players, Oxford swears to close his place. Oxford, on his way to Katadin, sees Doris being abducted by Peter Scarr, a prospector. Oxford follows, rescues Doris after a terrific fight, and is scorned by her when she learns who he is. Towers appears on the scene and takes money from Oxford to square himself with the mining company. Doris's love for Towers disappears as she sees his contemptuous act, and is transferred to Oxford as she learns his real past.

"The Eternal Flame"

Splendid Firsct National Production That Will Make More Norma Talmadge Enthusiasts

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

If you have a "lemon" house on your hands and want to turn it into a gold mine, don't overlook Norma Talmadge's masterpiece production, "The Eternal Flame." It is first an artistic picture and then an entertainment vehicle that will live for a long, long time. Personally, this writer believes it to be the greatest picture ever made by this charming star, who in this particular instance gives as fine a piece of character acting as witnessed in any picture. But the wonderful and outstanding feature is that every thing is perfect, acting, direction, lighting, photography and settings. It is flawless, with every player doing his or her share, with the result that with a little good showmanship "The Eternal Flame" should leave in its wake a long string of broken box office receipts.

For some reason, best known to the producers, this picture is being compared with "Smilin' Through." It is not as sentimental as that Talmadge success, but it is a greater, bigger and even finer production. "Smilin' Throuh" made them weep; "Thc Eternal Flame" wll send them out of the theatre boosting. There is nothing left undone and no opportunity in Honore de Balzac's famous novel, "La Duchesse de Langeais," has been overlooked.

In the role of the Duchess Miss Talmadge furnishes a splendid study, full of human interest and realistic t othe point where one is so impressed that he feels he would like to take this faithful wife by the hand in congratulation for all that she does. But it is as the merciless coquettc wherein Miss Talmadge scores her greatest triumph. She wears gorgeous costumes of the French court beautifully, and, all in all, the picture she presents is charming to look at. Conway Tearle as General De Mortiveau could not have given a better characterization without runing the interesting role of the persistent lover who finally subdues the reigning beauty of France. Others who do meritorious work worthy of commendation are Rosemary Theby, Otis Harlan, Irving Cummings, Adolphe Jean Menjou, Thomas Ricketts and Wedgewood Nowell.

The direction of Frank Lloyd is superlative in every particular, while the settings, laid in the period when Louis XVIII ruled supreme, are gorgeously picturesque and historically correct, the elaborate ball scenes being one of the finest of its kind ever flashed on the silver sheet. The lighting was all that it should be.

Briefly, "The Eternal Flame" is a costume play that is different from the rest. It has melodramatic value plus a romance that grips you from start to finish and a cast of names that is a business-getter.

Presented by Joseph F. Schenck.
Directed and Supervised by Frank Lloyd.
Adapted by Frances Marion from Honore de Balzac's "La Duchesse de Langeais."
Length, 7,453 Feet.

The Story

Duchesse de Langais, a charming beauty, is married to a severe French army officer. She hears of a bet he has made with other officers relative to her faithfulness. This knowledge completely turns the heretofore loyal wife into a cynically heartless coquette, who breaks heart after heart in the court of Louis XVIII. Finally she falls in love with General De Mortriveau, who kidnaps her and threatens to brand her. He relents, however, seeking forgetfulness, and refusing to answer her notes or to see her. She, repentent, enters a convent, hiddn away for years. Meanwhile, the General has found it impossible to forget and he seeks her, finally locating her in the convent and succeeding in procuring her release.

"The Snowshoe Trail"

A Film Booking Office Production Replete with Suspense

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

A great deal of suspense is involved in "The Snowshoe Trail," which is bound to make it interesting to the average audience, and gain it a good deal of word-of-mouth publicity. This suspense and interest is created largely by the way of treating episodes which are not particularly new, but which nevertheless have been so dovetailed that they form a compact and engrossing story from which the mind is never allowed to wander.

There is nothing out of the ordinary, for instance, in the hero's and heroine's being marooned in a mountain cabin cut off from civilization by heavy snow-falls, but the director has managed to inject certain sidelights and innovations, that taken together with the appealing acting of Jane Novak and the sincerity in the portrayal of Roy Stewart cover up entirely the usualness of the situation.

Besides the northern snow-wilderness scenes, in which a good part of the story progresses, there are also some "shots" of life in civilized and cultured localities which give the picture an interesting diversity.

The acting of all concerned is commendable, and enough comedy has been interwoven to enliven the melodrama to the proper extent. There are some views of the heroine and hero of the story struggling desperately in a swirling river that is carrying them ever closer to "the falls," that are exciting to a great degree, and though the spectator is sure that they will finally be saved, the scene has been done so realistically that the suspense is, nevertheless, intense.

The Story

Bill Bronson undertakes to guide Virginia Tremont and her guardian into the far North in search of Miss Tremont's fiancee. The guardian is killed and the girl and Bronson are shut in the mountains by a snow storm. There they come across Miss Tremont's fiancee who has been living a dissolute life, and when Miss Tremont compares him with the upstanding Bronson her affections change and she and Bronson find they love each other.

Establish Precedent

United Artists Claim Sustained in Japanese Court

Under the heading, "Decision Settles Film Piracy Case," the Japan Advertiser, one of the leading newspapers of Tokio, published recently a lengthy news story containing details of a court decision establishing a precedent for American film protection in Japan.

This court ruling grew out of an action brought by United Artists Corporation to prevent illegal showing of D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East." It is the first decision of such a nature ever obtained by a foreign film corporation in Japanese courts and sets a precedent for protecting American producers against film piracy.

Little Stories on Big Pictures

RALPH CONNOR never wrote a more stirring story of the Northwest than "CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED." He never wrote a better description of the spirit of pioneering that carries the peoples of the Old World into the wilds of the New than "GOD'S CRUCIBLE."

Both of these masterpieces have been picturized with a fidelity to detail that breathes the very atmosphere of Canada's Western Empire.

An entire squadron of the Northwest Mounted Police take part in "CAMERON," an accomplishment due solely to the influence of Sir Charles Gordon, who is "Ralph Connor" in private life. This is the first time these indomitable soldiers of the Northwest have ever appeared as an organization in motion pictures, and their participation lends a measure of action to the picture that at times moves at breath-taking speed.

Book both of these RALPH CONNOR features. Millions of readers know his books; many more millions will be attracted to the theatres that show his pictures. They are BIG in every test that you can apply to motion pictures.

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Fine Work

C. E. Cheatham of the Ottoway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., is an exhibitor who recognizes the importance of short subjects as business getters and that if properly exploited they will draw patronage to his house. For the opening of the Pathe serial "The Timber Queen" he converted his box office into a cabin of pine logs with a clock surmounting the roof indicating the hour of screening the first episode. He also used a large cut of Ruth Roland on a galloping steed the galloping movement being kept up easily from within the booth Result — Crowded houses. Exploitation is just as effective with short subjects as with features. Try it.

New "Hallroom"

Percy and Ferdie attempt to put over a story that they own an auto, in the newest Hallroom Boys' comedy "A Tailor-Made Chauffeur" released by C. B. C. Film Corporation. This number is ready for release and in a try-out in two Pacific Coast theatres won many laughs.

Sid Smith is again featured in this comedy which was directed by Noel Smith. The titles are decorated with line cartoons which proved a hit in the previous offering "Still Going Strong."

"One Terrible Day" Is Praised

The first of the new series of "Our Gang" two-reel comedies distributed by Pathe "One Terrible Day" which is on the current bill at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, received praise from newspaper reviewers. The Herald described it as a rollicking comedy and the World said it was extremely funny and had the audience laughing out loud.

Pathe officials are enthusiastic over reports from exchanges regarding the bookings on this picture, which are coming in heavily. This series will be issued one every four weeks.

"Shriek of Araby" Is Sennett's Latest

"The Shriek of Araby" is the title of the latest Mack Sennett comedy feature in which Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire appear. This production, which will be released through First National, is said to be the best of Mr. Sennett's many notable efforts in the comedy line.

Johnny Jones Comedy Heads Pathe Program

For the week of September 24 Pathe has an attractive list of short subjects headed by the third of the series of Johnny Jones two-reel comedies, "For Rent-Haunted." This offering deals in a humorous vein of how the youthful star together with Gertrude Messinger and a capable cast of children put through an ingenious scheme to rent a haunted house.

In the eleventh episode of "The Timber Queen" serial, Ruth Roland has some unusually thrilling stunts in an auto and on a runaway engine. Screen Snapshots No. 9 shows interesting pictures of Betty Compson and Bert Lytell in costumes of the past, Pearl White, slow motion views of Snowy Baker romping with a kangaroo and Wesley Barry and Niles Welsh doing a stunt for the camera. Many other stars including Edward Earle, Grace Darmond, Mabel Ballin, Zena Keefe and Colleen Moore, appear in this issue.

The current Hal Roach comedy starring Paul Parrott is titled "Soak the Sheik" and is a burlesque on the vogue for sheik pictures. The comedian gets a lot of comedy out of his radio equipped camera and after turning things topsy turvy makes way with the sheik's favorite wife.

The Aesop Film Fable "Two Slick Traders" deals cleverly with the adage that "A Fair Exchange is No Robbery" and is treated in Cartoonist Terry's best style. An excellent issue of the Pathe Review together with a Harold Lloyd reissue "Two Scrambled," are also listed.

F. B. O. Handling De Haven Comedies

Film Booking Offices has just issued a Carter DeHaven comedy entitled "Their First Vacation." It is on the bill at the Capitol Theatre, New York, during the current week and was accorded a welcome reception.

This comedy is the first of a series which Carter DeHaven has made and F. B. O. will distribute, which are described as refined domestic comedies. They were directed by Mal St. Clair. "Their First Vacation" deals with the numerous misfortunes which befall the unhappy groom when a newly married couple go to spend their holiday at a large hotel. All the gags and humor are said to be the outcome of the national development of the plot, none being dragged in.

This series will be issued at intervals of three weeks. Production is ahead of schedule and five are now ready, including "Twin Husbands" "Entertaining the Boss" "Keep 'Em Home" and a holiday offering "Christmas."

DeHaven is now making a trans-continental tour and is taking the occasion to meet a large number of exhibitors and exchangemen. He will reach New York on September 16 and after several days' stay will visit Philadelphia, Washington and the southern cities, returning to Los Angeles to resume production.

American Releasing Lists Bible Series

In accordance with the announcement of American Releasing Corporation that it would release a series of fifty-two pictures of bible countries produced in the Holy Land by the Geographic Film Corporation, Inc., the first twelve have been scheduled.

Beginning with October 15 "The Walls of Zion" will be issued following weekly thereafter by the following in the order in which they are listed: "The Road to Jericho," "Beyond the Jordan," "Hebron the Ancient," "Beersheba," "The Valley of Dry Bones," "Gilboah," "Shiloh," "Shechem," "On the Road to Bethlehem," "The Little Town of Bethlehem," and "Samaria" which will be released on December 31.

This series which has the basic title of "The Voice of the Land" is announced as including every place mentioned in the Bible. It is the work of Dr. J. E. Holley who made two extended trips of study and preparation before heading the expedition which filmed this unusual series. These reels are embellished by Prizma natural-color photography.

New Eastman Books Plum Centers

The entire series of Plum Center comedies distributed by F. B. O. and starring Dan Mason, have been booked by the new Eastman Theatre in Rochester. These comedies are produced by Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation and win their laughs by means of clever stories worked out with original gags.

"Pop Tuttle's Movie Queen" was shown at the George M. Cohan theatre in New York and "Pop Tuttle's Clever Catch" at the Rialto in New York.

Newsy Notes

F. G. Becker, who is representing Arthur Trimble, the diminutive star, in a series of "Prince Courageous" comedies, pulled a good exploitation stunt in the issuing of elaborate "Royal Warrants" to attend the premiere at the Granada Theatre in Hollywood. The use of this device in connection with short subjects is unusual and proved effective.

Franklyn E. Backer who will distribute the series of Franklie Lee comedies to be made by Clarence Bricker, announces that laughter and tears and not hokum will be the main elements in the series. The first one will be ready in November.

To provide "atmosphere" in connection with the showing of "Blood and Sand" at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatre, New York, and Stanley in Philadelphia, Pathe provided a scenic in color entitled "A Day in Spain," which served admirably to introduce the feature.

Al Christie has started work on "Choose Your Weapons," featuring Bobby Vernon. The action takes place in a mythical kingdom with a typical Graustark setting and is said to be one of the most ambitious attempted by the Christie forces. Charlotte Stevens is the leading lady.

Believing that the time is ripe for two-reel comedies starring a fat comedian, the T. R. Coffin Company is featuring "Fatty" Karr in a series which will be distributed by East Coast Productions and directed by Bruce Mitchell.

During three successive weeks Minneapolis audiences enjoyed Christie Comedies in first run theatres: "Any Old Port" at the State. "Bucking Broadway" at the Strand and "Mile a Minute Mary" at the Blue Mouse.

Kahn & Greenfield, who own a circuit of theatres in California, have booked Educational's entire product for present season for their new theatre in Honolulu.

A. C. Gordon, of the Star Theatre, Wieser, Idaho, reports that Pathe's Johnnie Jones two-reeler, "Supply and Demand," made a hit with his patrons and he has booked the second release, "Makin' Movies."

Robert F. Hill is directing a series of short subjects which are being filmed in the national forests in the West and which will be distributed by Universal. Conservation is the keynote of the series.

Katherine Grant a member of the Hal Roach comedy forces, as "Miss Los Angeles," represented that city in the beauty contest at Atlantic City.

"Chats" Interesting

The current issue of the Urban Movie Chats shows the interesting experiments being conducted by the U. S. Bureau of Agriculture with Fruit. Other sections deal with the difficulty in trapping horned owls, the making of whole wheat bread, how Cincinnati folks go to their homes on elevators, and the unique experiment of a farmer who staged a concert for his cows and claims they gave more and better milk.

Filming Flight

Pathe News has re-equipped its cameraman Thomas Baltzell and will continue on the "S-C 2" with Lieutenant Hinton and party in his attempt to fly to Brazil. The pictures will be issued in regular numbers of Pathe News. In the accident which ended the flight of the S-C 1 the cameraman lost 10,000 feet of negatives.

Two New Series on Educational's List

Included in Educational's program for the month of October are the first releases of two new series of short subjects and a spectacular special, making it one of the biggest of that company's programs in many months with a wide selection of varied subjects.

The first of the new releases is the initial number of "The Graphic" the new human interest screen magazine which will be issued the first of the month. Later in October will be issued "King Winter" the first of Lyman Howe's "Hodge Podge" series. The special is a two-reeler, "Man vs Beast" portraying the exciting adventures of a scientific expedition in Africa, said to contain thrilling and amazing shots of wild animals.

The list for the first week includes Warren Newcombe's beautiful love fantasy "The Enchanted City," "Let 'Er Rub" the third of the new Christie comedies "The Graphic" and "The Tiger of San Pedro" one of the Sherlock Holmes series. In the next week is "The Steeplechaser" the second Jack White-Mermaid comedy, the second Earl Hudson comedy "Fresh Fish," "The Blanket Stiff," a Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tale and The Graphic, which is issued weekly.

The third week's list covers a Toonerville comedy, "The Skipper's Sermon," and "The Priory School" of the Sherlock Holmes series, while the final week has a Christie Comedy "Ocean Swells." Tony Sarg's "The First Flivver," "Man vs. Beast" and another of the Sherlock Holmes series "The Solitary Cyclist." In addition Kinograms is issued twice a week.

Varied Subjects

Starland Revue, No. 10, released by Film Booking Offices shows Don, the drunken dog, that appeared with Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs" as a vaudeville actor. Scenes from the play "Morn to Midnight," views of Francine Larrimore who has just returned from Europe, John Murray Anderson selecting beauties for the Greenwich Village Follies and other items of interest appear in this reel produced by Jack Cohn.

Clean Comedies

Joe Brandt who is now in the West announces that the new series of comedies starring Joe Rock which Ben Wilson is producing for Federated Film Exchanges will be clean cut, amusing comedies, free from suggestiveness and censor-proof, and that there will be no pie throwing or similar rough humor. "Aladdin" a satire on the Arabian Nights is now complete.

Reviews of Short Subjects

"Speed"

Fast Action and Plenty of Stunts in Charles Hutchinson's New Pathe Serial

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

"Speed" is well named.

In the latest Pathe serial, starring the famous stunt artist, Charles Hutchinson, the action moves at an ultra rapid pace and the characters carrying out the fast action of the plot tear through every scene. Yes, it is well named—"Speed."

Three episodes of the serial, which is to be released in fifteen two-reel episodes, were shown for review. Judging from the initial installments (a remark that must appear in the comment on a new serial; there is no getting away from it) that multitude of earnest picturegoers who justifiably crave the continued-in-our-next form of screen entertainment will be supplied, in "Speed," with fare exactly to their taste. Although this one follows the popular form of serial entertainment, the impression must not obtain that it is old stuff. Rather, it is a favorite type of amusement dispensed with new ideas.

These fresh ideas mostly embrace the stunts performed by the daring star, which is really the all important feature of serials. Hutchinson, noted for his fearless deeds, seems to exceed himself in the first three episodes and there is no reason to believe that he will not go even further in the succeeding chapters. From the very start he sets himself a breakneck pace and in that part of the whole, which was shown, he maintains it, furnishing rapid-fire thrills galore.

George B. Seitz directed the serial, and his work in former episode pictures is too well-known not to give some idea of the highly expert manner in which the incidents in "Speed" are handled. It should be said, however, that he has originated a number of novelties in thrill promotion, as he has done in all of his films. He's the lad that can think up the stunts. And "Hutch" is the boy who can do them. A fine combination in the matter of making fast action.

A hard working cast support the star and certainly help maintain the rapidity with which each chapter progresses. Lucy Fox, who played opposite Hutchinson in "Hurricane Hutch," is a fearless young woman and can register a thrill now and again for herself. Not only does she do that in the current picture, but she lends distinct feminine charm.

Besides furnishing a background for Hutchinson's daring, the story itself travels at a rapid clip and is just the type that is popular with serial fans. Hutchinson becomes involved in an attempt at murder, and the man who can prove his alibi and clear him of suspicion is a bank embezzler who has fled to South America. The chase begins in this country and soon takes a southward course. The love interest is planted early.

Pathe serials are well-known. Charles Hutchinson is well-known. George B. Seitz is well-known. An exhibitor has handmade box-office advantages.

"The Speeder"

Lloyd Hamilton's first in his new series of two-reelers for Educational is "The Speeder." This shows "Ham" in undisputed possession of a glorious flivver, bought with his life's savings. After a wordy, philosophical sub-title, the fun begins. There are gags aplenty, all funny, but the best is where "Ham" carefully reads: "How to Put on a Life-Belt," while the boat sinks. So methodically determined is he to get the matter clear in his mind, that he continues his perusal under water.

Exhibitors will find this subject wholly pleasing. It cannot be said of "The Speeder" that it compares with "Robinson Cruso, Ltd.," for that picture is one of the greatest comedies ever made, but the latest is an addition to any program. Incidentally, Hamilton must be weary of having all his comedies judged according to the remarkably high standard of "Crusoe," and it is hardly fair. But the industry expects great things of him, and every time he makes a new picture, everybody, humanlike, looks for another "Crusoe."—S. S.

"The Boy and the Bear"

Radio plays a prominent part in this Paul Terry cartoon comedy distributed by Pathe, not only is music broadcasted that way, but the boy, his dog and a bear cub also travel home via that route. There are also other wierd and impossible stunts in this number, which is hardly up to the average for the series.—C. S. S.

"Fox Educationals"

The second group of three single-reel subjects soon to be released by the Educational Division of Fox Film Corporation confirms the opinion produced by the first three as to their high entertainment and instructive value. Ice sports, water sports and views of Ancient Rome are interestingly treated in this lot. They are all snappily edited and finely sub-titled.

"Thrills and Spills"

Starting with fancy ice-skating at St. Moritz in Switzerland, this reel deals interestingly with ice sports in all parts of the world. There are fine shots of skiing, tobogganing, barrel jumping on skates, ending with thrilling views taken aboard an ice-yacht going at a terrific speed.

"Ancient Rome"

An interesting feature of this reel dealing with the city which has probably played the most important part in the world's history is an animated map showing the huge extent of the Roman empire in the period when it ruled the civilized world. There are also views of buildings, fountains and sculpture showing its past grandeur, including scenes of the Church of St. Giovanni, built by the Emperor Constantine and said to be the mother of all Christian churches; also St. Peter's Church, built on the spot where Nero burned the Christians.

"Water Sports"

Unique devices for giving bathers thrills and amusement are shown in this reel. There are also interesting views of swimming and diving contests, surf riding on the undulating waves in the Hawaiian Islands, ultra-rapid speed boats, aquaplaning with its thrills, and the unusually thrilling stunt enjoyed by a young woman who aquaplaned attached to a hydroplane. —C. S. S.

"Pardon My Glove"

The second of the 1922-23 series of Christie Comedies to be distributed through Educational is a farce revolving around a boxing story that will especially appeal to the male portion of the audience but at the same time has such a large percentage of comedy of general appeal that women will enjoy it as much. The prize fighting angle is not so technical that the situations and incidents will go unappreciated by those who are not familiar with the sport, anyway.

The film will promote a laugh a minute, or faster. It is seldom that a film even of this sort contains such a rapid fire of moments that will make any audience sit up and laugh its head off.

Everyone concerned in the writing and production is equally responsible for the humor. There has been constant co-ordination, with all working for the desired result as one well oiled machine. But the comedy is decidedly not machine like. It pops at you in a reiteration of inspired flashes.

When an exhibitor shows this one he had better tie his roof down.—F. T.

Urban Movie Chats No. 30

Of particular interest, as there has been so much carried in the news of the day about the coal strike, is a section of this "Chat" which shows coal mining in Pennsylvania. The way drilling into the coal vein is done, and then the blasting, and finally the rough hewn coal being sent to a special department of the works to be put through a system of "refining," are all shown in the film.

There are also other interesting views, such as the Pan American building at Washington, D. C., motor-boat racing with the little craft shooting by at 45 miles an hour, and some films of the inhabitants of a hamlet in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Tennessee.—T. S. daP.

"The Mystery of the Sphinx"

For the student of astronomy in its relation to ancient history there is a wealth of information and interest in this picture which O. C. Getsinger has prepared. After many years of scientific research he has placed his discoveries before the public in an unusual and effective manner. The result, even to the uninformed, is startling and fascinating. At present the film and the titles are in a form designed more for educational institutions. If plans for theatrical distribution are completed by George H. Wiley, who is now considering this, the film will be re-titled so as to be within the mental grasp of the average theatregoer. When this is accomplished it will offer substantial entertainment on any program.—M. K.

"Such Is Life at a Dutch County Fair"

Subject matter that lends itself with unusual success to Hy Mayer's particular skill has been used in this F. B. O. Travelaugh. The humor is more spontaneous than ever. Many of the types do not need the artist's pen to bring out the fun as he has chosen some naturally amusing sights, but the ones which he has caricatured show more real humor and less effort than some of the earlier sketches. There is beauty, too, in some of the Delft water scenes, and an atmosphere of restfulness that is pleasant. The subject will be of value on any program and especially in instances where the feature is a serious drama. It has already proved to be good entertainment and when first shown brought applause which even the feature attraction did not win.—M. K.

"Their First Vacation"

Carter De Haven has seldom appeared to better advantage than he does in "Their First Vacation," a two-reel Robertson-Cole comedy for F. B. O. With his wife beside him, but not figuring so largely as usual in the pictured trend of events, De Haven easily succeeds in entertaining, from the first scenes of his meeting with old sweethearts to the final scene of his triumph over the bluecoats who have locked him up on suspicion of theft. The subtitles are short and breezy and aid greatly in bringing the laughs.—S.S.

"The Eskimo"

Clyde Cook crowds some really great humor into some of the scenes in this burlesque on a popular feature picture of the frozen North. Getting acclimated proves a source of suffering and his mock heroism is extremely funny. There are many cleverly-wrought situations and the novelty of the material and settings is a great point in favor. The impression prevails that the subject could be shortened and thereby add to the success, as in a few places it seems thin, while in other spots it is crowded with real humor. Almost any type of audience will find plenty of amusement in it, however, as it now stands. Produced by Fox. —M. K.

"Soak the Sheik"

This is a clever burlesque on the prevalent Sheik pictures. It is a one-reeler distributed by Pathe and stars Paul Parrott. There is considerable fun of a knockabout type and several laughs obtained by the star who has his camel equipped with a radio set. Things happen fast and furiously when the young American invades the desert encampment and finally gallops away with the sheik's favorite wife. —C. S. S.

"Come and Get Me"

If you want a good Western in two reels, with action, human interest and a bit of comedy, you will be able to make splendid use of Pathe's "Come and Get Me." Leo Maloney is featured in this subject, which is one of the Range Rider series. The story has a pleasing opening and proceeds with heavy fighting, quick riding and a romance that has been neatly blended in with the action. Josephine Hill is one important reason for the success of the love motive. The hero's task is to exonerate himself from the intriguing designs of his fellow ranchmen, and when he finds that the easiest way to beat them is to leave them, he does this with the inference that he will meet them later—which he does. Leo Maloney gives an energetic account of himself in what follows.—M. K.

"West Is Worst"

A good deal of lively action takes this picture along at a rapid rate. There's not a moment when there isn't something doing, and many of the stunts are laughable. Besides the sets, particularly in the first part of the picture, are very elaborate for a two-reeler. These three details, together with clever titling, make the film a production that would fit in with almost any program. The acting is good, featuring an all-star cast which includes Spottiswoode Aitken, Jack Richardson, Eddie Barry, Helen Darling and Gale Henry. Released by the East Coast Productions.—T. S. daP.

"Tepee Town"

One of the most artistic pictures seen recently at the Capitol Theatre, New York, is "Tepee Town," C. C. Burr's Indian fantasy. For the most part impressionistic or descriptive of the American Indians and the surroundings in which they lived, it has beauty and human interest. Samuel Rothafel obtained an exceedingly striking effect by projecting it on scrim lighted from the rear. The picture is in one reel.—S. S.

"Riding the Goat"

The well-known goat of slapstick fame is introduced in different style in this Mutt and Jeff cartoon. It should get many laughs. Mutt has a ride on the merry-go-round, but discovers presently that his fun is mitigated when he finds that the animal he is riding is a live one. The rest of the comedy is equally spontaneous and indicates that Fox has an offering here that is easily salable.—M. K.

"Wet Weather"

There is a lot of rough and tumble and knockabout comedy in this single reel Hal Roach starring Paul Parrott and released by Pathe. The fun occurs in and around a garage which is used by a young married couple as their home. Rains and high winds play havoc with everything finally blowing the garage away and the hero chases after it and brings it back on a truck. It is up to the average of the majority of subjects in which this star has appeared. There is some good stuff all over the side of a high cliff.—C. S. S.

"The Blanket Stiff"

"The Blanket Stiff," another of Robert C. Bruce's two-reel Wilderness Tales for Educational release, is interesting chiefly for the glimpse it affords of harvesting in Eastern Oregon. Its story is very slight, dealing with a New York book-keeper who could not resist the call of the open and became a nomad. The views of the harvesting adequately portray how those great machines in use in the West, cut the grain, thresh and bag it. These are fascinating. —S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Sioux Falls, S. Dakota

From our old friend G. W. Bennowitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, comes a long, but remarkably excellent letter. I want you take-but-won't-give chaps who read this to hold a conference with yourselves and ask yourselves whether it would not be a blessing if all of you sent in letters along these lines. Unless you are utterly hopeless his letter will help you.

It will set you thinking along several helpful lines, and set you thinking in the right direction. Brother Bennewitz probably is no more capable than are you but he is NOT a tight-wad ,with his knowledge.

He tries to (and does) help you. You, in turn, accept that help—or I hope you do—and give nothing in return. Wake up, get busy and help the profession which gives you your daily bread by contributing your mite.

The man in Battle Creek can perhaps contribute an idea which will help the man in Vancouver, San Diego, Tampa, and even in far-off New Zealand, Australia and other countries, and that, too, without in the least degree working injury to himself. He in fact does just the opposite, for his effort brightens his own brain and helps the profession he is vitally interested in.

Bennewitz suggests my trimming his letter. It can't be done, not even though it consumes an entire issue of our department. Here is what he says:

I am just finishing a general overhauling of the projection equipment here, taking in every thing from the main line feeders to the exhaust fan. Pulled down my motor generator set for the first time in five and one-half years that it has been in service, running ten and one-half hours a day. The commutator has never been dressed down and is as good as the day that it was installed. Have just installed the third set of brushes, getting a little better than two and one-half years of service out of each set.

Try This

Here is what I have been using on the commutator. I went to the butcher shop and got a piece of raw pig hide and scraped off all of the fat. I then let it dry out for a few days so that it would not be too oily. Another way is to take a light grade of canvas, shave a small amount of candle wax (do not use too much wax as it requires very little) evenly over the surface and lay it on the top of the lamp house until the wax is thoroughly melted into the canvas. I have had very good results when using either of the above.

Notice This

The outside motor bearing on the generator set was getting a little too hot and when I pulled out the armature I found the cause. Oil from the bearing had worked out along the shaft and was thrown by centrifugal force onto the field windings. This made the dust stick so that you could not blow it out with the bellows. This hindered proper ventilation of the motor, causing the armature to heat, transmitting the heat to the shaft and then to the bearing. After cleaning this out and reassembling it has given no trouble.

Uses Vacuum Cleaner

For cleaning out dust from a generator set, or carbon dust and ash from the lamp house use a vacuum cleaner. Preferably one with blower and suction attachments.

Good Dope

I have watched with interest the articles on the use of graphite on projector gears. The greatest fault has been improper use and impure graphite. When using graphite on gears that are not inclosed they should be washed out at least once a week. Graphite will adhere to the gears better than oil and when improperly used will ruin a set of gears in a very short time, but when a good pure grade is properly used it can't be beat. Oil will keep the gears cleaner with less attention, owing to the fact that oil has a tendency to wash the gears to a certain extent. By all means use a graphite that is recommended by the manufacturer.

Texaco Oil Good

I have used several different brands of oil on projectors, with different results. But find that the Texaco oil is the best all around oil. This oil was recommended in the department some time ago. It is put out by the Texas Co., Port Arthur, Texas, and may be bought in one- and five-gallon sealed cans. When buying oil state the kind you want and see that you get what you ask for. The best way to buy it is in sealed cans. There then is no danger of getting a cheap, inferior oil.

Read This

In July 8th issue Friend Hilton told how to use the rewind to pull apart loose patches. Here are several things that must be kept in mind: 1. With a one-eighth or one-quarter H. P. motor you have a great pulling power. 2. With properly adjusted take-up the film is not taken up tight on the takeup reel. 3. Will Projectionists use common sense regarding the amount of tension they use. 4. The brake action is from one thousand to two thousand feet away from the pulling power if the film is not wound tight. 5. Damage to film from slipping.

I made the following test on a regular Simplex rewind, motor driven. I loosened eight patches in the following manner: Three from edge to center, two from center to sprocket holes, two from each edge to center, one from edge to sprocket hole on other side. I rewound this reel with my regular rewind brake tension with no results. I rewound it again adding 25 lbs. pressure to the regular tension, with the result that it pulled apart one patch, and that was the last one listed above. Next I took a two-thousand-foot reel of film from the take-up and started to rewind it with the 25 lbs. pressure added to regular tension. As soon as the motor was started the film started to crawl showing what damage will be done if this practice is followed.

There are several film cleaning pads on the market that will pull apart loose patches as they clean the film, and will put the tension on the film at a point between the two reels, where it should be. But here we are again. Will they keep clean pads on them? We must keep in mind the fact that the less you come in contact with the film between the sprocket holes the better. This fact is borne throughout all projectors.

A Suggestion

The following is just a suggestion. I do not say that it will work, but it is possible. Make two sets of shoes, mounting one set on a base between the two reels on the rewind. Make guide rollers to guide the film over this set. Hinge the other set so that it will swing into place over the first set and apply tension to the upper set. This I think would work out O. K., but there are many things to work on, such as length of shoes, how to apply tension that is adjustable, guiding the film so as not to damage it.

Well, Richardson, I started this letter "Just a few lines," but my brakes need relining. I will let you do the eliminating.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Interesting Question

John FitzMaurice, Minneapolis, Minnesota, asks an interesting question. He says:

Have had an argument. Have a bet up and we have agreed to submit the matter to you for decision. The wager is a substantial one, hence we ask that you render an opinion strictly in accordance with the facts.

The question is: What is the relative area of the film photograph in the aperture of the projector and the image on the screen, and what is the relative proportion of light passing through the aperture and that received by the screen, or any portion of the screen. What we are discussing is the relative brilliancy of the photograph at the aperture and the image on the screen.

Friend FitzMaurice, the question you ask is an interesting one, and but for the last few words of it I could have confined my answer to the statement that the screen will receive all the light passing through the aperture, less (A) such loss as there may be through the projection lens not covering the entire beam—a portion of the light from the aperture being directed outside the lens. (B) the loss inherent in the projection lens itself, which is about four per cent. per surface of glass, not counting the two cemented surfaces, which lose about one-half of one per cent., plus about one-half of one per cent. per glass for absorption, and whatever light the rotating shutter may cut off—usually approximatcly fifty per cent.

To this must be added a certain absorption due to impurities in the atmosphere, which cannot even be estimated, since it is a highly variable factor.

What G. E. Says

However, this is not just what you want, I think. Your real question may best be answered by quoting verbatim from page 7 of Bulletin 33A, issued by the Engineering Department of the National Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, which is a treatise on motion picture projection with mazda lamps, which may be had, gratis, I believe, by addressing the National Lamp Works, Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio. The work is by H. H. Magdsick and C. E. Egeler. The quotation is

"The area of the image on the screen in motion picture theatres is usually from 25,000 to 60,000 times that of the print on the film. Moreover the projection lens absorbs some of the light, and nearly one-half of the remainder is absorbed by the rotating shutter, with the result that the quantity of light passing through a unit area of the film, when all of it is directed to the objective, must be from 70,000 to 170,000 times that received by each unit area of the screen."

Somewhat of a surprise to you all to be told that each unit of the "spot" is from 70,000 to 170,000 times as brilliant as each unit of the screen, what?

A Telegram

The following telegram speaks for itself. Friend Gelman is with the Dwyer Brothers & Company, Cincinnati:

Cincinnati, Ohio, August 29, 1922.
F. H. Richardson,
516 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

Congratulations. Your Hand Book wonderful. Will be standard of world and deserves it.

J. Simplex Gelman.

He later supplemented the wire with a letter, excerpts from which read:

F. H. Richardson.
Moving Picture World,
515 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dear Richardson: New handbook of projection received. It certainly is all you claim it to be. You say it took two or three years of hard work to make it, and it certainly does look as though it took all of that.

There can be no question but that it is in a class by itself, and is the most complete book of its kind in existence. The writer feels sure it will long remain the peer of projectionists' reference books.

We wish to congratulate you upon your wonderful book, and trust you will enjoy the success your great effort deserves.

One cannot but feel thankful when such absolutely unsolicited commendations come. Friend Gelman is well known in the middle West, where he was for a long while a motion picture projectionist. The book is moving out fast and I am rather anxiously awaiting for the verdict of its purchasers. I feel that all commendations will be thoroughly honest, for one will hardly pay six dollars for a book and feel satisfied unless it really is good.

Tell Him Secret

Kenneth Brooks (at least it looks like it might be Brooks), Nelson Theatre, Fairmont, West Virginia, says:

Have obtained many excellent ideas from the department, though have never communicated therewith. Have one of your old handbooks; also have ordered a new one, but have not yet received it. Am getting anxious.

Have just installed a new Mazda equipment and must say it is great. I, however, have one trouble. Our local power plant is loaded very heavily, and we are unable to keep our amperage up to thirty, which, of course, does not add anything to screen brilliancy.

On Saturday nights it is much worse than at other times. Amperage then drops as low as twenty-six. I suppose there is nothing I can do to remedy this condition, but if there is please tell me the secret.

When everything is O. K. we get an excellent light, though the projection distance is 100 feet and we are handicapped by having lenses of too small diameter. I fear I will be unable to convince the manager of the advisability of purchasing lenses of larger diameter.

For Projectionist to Decide

Your manager will pay many times the price of the larger lenses if he does not get them. It is a part of the duty of the projectionist to decide matters of this kind. Why does a manager employ a projectionist if he is unwilling to depend upon his judgment in matter pertaining to projection?

Do Not Understand

Many theatre managers do not understand the very simple proposition that a better screen presentation will bring added patronage to the box office, and if by clinging to improper lenses the screen image is injured to an extent which only causes the loss of the sale of one seat a day, that, at twenty-five cents per seat, means ninety-one (91) dollars a year, and surely under the conditions you are confronted with the injury to screen results will do all that and much more.

As to the matter of amperage, I would suggest that you write the manufacturer of the apparatus direct, and see if they can provide a current controlling device of wider range. That is your only hope, and I guess it's a busted reed before you ever start. However, try it anyhow.

The trouble is that the voltage drops, and from what you say I guess it is a drop at the power house. If not, then something is too small somewhere. Maybe it is wiring and maybe a transformer. Most likely it is the generators themselves, however, in which case only a current controlling device of wider range can help you.

S. M. P. E. Program

The fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be held in Powers' Hotel, Rochester, New York, October 9 to 12, inclusive. The following titles of papers to be read has been received. It is only a portion of the proposed program.

A Motion Analyzer, by Dr. Hermann Kellner.

Accurate Methods for Expressing the Performance of Lenses, by Wilbur B. Rayton.

A Demonstration Model for Showing Lens and Condenser Action in the Motion Picture Projector, by Sander Stark.

Practical Effects of Distance of Projection and Projection Angle, by F. H. Richardson.

A New Sensitometer for the determining of Exposure in Positive Printing, by L. A. Jones and J. I. Crabtree.

Standard Dimensions and Characteristics of a New Film for Home Motion Picture Use, by Dr. C. E. K. Mees.

Standardization of Positive Density and Printing Exposure, by L. A. Jones.

A Good Start

We thus see that a good start is already made for a most interesting and instructive program. The attendance is expected to be very large.

The House Manager Pays His Respects to the House Seating

THE house manager was listening to the organist rehearsing for the afternoon's performance when the boss slipped into the seat beside him and opened up with a tale of woe.

"I thought that new fellow down the street was bragging over his attendance until I sized up his show the other night. But, by golly, the pirate is telling the truth and is packing his house for every show. I wonder how he does it. We're running a better program, our music is better and we've a couple hundred more seats."

"I think I've an idea of where a part of the trouble lies," said the manager. "Let's see if we can figure out a solution."

"All right," said the owner who had been fidgeting around for the last few seconds. "Let's go over to the office where we can hold a comfortable clinic."

They adjourned to the office; the owner tilted back in his chair and produced the cigars. "Go to it," he said.

Said a Mouthful.

The manager grinned. "When you suggested that we come into the office and be comfortable, you said a mouthful and the joke of it is that you never knew it."

"Knew what?" queried the owner.

"That you had put your finger on one of the sore spots of your house," said the manager. "You could not sit still and think comfortably for five minutes in one of the seats in which you expect your patrons to enjoy the show and come back for more. When you want to give about as much attention to business as your patrons expect to be able to give to the screen, you find it necessary to occupy a chair that makes you feel thoroughly comfortable, and yet you calmly expect the audience to appreciate a program while they are squeezed into seats that are a cross between early Puritan architecture and one of the devilish designs of the Spanish inquisition."

"Gwan," said the owner. "Quit your crape hanging."

"I'm not doing any crape hanging," said the manager. "I'm simply trying to tell you that you have one extremely over-developed nerve to expect your patrons to stand for a chair that you cannot sit in yourself.

"Maybe it never struck you that people who come to this house find themselves mighty uncomfortable after the first half hour. But the patrons know it and they find a difference between viewing a fairly good show comfortably and attempting to enjoy a good one while every muscle in their body is getting more and more cramped and a lot of them finally decided on more comfort and less art and their tickets are coming out of the other fellow's cash register."

"Well, what would you do about it?" asked the owner.

"I would rip out every blamed one of the abominable desolations that are putting a crimp in your box office records and install really comfortable seats and while I was about it, I wouldn't try to see how many chairs I could crowd into the house either.

Primitive Introduction Method

"You remember the story about the boy who tried to grab so many cherries out of a jar that he could not get his hand out until he had let about half of them go. Well, you've been trying the same trick right here. You tried to see how many chairs you could get on one floor and, as a result, you've not only several rows down in front that nobody would ever take, but you've got your rows just as close together as the law will allow, so that everybody gets acquainted with everybody else by the primitive method of stepping on each other's feet and squashing each other's hats.

"Just take it for granted that you have some waste space in the house but that there is no earthly use in trying to fill it up with seating at so much per seat. Give plenty of room between the rows and when buying your seating try and get something both artistic and comfortable. But if you must make a compromise, make it in favor of comfort. When a man wants a straight jacket, his friends usually send him to an asylum and if anyone wants to be jammed and stepped on, he can get that kind of treatment on a trolley car for five cents and it's a wasteful expenditure of money to try to buy it from a theatre at about six times the price."

Competition Alters Circumstances

"Have a heart," said the owner. "Have you any idea what those seats cost us?"

"I don't know what they cost you originally," said the manager, "but I do know what they're costing you right now in lost admissions and that's the important point. That old seating paid for itself long ago. The seats were all right when you got them, but they're a decided liability now. The chances are that more than half the patrons realize the fact that they're the sole and only reason why they feel more tired after having seen a picture on your screen than on the other fellow's. Besides, you've got competition today and you can't get away with a lot of things that you could when you were the only show in this neighborhood. My advice is to get fewer chairs, get better ones and spread them out."

"You sure are rough on the bank account," said the owner, "but maybe there is something in what you say after all."

Wendt's Sign Dope

Harold F. Wendt, managing director, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, O., is not superstitious, yet has a strong belief in signs—and makes his own.

He has just written us as follows:

Owners of small theatres, whose financial means are more limited than those of the large theatres, need not feel bad when the theatre across the street installs a large changeable letter sign. "Roll your own," as it were.

I couldn't see paying several hundred dollars for such a sign, but still wanted and needed one. At a total cost of slightly less than five dollars I constructed one that will stack up with the best of them. It is made of wood and shaped like a box with the front side open.

The inside is lined with asbestos. It is also wired with a series of lamps. Grooves carry small pieces of window glass measuring six by 12, which were gone over with white lead and stippled before dry so that a fine imitation of frosted glass resulted. The letters were then stencilled in and the background painted out with two coats of black paint. My sign carries two banks of 12 letters each.

It's a pippin' and attracts no little attention.

A Robert Morton and Simplexes Constitute Blue Mouse Features

WITH the opening of the Blue Mouse Theatre in Astoria, Oregon, August 12th, John Hamrick put into operation his fourth Blue Mouse house in the Northwest.

The theatre was erected on the site of the old Sunset building on a lot 50x120. It seats 628 and represents an investment of about $35,000. The building is largely of concrete construction, simple and effective from the exterior, and is a little gem inside.

The color scheme is old-rose and French gray, with French gray air cushion opera chairs upholstered in Spanish blue leather. Specially designed old rose panels in silk stencil effects cover the walls, six artglass windows on either side, centre in these panels. At the top of each of the eight pilasters are bowls that flood the ceiling with diffused light.

The stage, which is twelve feet deep, twenty-two feet wide and eighteen feet high, is carpeted in special old rose carpet as are the aisles and foyer. Five layers of padding under the foyer and aisle carpets add to the luxury and comfort.

All Lights On Dimmers

The stage is equipped with footlights and border lights. Foyer lanterns and floor lamps were especially designed and are very effective. All lights in the house, theatre, foyer and orchestra room are on dimmers, the control of which can be operated automatically from the projection room, as is also curtain control.

The curtain is of rich velour, bordered with gold galoon and bearing the Blue Mouse monogram in gold. All drapes are also of old rose velours. The clock, directly above the centre of the stage, has its face painted black and the numerals and hands white, which gives a radium effect when the lights are dimmed.

The seats are all on one floor, with two side aisles. Projection rooms are on the balcony floor, ladies' rest rooms and men's smoking rooms to the right and left of foyer. Ladies' rooms are handsomely equipped with reed furniture, upholstered in old rose velvet. Aisle lights under the arms of the opera chairs provide additional comfort to patrons when the house is dark. Exit signs are of art glass.

A Robert Morton Organ

A Robert Morton organ has been installed and organ grilles are in lattice effect, directly over the front aisle exits.

The projection room is equipped with two Simplex Projectors, Snaplite lenses and Transverters. A 12x16 screen is used.

The marquise extends over the entire front. Hanging flower baskets are suspended from it, and flower boxes extend across the front and sides at the top. Nine rows of electric lights furnish the illumination. Two changeable letter electric signs across the sides of the marquise, at top, give the name of the attraction, and a twenty-eight-foot sign, reading "Blue Mouse," is erected perpendicularly above the marquise.

The marble ticket booth in the centre of the lobby is of movable construction. It is lined with old rose velours and furnished with an automaticket machine. The floor of the lobby is of rubber tile, with aisle strips of rubber extending to the doors.

Distributing the Overhead

To the right of the lobby a little Film Shop, dealing in kodaks, helps to defray part of the overhead. To the left is the outside entrance to the manager's office on the balcony. F. C. O'Keefe, formerly of Billings, Montana, is manager.

A pressure ventilating system is used. All ushers, door men and attendants wear the regulation Blue Mouse uniforms. The entire atmosphere of the house is of quiet refinement.

The firm of B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle, was placed in charge of hangings, drapes, special lighting fixtures and projection equipment. They have served Mr. Hamrick in this capacity for his houses in Seattle, Portland and Tacoma.

Since its opening the Astoria house has played to capacity.

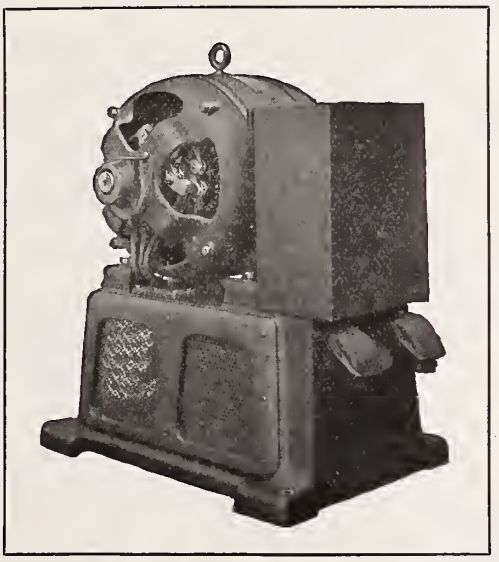
It's to their eyes you are selling!

THE patrons of your theatre, the people who decide whether you are to be a failure or a success, whether your theatre or the "other theatre" is to be the leading one in town, make their decision on what they see — what they see on your screen.

Your imposing foyer with all its spaciousness, your soft plush carpet which gives that feeling of elegance and luxury, your courteous ushers, comfortable seats and music that ranges from soul soothing to soul stirring — all of them help you to please your patrons. But they are all incidental.

Only what you show on the screen is vital!

That is what makes them leave their comfortable homes to spend their hours with you. And what they see depends not only upon what pictures you select, but also on the light you use to project those pictures.



Wagner White-Light Converter, Type S. C. Contains converter, transformer element and starting switch. Ballast resistance, polarity switch and ammeter are included as part of the equipment and furnished in separate units.

If you use the proper light, your pictures will show clearly and pleasingly. Or by improper light, you can tire their eyes with variations in intensity, flickers and "spots". And what otherwise would have been a pleasant evening is turned into a tiresome one.

Wagner Quality

The Wagner White-Light Converter provides from alternating current a clear, brilliant white light for projection. The light it furnishes is steady, even at change-over and is conveniently controlled.

We have made a study of this subject and have published it in book form. The title is "Light For Motion Picture Projection" and we would like to send you a copy of it. If you are at all interested in this vital subject, use the coupon below.

No 'Bugs' Were in the Hallberg Equipment

In our issue of August 19 appeared an article entitled "Nanook, Made by Primitive Methods."

In describing Mr. Flaherty's outfit, a typographical error was made by which the Hallberg portable generating plant and portable projector was spelled "Hallbug. ' '

This was particularly unfortunate, as anyone who has had any experience with these Hallberg outfits knows that there are no "bugs" associated with them.

The successful experience of Mr. Flaherty with his Hallberg apparatus constitutes a mighty fine testimonial to its ability to give wonderful service under very trying conditions.

Insure Your Theatre Against a Dark House

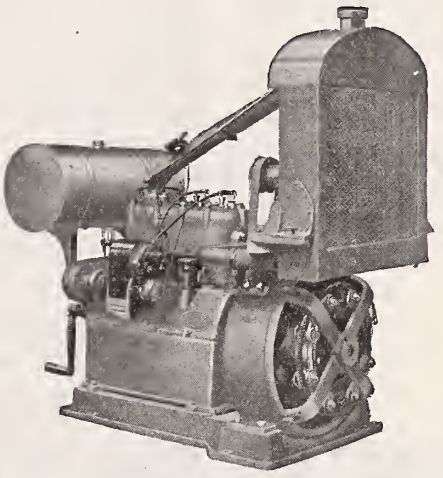
You carry fire insurance—life insurance—but what insurance have you against a dark house?

Every exhibitor faces the possibility of a dark house due to interruption of central station juice. Four Albany, New York, houses recently lost 8,000 admissions. Similar occurrences happen almost every day.

But the worst is yet to come. . . . Actual reports show that a serious coal shortage is imminent, even if the coal strike is settled at once. Many central stations will be short on coal, causing interruption in electric service.

You can buy insurance against a dark house, and your policy will be a Universal Electric Plant for generating your own current.

Universal



FOUR Cylinder Electric Plants

(Sizes for All Requirements)

are especially designed to meet the requirements of the exhibtior. The smooth, quiet running four-cylinder engine affords a steady flow of smooth, direct current, which is so essential for projecting a good picture.

Universals are in operation the world over. Some exhibitors even attribute their success to the good projection and dependable service of the Universal Electric Plant.

When writing give all information possible about the electrical requirements of your theatre in order that our Engineering Department can recommend the proper size and type plant.

TransVerteR
TRADE MARK

Reduces Your Power Bill and Makes Better Pictures

Motion picture projection in theatres the country over has greatly improved since the perfection of TransVerteR—the original series arc M-G outfit, which set a new standard for the entire industry.

TransVerteR changes alternating current into direct current which is more suitable for projection arcs. It automatically supplies only such voltage as is needed for the arc, and no wasteful, current consuming ballast is used. It uses less current than any other device, and is therefore more economical to operate.

It is easily adjusted for light and dark portions of film. TransVerteR gives the projectionist perfect arcs, clear-white, steady light that is easily directed and controlled. It makes possible the projection of clear, sharp-lined pictures which patrons appreciate and come again to enjoy.

ABSOLUTELY SINCERE AND PRACTICAL PRAISE OF POWER'S PROJECTORS

No. 515. Vol. XX. THE CINEMA, LONDON, ENG. THURSDAY, AUGUST 24, 1922

WHAT THE OPERATOR SHOULD KNOW ABOUT HIS PROJECTOR

By C. H. DAVIES,
(Late Cine-Technical Expert, International Committee of the American Y. M. C. A.)

In the last issue I urged the need—and it is a vital one—for raising the status of the cinema operator, or as I prefer to call him, projectionist. And in so doing, I pointed out that such improvement could, under present conditions, only come about as a result of initiative movement on the part of exhibitors. I say, with a knowledge born of many years' practical experience, that the most ruinously expensive encumbrance to any picture theatre is an incompetent, careless, or discontented projectionist. He can do more harm to business in one month than an inexperienced manager can accomplish in six. Managerial incapacity may damage the prestige of a house in the long run, but faulty projection is working havoc during every hour that the house is open.

Perhaps one of the most potent causes of imperfect projection is to be found in the brevity of time allowed for care and study of the projector, the veritable heart of the system. Sometimes the "operator" is called upon to do so many jobs around the theatre that he is led to neglect his own department, but more often he is disinclined to make more than a perfunctory study of the delicate and exacting piece of machinery upon which very largely rests the success or otherwise of the screen presentment. It is in the hope that a deeper interest may be aroused in the vital functions of the cine-mechanism, and that a fuller understanding of its character may lead to greater care and better pictorial presentment, that I pen these explanatory notes.

For the purpose of my first descriptive analysis, I propose to deal with the Power's No. 6. And I make that particular selection because actual experience has proved to me that it is one of the most perfect, reliable, and durable projectors on the market, if given a modicum of care and attention. Of the "hardy" qualities of the Power's No. 6 I was afforded striking evidence during my charge of the Cinematograph Section of the American Expeditionary Force, Y. M. C. A. Thirty-five of these machines were returned to me at the Base; most of them had been either buried in the trenches or under water, and all were more or less corroded into utter uselessness. Yet after I had taken apart, cleaned, repaired and re-assembled these machines, no fewer than 32 were returned to France and Russia in perfect running order. A more searching test would scarcely be easy to find. Figure 1 gives a general "close-up" of the Power's No. 6 from the gate aspect.

For the purpose of my first descriptive analysis, I propose to deal with the Power's No. 6. And I make that particular selection because actual experience has proved to me that it is one of the most perfect, reliable, and durable projectors on the market, if given a modicum of care and attention. Of the "hardy" qualities of the Power's No. 6 I was afforded striking evidence during my charge of the Cinematograph Section of the American Expeditionary Force, Y. M. C. A. Thirty-five of these machines were returned to me at the Base; most of them had been either buried in the trenches or under water, and all were more or less corroded into utter uselessness. Yet after I had taken apart, cleaned, repaired and re-assembled these machines, no fewer than 32 were returned to France and Russia in perfect running order. A more searching test would scarcely be easy to find.

The constantcy of motion of this machine is often remarked by those who use it, and the secret of this is in the intermittent movement, which differs greatly from the method usually employed. Within a grease-tight casing the driving element revolves; a cam of hardened steel, diamond in shape, which engages the pins of a cross mounted on the end of the intermittent spindle. The cross and pins are cut from one block of steel so that the pins remain fixedly in precise relation to the cam. The motion of cam and cross is so smooth and devoid of friction that it is almost noiseless, and the travel of the film is not only more rapid but there is less strain on the perforations than with many other types. Careful study of this movement by means of Figures II and III will result in a clearer understanding of the chief function of a projector.

Second only in importance to the intermittent movement is the film feed, and an intelligent grasp of the principles underlying this will go far to minimize the chances of trouble while running. It will be understood, of course, that the purpose of the intermittent sprocket is to transmit the movement of cross and cam to the film in order that its travel may synchronize with the operation of the shutter. But the important work of the top and bottom feed sprockets is not usually so well appreciated. The condition of the top feed sprocket and its relationship to its rollers governs the feed to the intermittent action, and perfect engagement of the film is a sine qua non of "sweet" running. Adjustment of the gate springs to the exact pressure necessary to ensure smooth passage of the film without putting strain upon the edges of joins is a point calling for careful study. Films vary not only in thickness, but also in condition, and the extra trouble of adjusting the pressure to the film is well worth the while; it is not difficult, and it makes for good results on the screen.

The function of the "take-up" sprocket is important, and care in seeing that the film is firmly engaging and that the idler roller lies snug is time well spent "Jumping" of the loop will thus be guarded against, and the possihility of failure of the take-up minimized. In the Power's No. 6 mechanism it will be found that the idler rollers are so arranged that pressure upon the moving film is obviated, while the adjustment is so fine that the rising of the film from the sprockets is practically an impossibility.

"MANSLAUGHTER," RIVOLI'S BIG HIT

Cecil B. De Mille Has Turned Out Remarkable Motion Picture From the Popular Novel.

CAST IS WELL BALANCED

Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy, Lois Wilson and Several Others Score Individual Hits.

By R. W. BAREMORE.

Cecil B. DeMille's latest, and perhaps greatest, production, "Manslaughter," is at the Rivoli this week, and from all indications that theatre will enjoy one of the biggest weeks of its career. Yesterday afternoon the S. R. O. sign was out early, the house was jammed for the early showing and there was considerable of a crowd on line waiting to get in.

All of which speaks well for the drawing power of the DeMille name, and it must be said right here and now that the producer will not disappoint his legion of admirers in this screen version of Alice Duer Miller's novel. Far from it, for here is a really great picture. Great in its dramatic power, in its action, production and greatest of all in its direction. It runs, we should say, about seven reels, and there is not a dull moment during the hour and a half that the picture is on the silver sheet. There is action at all times, and here and there truly breathless minutes, as for example the thrilling smash-up, between the speeding, skidding auto and the motorcycle. This and many other bits work one up to a high pitch of excitement. Then there are those scenes that bring a tear to the eye, the ones showing Lois Wilson as the mother with her sick boy, a shot or two in the prison and some scenes after a court trial. Yes, it is a great picture, one that DeMille may well be proud of and a positive treat for the film fans of the country.

Mr. DeMille has not been sparing in his elaborate scenes and has fully lived up to his past reputation in such matters. There are some startling views of Roman revels, staged with several hundred people on the set, that rival anything of their kind ever photographed. Also there are one or two shots of a New Year's Eve party at a modern road house that will make many a spectator wish he knew where the place was located.

"Manslaughter" cannot be too highly recommended. It is one of the finest pictures ever shown on Broadway and surely will satisfy the most exacting patron of the motion picture theatre.

Read this:

FROM NEW YORK GLOBE
(Sept. 11)

"They were turning them away" from the Capitol yesterday. "The Hound of the Baskervilles" was inside on the screen and without were crowds of perspiring humanity awaiting the thrill that comes from seeing a familiar story made visual. How cold were the chills that crept up and down the spines of the audiences that came and went from noon till midnight we are unable to say—

You can turn 'em away, too!

Short Subjects are Half the Show

No matter how good the feature picture, how fine the story, or how prominent the name of the star may be, such a picture is only half of a motion picture theatre program.

The other half is comprised of Short Subjects, such as the news reel, the scenic drama, the comedy, the specialties in short length.

You are entitled to a whole evening's entertainment, and will get it at theatres whose owners pay for high quality throughout their entire programs and give as careful thought to the Short Subjects as they do to the feature.

These conscientious exhibitors select their Short Subjects from this list of guaranteed entertainment-value motion pictures:

AIM AT THE 100% SHOW

"How many shows were saved last year by short subjects? How many exhibitors had to count on the comedy or novelty reel for the words of commendation that tell them when patrons are coming back again?

"Don't exercise the utmost of judgment and shrewd showmanship on the selection of your feature attraction now—and then decide to 'take a chance' on the short subjects as they come along.

"That's only half doing your job.

"Book short subjects that are worthy of it—then advertise them! There are opportunities here for creating a following that will bridge over many a weak offering."

Wyndham Standing, the star, George Fawcett, Dorothy Mackaill and Warner Richmond. These are the central figures of "The Isle of Doubt."

It starts on Park Avenue and ends on a tropical island where a faithless wife makes her final choice between husband and lover. It combines the appeal of a society drama with the lure and adventure of the South Seas.

The Motion Picture News, September 2nd, says, "This is a picture much above the average of those released by the veteran producers. It possesses a cast of first water. Their names mean something when displayed in advertising."

"A Rogue's Romance"
Vitagraph—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

TAKING advantage of Rodolph Valentino's phenomenal rise to fame, Vitagraph is reviving this production of other days, and in billing the picture is giving "The Perfect Lover" equal prominence with the star, Earl Williams. This is all well and good and fine business practice, but Williams is the boy who does the work. It was as a dancer that Valentino first won public attention and in this feature he gyrates through a couple of wild Apache dances, in which his fair partner undergoes some rough treatment, and otherwise distinguishes himself in the role of The Ferret, a Montmartre hard-boiled egg. The girls will undoubtedly rush to see Rody dance, so this picture has a real box office value.

So much for the Valentino end. To Earl William however, goes the honor of portraying a very entertaining character, that of M. Picard, master criminal. Williams dominates every scene and it is Earl at his best.

The atmosphere of Paris has been fairly well transferred to the screen. The Cafe D'Or being a colorful underworld setting for the Valentino dances. There are some elaborate shots at a fashionable hotel. The story is one that holds the interest throughout. It deals mostly with the theft and recovery of pearl necklaces and the capture of a band of grafters. The exposure of the plot and subsequent escape of Picard forms a dramatic climax. James Young directed this one. That is a decided asset. The thing for exhibitors to do when they book this one is not to overplay the Valentino end too much.

The Cast

M. Picard .....Earl Williams
The Ferret .....Rodolph Valentino
Helene DuPrenay.....Katherine Adams
M. Henri DuVal.....Brinsley Shaw
Jeanne Derneau .....Maud George

By H. H. Van Loan. Scenario and direction by James Young.

The Story—M. Picard, a master criminal, antagonizes The Ferrett, a dangerous Apache. The Ferret in return hounds Picard, informing the police of his every move. Picard always outwits the police and escapes. A girl induces Picard to turn his powers to the aid of society. He helps the police capture a dangerous band of grafters as well as recover a valuable pearl necklace. He is cornered several times, but always gets away.

Classification—One of those interesting French crook stories that always appeal.

Production Highlights—The Apache dances performed by Valentino and a sprightly little partner. The work of Earl Williams as Picard, the criminal. The exciting escapes. The theft and discovery of the necklace. The fine photography, direction and lighting effects. The correct Montmartre atmosphere. The thrilling climax.

THE MOHICAN'S DAUGHTER

From the Story of Jees-Uck
by JACK LONDON

Directed by S. E. V. Taylor
Produced by P. T. B. Inc.

EXHIBITORS are getting good box-office results from this Jack London story. This isn't a matter of our saying so; its a matter of printed record that you read in the box-office report departments in the trade journals.

In Amusements, Minneapolis, you find this:

"Well directed and with a good plot, this picture drew better than any picture we have played in two months. Print in perfect condition."

In Exhibitors Herald you read:

"They surely like this one. I have cleaned up with both of the 'Mohican' pictures—Taylor's Jack London story and Tourneur's. Where does anyone get the idea that an Indian story fails to draw patronage? Play this one without fail."

In Moving Picture World you find:

"A mighty good picture that brought us the business in the middle of an extremely hot spell. We advertised moderately; the patronage was out of proportion to the limited effort we put forth on the story."

This is a business builder and you ought to play it at once.

and a superlative cast

Written and supervised by George Beban

We repeat, as the distributors of tbis picture, wbat we bave said to exhibitors for the past four months. This is tbe finest and undoubtedly the biggest motion picture attraction in America today. Confirmation of this may be obtained immediately by addressing John H. Kunsky, in Detroit; Sam Katz, in Chicago, who says that "it's the biggest attraction in the world;" Eugene Rotb, in San Francisco; Marcus Loew or Nicholas Schenck, in New York, and a dozen more of the country's big accounts that have enjoyed the privilege and the profit of playing this attraction.

Los Angeles by Storm

BACKED by tremendous and resourceful exploitation, strengthened by its years of reputation as the finest theatrical property in the English language, "The Sign of the Rose," presented with George Beban and his wonderful company enacting in person the famous flower-shop scene, proved to be the sensation of the season, opening its American tour at Fred Miller's California Theatre, Los Angeles, for the week of September 10th. This engagement broke every known week-stand record for receipts in the history of Los Angeles motion picture theatres.

What the Critics Said:

Edwin Schallert in The Los Angeles Times: "From the ovation that was accorded George Beban and the actors supporting him in 'The Sign of the Rose' at the California this week, the novelty of the entertainment which the star is offering found popular approval awaiting it. 'The Sign of the Rose' is the sentimentally pathetic tale of the poor Italian workman and the little motherless daughter. The audience were fairly on the edge of their seats during the emotional flower-shop scene and applauded vigorously then and after the final reel of the picture, obliging George Beban to appear in his dressing gown and voice his thanks and pleasure at being able to appeal to the experienced and therefore somewhat cold public of Los Angles. While I am not especially keen for this sort of emotionalism which 'The Sign of the Rose' affords, I cannot but feel that Mr. Beban has achieved a character impersonation which has in some degree the permanence of a classic of the screen. A clean, sincere story highly energized with George Beban's own potent vitality."

Guy Price in The Los Angeles Evening Herald: "There has been much talk about combining the silent and spoken drama. George Beban at the California Theatre this week demonstrates the feasibility of the idea and goes several steps farther. It has taken Beban several seasons to perfect his production plans and I safely may state that he now appears to have achieved the very ultimate in his particular line of entertainment. As the motion picture nears an important and vital juncture in the scenario, the projection machine is halted and the curtain rises on an exact duplicate of the photographic episode revealing the identical players who enacted the narrative of the silver sheet. Then follows a gripping dramatic incident, with here and there a humorous incident to act as relief. The blending of the arts was accomplished with practically no disillusion. Mr. Beban's characterization, both on and off the screen, of the pathetic Italian father is superb not only for its emotion-swaying tendencies but for its fine histrionic quality. He is a past master in the art of portraying the Italian's vagaries and temperament. Helene Sullivan supplies the feminine charm, without which this photoplay and sketch would seem empty."

Doris Anderson in The Los Angeles Examiner: "George Beban's combination of motion picture and stage drama is overawing-audiences at the California this week. His innovation as applied to 'The Sign of the Rose' provides them not only with the prodigality of entertainment which seems to make the dollar go twice as far but with a flux of sentiment that mellows men, women and children without discrimination. Consequently applause was so persistent that Beban had to appear for speeches and flowers. Beban is always a favorite. His appeal in the role of Pietro Balletti and Helene Sullivan's charm as the mother of the kidnapped child will make this production extremely popular, together with the interest that attaches to any unusual form of dramatic expression."

Pearl Ball in The Los Angeles Express: "At last it appears that the stage-trained screen actor is to come into his highest achievement with the clever combination of spoken and silent drama exampled so ably by George Beban in 'The Sign of the Rose.' No other 'screen type,' without the ability to make good vocally and mimetically also, will be able to keep the newer and more strenuous pace set by Mr. Beban, much less win distinction therein. Critics always are apt to discount most of the advance information of enthusiastic 'press agents' and even fellow critics. Reports emanating from eastern papers of the unique experiment tried by Mr. Beban did not quite convince us. It required visible, audible demonstration to rouse the proper amount of warmth and belief. Likewise, it was an audience 'from Missouri' that greeted Mr. Beban yesterday and gave him a veritable ovation. Mr. Beban's character development in the picture as in the stage play was marked by careful and inspired attention to detail. The entire idea of this combination is making a great hit here."

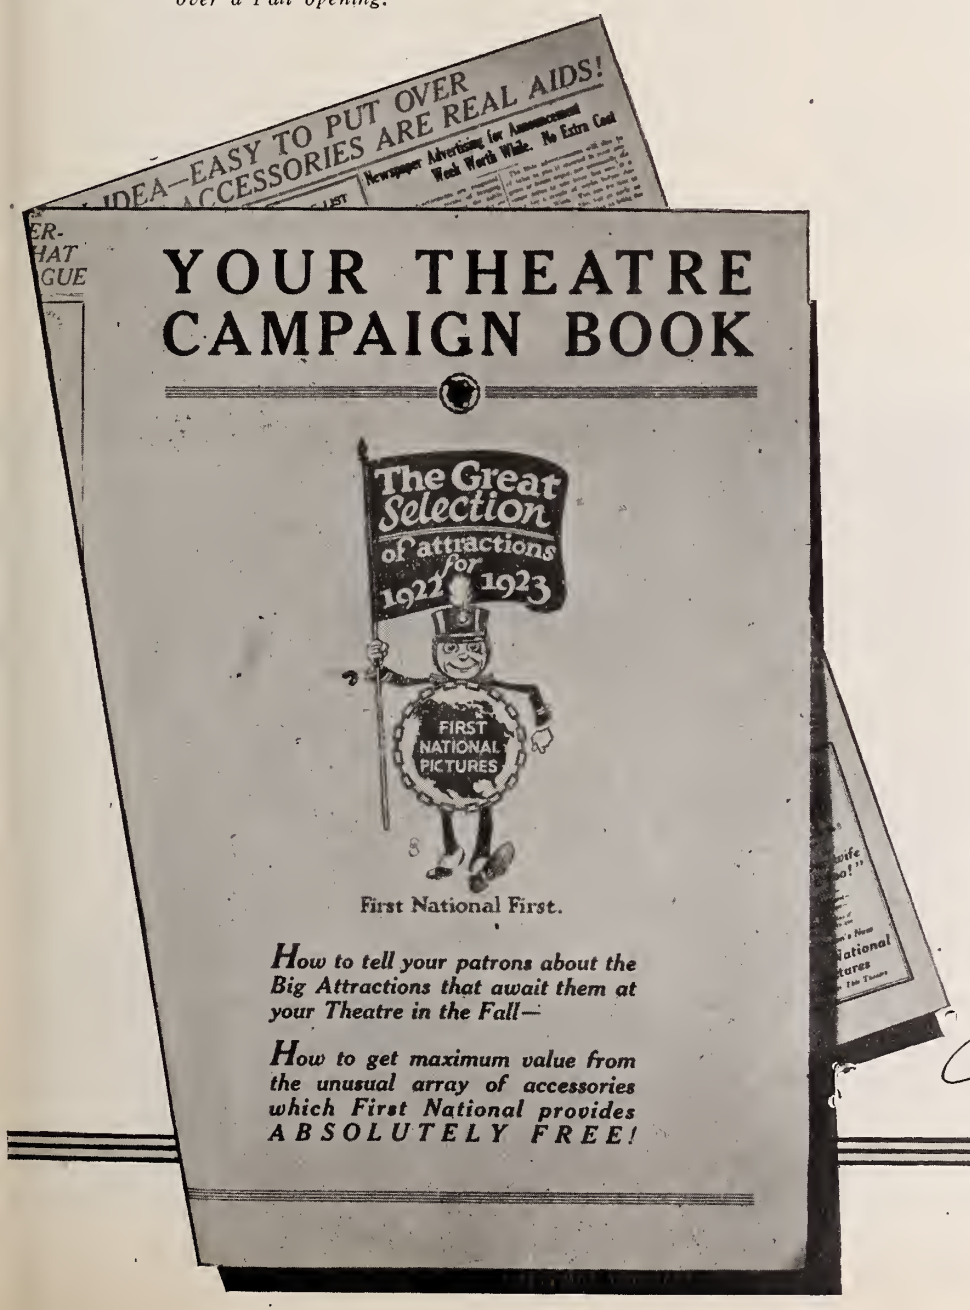
Below is a cut of the First National campaign book which gives explicit directions to exhibitors how to put over a Fall opening.



YOUR THEATRE CAMPAIGN BOOK
The Great Selection of attractions for 1922 1923
FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES
First National First.
How to tell your patrons about the Big Attractions that await them at your Theatre in the Fall—
How to get maximum value from the unusual array of accessories which First National provides ABSOLUTELY FREE!

A cross-eyed crocodile wouldn't excite any curiosity.

Because most of us don't know whether a crocodile is normally cross-eyed or not.

But a trade paper editor, writing ad copy is unusual. So unusual that I'll have to explain.

I talked myself into this job.

Walked into the First National offices the other day and my eyes beheld an achievement.

I warmed up to it; I enthused; I talked and talked—and mebbe I raved.

"Bill," I said. "Let me tell the exhibitors about this. Why I think it's the great——"

He took me up!

I have done the job.

And I know exhibitors are going to read every word—not because a trade paper editor is talking—but because THE THING HE'S TALKING ABOUT IS WORTH KNOWING ABOUT.

You can take my word for it.

Robert E. Welsh

A 16 Page Advertisement Concerning An ACHIEVEMENT

"OH, Lord, help the small exhibitor," has been the prayer of film men for, lo, these many years. But the effort has usually ended with the prayer.

And I guess we're not much at praying.

I can just imagine how the First National idea started.

Someone must have uttered the prayer—and then this thought:

"The exhibitor needs a Grand Opening—a Fall Announcement Campaign—every bit as much as the clothing store, the department store, and all the other merchants who so successfully signalize each new season.

"What can we do to help him? An extra big press sheet won't do it. The average exhibitor feels that he hasn't the time to carry out your suggestions, and, besides, he hesitates at the expense."

That's where most conferences about "the average exhibitor" end. At a sign marked "Hopeless!" Blocking the road.

About the time the First National conference reached this point someone had a daring inspiration.

"Let's get together the simplest, most comprehensive, usable press sheet possible—then place everything the press sheet tells about in the exhibitors' hands—and FREE!

"Huh?" chorused the others. "D'ymean posters, photos, slides, window cards, everything? It will cost a lot of money."

I won't say the reply was "Hang the expense!" First National is too business-like for that. But I imagine the conference summed it up this way: "It ought to be done. Someone is going to do it some day.

And anything worth doing some day is worth doing now. By us.

"Let's get out AN ANIMATED PRESS SHEET!"

In the center above is a five-color poster announcement of First National Attractions. On either side is a sample of the posters furnished free on individual subjects.

A 16 Page Advertisement Concerning An ACHIEVEMENT

AND, boys, they sure did hit the target!

A big prize package of free advertising material has been prepared. And when I say "big" I mean it. This one will tax the resources of Uncle Sam's parcel post.

Enough ticket-selling, patronage boosters to put a dent in a ten-dollar bill if you had to step out and buy them all.

And the sort of aids that you would buy if you couldn't get them any other way.

All based on the sound, solid, merchandising and withal SHOWMAN-LIKE principle that.

"Your small town or neighborhood theatre needs a Fall Announcement Campaign. Set aside a week in September or early October and whoop things up. Tell the world: 'Come one and all and see the good things we have in store for you this season!'"

Over five thousand of First National's prize packages have been prepared. They go first to franchise holders and other small-town exhibitors showing First National product.

Whether or not there will be any left over I don't know.

But if you don't receive the package we advise you to drop into the First National exchange and look it over—no matter what pictures you are showing.

It's an achievement in service for the small exhibitor—and you'll want to see it for that reason, if for no other.

The way it hit me: I wanted a theatre and First National pictures for the sake of putting the campaign to work.

It's that sort of material.

The kind that tempts you to go out and raise Hail Columbia!

And the outcast took not only his name -- but his wife!

FIRST of all, there's an intelligent press sheet.

That's saying a mouthful!

This one is short on color and trimmings and long on showmanship and newspaper sense. It doesn't talk to an exhibitor as though he were a kindergarten child, and the stories in it will speak workmanlike to your editor.

Then there are:

Five rotogravure one sheets that would sell a blind man. Four on individual specials announced for early release and one a composite.

Combining the selling force of a poster with the interest-arousing value of lobby photos. I haven't seen much of this roto-poster work. I'm here to say that I LIKE IT! I think you will, too.

Then there's an announcement one sheet in five colors, listing all the forthcoming attractions.

And a set of sixteen beautifully colored 11 x 14 star portraits that will just make the women gasp.

A slide that will make 'em sit up. And the exhibitor only has to call up the exchange to get a six-hundred-foot reel, specially made, showing stars and scenes from the coming features all hooked up with ticket-selling sub-titles.

That's almost a headline attraction in itself.

And a postcard—that brings him any of the dozens of cuts in the press sheet—absolutely free.

The big punch being: That instead of TELLING the exhibitor how to stage a Fall Announcement Campaign—the Fall Announcement Campaign is placed right plumb in his lap.

If that idea doesn't make a million dollars extra for exhibitors this season—I'll eat my new Fall hat!

Above are a few of the 11 x 14 colored lithograph lobby cards on stars appearing in First National Attractions which have been sent to exhibitors free of charge for advertising to their patrons.

It's a Big Artistic Triumph!

Director .....Henry King
Author .....George W. Ogden
Scenario .....Charles E. Whittaker
Photography .....Roy Overbaugh
Edited by .....Duncan Mansfield
Art Director .....Charles O. Seessel

THE CAST

Richard Barthelmess	Robert Williamson	Virginia Magee
Charles Hill Mailes	Leslie King	Louis Backer Seegar
Ned Sparks	Mary Thurman	Thomas Maguire
Laurence D'Orsay	Mary Alden	Jerry Sinclair

CHARACTER OF STORY

Another heroic, homespun role of similar character to "Tol'able David," although surpassing it in the artistry and perfection of production.

POINTS OF APPEAL

The best acting Richard Barthelmess ever did; the finest direction Henry King has ever given us; a powerful story with tremendous heart appeal. A big trial scene, a wild chase with bloodhounds, and other thrills.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

Bound out like a slave, accused of the murder of his tyrannical master, run down by bloodhounds, a mere slip of a boy faces the gallows with Southern chivalry rather than betray the secret love of a woman. Comes a smashing climax in which the woman confesses; comes exoneration and a wondrous love.

Most exquisite scenes in the snow-capped wastes of the Far North, with wonderful lighting effects.

THE CAST

Strongheart, the wonder dog	Irene Rich
Lee Shumway	Joseph Barrel
Roger James Manning	Philip Hubbard
Lady Silver	Jean Metcalf

Baby Evangeline Bryant

CHARACTER OF STORY

A thrill of the Northwoods and the vast snow wastes, peopled with figures of love, hate, fear, courage and cowardice—sensational drama with moments that make you choke or cheer.

POINTS OF APPEAL

The wonder dog of the screen in a most unusual story in a unique setting. Dog acting that will make you marvel. You know Strongheart's work in "The Silent Call." We can promise you a bigger picture in this one.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A beautiful girl braves the dangers of the Northern trail to carry financial aid to her brother and sweetheart in Alaska. Follows days of terrible hardships in which the sweetheart proves a traitor and slays the girl's brother, she herself being saved by Brawn, her giant dog. She meets a trapper who insists on a perfunctory marriage arrangement to protect her. But later she learns to love him. Brawn's rescue of the baby after a terrific battle with wolves, his devotion to his mistress and his love affair with a wolf, and a human understanding in all situations will make every audience gasp with wonder.

Director.....Frank Lloyd
Author.....Robert Hitchins
Scenario.....Frances Marion
Photography.....Antonio Gaudio and Norbert Brodin

THE CAST

Norma Talmadge	Carl Gerrard	Winter Hall
Edwin Stevens	Eugene O'Brien	Lillian Lawrence

CHARACTER OF STORY

A drama of titled society and the Orient, taken from the celebrated stage success in which Miss Talmadge reaches the heights of emotional work.

POINTS OF APPEAL

Norma Talmadge, after her big successes in "The Eternal Flame" and "Smilin' Through," will draw them like a magnet. One of the most popular stars, she now has attained the peak of success. Her name alone means big box office results. And after the two previous triumphs you won't be able to keep them out.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A fleeing wife and the man she loves—and the voice of the Muezzin from the Minaret calling on the faithful to keep their vows. Comes repentance, renunciation and then the reward of the faithful when fate takes a hand to upset a despicable plot and two hearts are finally united in love.

Scenario.....Frances Marion
Photography.....Tony Gaudio

THE CAST

Norma Talmadge	Thomas Ricketts	Wedgewood Nowell
Adolphe Jean Menjou	Otis Harlan	Kate Lester
Rosemary Theby	Conway Tearle	Irving Cummings

CHARACTER OF STORY

A spectacular production with all the glamor of the gay life of old French courts, with strong love interest, tense emotional scenes and smashing dramatic climaxes—and photography in both exteriors and interiors that is unexcelled. Eight reels.

POINTS OF APPEAL

First, the popularity of the star and an emotional drama that gives her a wider range in acting than any previous picture. This with the strength of the story will make it a winner with every audience.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

Disillusioned by her husband, a mighty man in the French court who regarded his wife as a toy, the Duchesse de Langeaise, an innocent beauty, turns flirt to avenge herself on Man. She breaks scores of hearts and laughs at the results. But too often she plays with love and finally is herself scorned. Then comes the rallying of the finer womanly qualities and the baring of emotions in the awakening of a soul that will shake every spectator to the depth of his heart.

CHARACTER OF STORY

From the remarkable stage success which had a two years' run on Broadway, it is exotic in Oriental setting, dramatic in its narration of the color conflict, amazing as a realization of what Miss Talmadge can do—8 reels of best fun, love and thrills ever screened.

POINTS OF APPEAL

A popular star in the best picture she has ever attempted. A most striking and spectacular Chinese atmosphere, bubbling over with fun and filled with pathos.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

Poor little Ming Toy, put up at auction by her own father as a Sing girl, she is rescued from the Love Boat by a young American, only to be sold to a wealthy Chinese and sent to America. There she beats her pretty wings against her lacquered cage, the object of a Chinatown plot, her heart breaking for the love of her American sweetheart. CHARACTER OF STORY

A powerful "crook" story in which the most notorious character of the underworld is reformed by a beautiful girl's smiling faith in him.

POINTS OF APPEAL

As a book it has been one of the best sellers, read by more than a million persons. It is one of Oliver Morosco's greatest stage successes and has a heart appeal that wins every audience. There is an unusual cast, headed by the winsome Colleen Moore, Wheeler Oakman and Sam De Grasse.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

"Slippy McGee," a famous crook, had outwitted the police, but he couldn't evade fate. It caught the cleverest safe cracker in America, tossed him, injured, into a little Parish house, and imprisoned him with butterflies, goodness and a girl's smile. A priest was his jailer, and he shackled him with more lasting bonds than steel.

A Drama with the Ince Punch

Director .....Lambert Hillyer
Author.....Marc Edmund Jones

CHARACTER OF STORY

A melodrama of the underworld, portrayed as Thomas H. Ince knows how, with punch, pathos and action in every foot.

POINTS OF APPEAL

The Ince reputation for big pictures, the prominent members of the cast. Thrills that will get them all. A leap from a prison wall to the swinging ladder of flying aeroplane, and a drop to the top of a speeding express train, is just one of the many thrills that will get under their skins. A most unusual story.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

The story of a man who couldn't go straight because of a hideous and unforgettable face which ever landed him in the net of the police. Sent to prison for a long term, he escapes, but is so terribly injured he spends months in a hospital, where the miracle of modern surgery completely changed the repulsive features of his face. About to commit another crime at the instigation of his wife, he suddenly learns that she is plotting his death so that she will be free to go to her sweetheart. A revulsion of feeling comes and he turns to the girl of the hospital, who had faith in him and starts life over again on the right road.

CHARACTER OF STORY

A big society racing drama, greater than Collier's roaring stage success. And such a race—it will have every member of your audience on his feet yelling.

POINTS OF APPEAL

Love, laughs and thrills with the most thrilling steeplechase ever screened. That alone will drag them in. The names of the players and that of the producer will fill the house.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

Sam Harrington hates horses. Peggy Fairfax, his sweetheart, loves them. And what is tough on Sam is that she thinks he is the Mr. S. Harrington, famous steeplechase rider. Comes the greatest society racing event of the year. Sam has to make good. Inexperienced as a rider, Sam has little chance aganist his rival, an experienced horseman who also is riding. But The Hottentot, mightiest of racers, takes the bit, and Sam, clinging to the reins for life, is carried over ditch and barrier, a winner of the famous trophy—and the heart of a girl.

CHARACTER OF STORY

Big in dramatic thrill, bigger still in spectacular sensation. A story of the lonely places of the Northwest and Broadway's gilded palaces—a conflict of souls.

POINTS OF APPEAL

A special appeal to the women of today with love, romance and heart interest and the background of a woman of advanced ideas in a struggle with a primitive lover. Thrills seldom equalled in a terrific dam burst that sends flood waters seething over the countryside in a sweep of disaster, and the stampede of thousands of maddened steers, crushing life beneath flying hoofs, thundering down on the man who stands alone to check them.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A Man, primitive, masterful—a girl who loves his strength and fears his domination—a polished man of the world who seeks to take her from her lover. Comes the inevitable, a terrific conflict in the elemental and the struggle to win a woman's heart and soul. Fought from the wilds of the Northwoods to polished New York, the battle carries thrills and dramatic incidents that will make them grip their seats up to the relieved sigh at the unfolding of the beautiful romance.

CHARACTER OF STORY

A tale of romantic Dixie, with its blood feuds, its chivalry, with spectacular outdoor scenes and beautiful interiors; photography so vivid you can almost hear the crackle of the flames in a forest fire, with unusual lightings and gorgeous effects.

POINTS OF APPEAL

A Dixie story always attracts. It is portrayed by an exceptional cast and carries the invariable Ince punch. There's a forest fire that'll make 'em gasp. You can almost smell the smoke and hear the fire hiss, with blazing trees crashing about the heads of a man and a girl caught in the inferno.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A boy is taken from the Kentucky mountains and given the place of a rich man's son because the real son is a waster and spendthrift. Between the two there comes a Brotherhood of Hate, fanned to white heat when both love the same girl. This hatred reaches its height of bitterness just before a forest fire and a lynching posse spread tumult through the hills. Finally the sweetness of a girl turns the tense hate into love.

CHARACTER OF STORY

A modern and up-to-date story of married life, a domestic tangle that almost ended in tragedy, but didn't. A classic of emotional drama with an all-appealing theme, vital, living—a burning flame of the heart.

POINTS OF APPEAL

Produced in the lavish manner of the Louis B. Mayer productions and directed by John M. Stahl, who put out those box office classics, "One Clear Call" and "The Child Thou Gavest Me." And look at the cast. Exceptional photography and lightings.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A flirtation, a fatal kiss, and a man happily married for years turns to youth for happiness when his wife fails to respond to his love. Comes a crashing climax and an awakening flame in the hearts of the married couple and finally happiness breaking through the threatened tragedy. One of the tense realities of life that will thrill every audience.

CHARACTER OF STORY

A Tale of Adventure and a battle for love and life in the snow wastes of the Arctics.

POINTS OF APPEAL

An outdoor story with the wonderful scenery of the Far North coupled with a drama of the struggles of a man and a woman from the gentler walks of life with the primitive characters of the wilds, with terrific storm and wild beasts.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

"You are a weakling!" was her scornful answer to the man who loved her, and whom she secretly loved. Then circumstances took both these born and bred New Yorkers of aristocratic lineage to the Northland, where the battle for life with the raging elements, ferocious beasts and treacherous men brought out her lover's real manhood and won out against desperate odds.

CHARACTER OF STORY

A drama set in society's scintillating background with the most lavish interiors and settings so rich every woman will be fascinated. Beautiful exteriors on the grounds of the nation's wealthy, and exceptional photography. A drama of heart dealers and heart stealers.

POINTS OF APPEAL

Katherine MacDonald's beauty and the exceptionally fine acting she does in this picture. Her wealth of beautiful gowns and the magnificence of the production. A story that will hold every one enthralled.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

Bemis was shot! He was felled by a bullet in a supposedly empty gun which a woman pointed at him in a dress rehearsal in his big country estate. Who loaded the revolver? That was the question the police asked. Was it his wife, to be rid of him—to be free to love Gaylord, with whom she had carried on a flirtation? Was it Gaylord—in fear because of his own indiscretions? Or was it the beautiful Susanne, "who couldn't catch a man in the world if some other woman wanted him." THE CAST

Hope Hampton	Edgar Norton	E. K. Lincoln
Lon Chaney	Theresa Maxwell Conover	Charles Mussett
Dorothy Walters		Dore Davidson

CHARACTER OF STORY

A striking drama that sweeps from the Orient to America, with gorgeous scenes in the East and the bizarre atmosphere of 'Frisco's Chinatown, the crook section, the police courts—and the mansions of the wealthy.

POINTS OF APPEAL

Hope Hampton has made a bigger and better picture than "Stardust," and you know how that appealed to the public. Play up her name and the strong all-star cast, which includes such players as Lon Chaney and E. K. Lincoln. The search for the Holy Grail is a point that will interest everyone. The most remarkable photography and lightings on record.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A story of unusual mystery in which a beautiful girl finds herself involved in the theft of a magic cup believed to be the Holy Grail. This is picked up by an art connoisseur in the Orient and stolen by a thief in San Francisco. The chalice radiates a peculiar light and is reputed to have healing qualities. The search for the crook and the mysterious disappearance of the cup from the court room lead to a climax that is both strange and romantic. Strong in love interest.

POINTS OF APPEAL

A Carewe production with a strong cast and an unusual story. Exquisite photography; strong heart appeal and human interest; pathos and humor. Spectacular.

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

The story of regeneration through music in which a little blind girl plays the violin so beautifully that all who hear are strangely influenced. Young, frail, beautiful and innocent, she is the adored pal of children, the One Woman to Jimmie Harrison—and the tool of a band of robbers who wish to use her in putting across a daring robbery. But Jimmie, at the climax, turns on the robbers and saves the girl by incriminating himself. He has been regenerated by her music, and it is through his sacrifice that she regains her eyesight.

Question— Who makes First National Attractions?
Answer— The most famous screen artists in the world, such as Norma and Constance Talmadge, Richard Barthelmess, Thos. H. Ince, Charles Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Buster Keaton, Katherine Mac Donald, Marshall Neilan, Hope Hampton and others.
Question— Why should the public watch for the First National Trade Mark on pictures?
Answer— Because First National Attractions are specially selected pictures which are shown by the finest Big Time Theatres all over America.
Question— How does it happen that so many famous artists pictures bear the First National Brand?
Answer— Associated First National Pictures, Inc. is a distributing company which supplies the feature pictures for so many fine theatres that many great screen artists are glad to have their pictures play the Big Time Circuit supplied by First National.
FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTIONS ARE THE BIG TIME ATTRACTIONS
BIG TIME ATTRACTIONS

Above are two 14 by 22 colored lobby cards and a 22 by 28 colored lobby card furnished free to exhibitors to help them attract the business to their theatres which First National's Big Time attractions merit.

And now to speak editorially:

I don't care whose pictures you are showing, or what pictures you are showing.

Editorially, I have put all the strength I possess into urging exhibitors to start the new season off with a bang, to put the "show you" argument in their sales talk, to let their patrons know that the picture theatre is not an automatic seven-day clock affair, but a human institution that has striven, worked, and labored to store up good things for them.

I wish I had twice the strength of a Hercules to put that argument over.

And I welcome, with sincerity and joy, the definite, concrete contribution that First National has made. For I believe —and I'll shout—that:

The exhibitor who lets his new season get under way with all the humdrum monotony of the usual routine is not only losing money, throwing money away—

But he is missing an incalculable opportunity to tie his patrons to his house in solid bonds of common interest; to shake them from the apathetic "sell me" attitude into a deep personal interest in him and his theatre, what he is trying to do, what he is going to do, this season.

That's something you can't buy when you need it. You can get it now for the effort.

And if it is in your province to use the material that First National has placed in a real PRIZE PACKAGE — you're lucky.

If you use it to the fullest advantage — you're doubly fortunate — because it will pay.

Founded 1907
by J. P. Chalmers

Vol. 58, No. 4
Sept. 30, 1922

Collier's Weekly

Collier's of September 16th opens with an article headed, "Why I Am Ashamed of the Movies." Written by an individual who parades his courage under the mask, "By a Producer of Motion Pictures."

After our first reading we started to write an article titled, "Why I Am Ashamed of Collier's."

And we stopped. For we believe the privilege of writing that story belongs to that departed two-fisted square-shooter, P. F. Collier. To his son, Robert Collier.

Their's is the name.

Our minds wandered back to the Collier's of yesteryear.

The Collier's of Roosevelt's day—that was, in the garb of printer's ink, a vivid, living visualization of the clean fighting Teddy.

The Collier's that routed the food poisoners. The Collier's of Norman Hapgood, of Mark Sullivan.

And down the years to the Collier's that grasps the thoroughly discredited circulation bid, "Let's throw mud at the movies."

We can't attempt to dignify "Why I Am Ashamed of the Movies" with anything in the shape of an answer.

No more than we can understand why even a blind man bereft of his cane wouldn't know that as an attempted circulation stimulator movie-muckraking has been exhausted, drained, and abandoned.

"Why I Am Ashamed of the Movies" does not deserve the recognition of an answer because it is obviously INSINCERE.

Insincere in that its logic will not stand the test on a single point.

The chief charges it levies against the picture industry are those of stupidity and greed.

The chief effect it produces on the reader is the conviction of someone's stupidity in being responsible for it.

Plus this thought:

Stupidity and greed constitute the picture industry, says this writer. And the writer is A SUCCESSFUL MOTION PICTURE PRODUCER. What made him successful? Stupidity and greed? No? Well—what happens to the charge hurled at an entire industry?

Out of a welter of words what does the author tell us?

First, a college professor he met turned his nose up at the mention of Griffith and the motion picture.

Second, the screen is undermining America. We won't see the results, he says; our grandchildren will.

Third—well, there isn't any third.

The rest is a hodge-podge of generalities that would waste breath in the answering. We might, for example, say everything that is said in the article and change the author's contemptuous "movies" to the word "fiction." It would read just as well, mean just as much—and be worth just as little.

As for the two points that are made:

We know college professors who would turn their noses up at the mention of the word "newspapers." And, maybe, at Collier's.

We know grandfathers who expected to see this generation ruined by the popular fiction of their day. And the boys who were being undermined then are today's bankers and railroad presidents.

But it is all to laugh.

The screen has its faults. Oh, Lord, how many! And we have no quarrel with such publications as Collier's big sister, Woman's Home Companion when they publish sincerely constructive criticisms of those faults.

But we get hot under the collar at a muckraker whose keynote is sounded by the fact that out of three illustrations the only one that attempts to mean anything is a FAKE.

A crude and amateurish one to boot.

Collier's needs a new name. For the sake of the name of Collier.

Robert E. Welsh

Editorial Personalities

Four hundred and twenty-nine individual exhibitors' names were mentioned in last week's Moving Picture World in news stories, exploitation accounts, reports on pictures and better equipment hints. That's what we mean when we say, "The COMPLETE Trade Paper: Regional in News Value; National in Service.

Cosmopolitan delivered. After all that was promised for "When Knighthood Was in Flower" the realization surpassed it according to every lay and trade reviewer.

Which is a fact we are glad to chronicle in ten-point — next to editorial position.

In all that was said before-hand about this Davies special there was a slight note of skepticism. The mere mention of a "million dollar spectacle" doesn't sweep film men off their feet any more. The stage was set with a Missouri background for "Knighthood's" opening.

And it delivered.

Now we can say an unhesitating word of praise for the ambition and courage of W. R. Hearst in spending American dollars to outstrip the most lavish effects ever achieved by German marks.

Seventy-three individual exchange managers and salesmen were mentioned in news stories in last week's Moving Picture World. That's what we mean when we say, "The COMPLETE Trade Paper: Regional in News Value; National in Service."

There's a sixteen-page insert in this week's World, in the making of which we had some part.

We made ourselves eligible for the job when we started our "Go to the Theatre in September" drive. Theatres all over the country took up that campaign; such big chains as the Kunsky houses in Detroit adapted it to their fall campaign.

Then we walked into the First National offices one day and saw the realization of a dream to provide the very smallest theatres with the means of getting their theatres off to a flying start.

We sold ourselves into the job that is a part of this insert.

And now, entirely aside from any personal considerations that may be involved, we hope that every exhibitor who reads Moving Picture World will read that insert. Then, regardless of what pictures he is showing, let him have his own GRAND SEASON'S OPENING.

We feel that way about it. First National feels that way about it. Because the idea of having a fall opening campaign means extra dollars to every exhibitor who uses it.

And anything that means extra money for any one in this industry means extra money for us all—one and all.

E. V. Richards, of Saenger. Theodore Hays, of Finkelstein and Rubin. "Doc" Horator, of Toledo's Pantheon. Names that mean something, eh? Well, they are the experts who talk sense on the dollars and cents of seats and seating problems in this week's Better Equipment Section. That's what we mean when we say, "The COMPLETE Trade Paper: Regional in News Value; National in Service."

Spitalny, of Cleveland, gave us our personal show treat of the year last week when we witnessed the presentation of "Rich Men's Wives" at the Allen in that city.

We have seen pictures that overshadowed the music; we have heard music that overshadowed the picture. But Spitalny opened our eyes to the perfect blending of the two.

You hear Spitalny's music, and travel along with it. Yet he is giving you every last possible bit of feeling in the picture.

We have heard Spitalny before and admired him. But either his genius is now realizing its fullest promise, or else "Rich Men's Wives" lends itself unusually to the musician's touch. Last Wednesday he overwhelmed us.

Spitalny isn't "playing pictures" now. He is "atmosphering" them. If we may be pardoned the word.

And the city that has Paul Whiteman would welcome Spitalny.

We thanked Harry Charnas and his Caravan for the opportunity of meeting a hundred-odd exhibitors. We thanked him for the opportunity of addressing some seven hundred exhibitors.

Now we thank him for that Spitalny night.

Sixty-six separate exploitation ideas were illustrated or described in last week's Moving Picture World. All of them selected because of their adaptability to the widest range of pictures. That's what we mean when we say: "The COMPLETE Trade Paper: Regional in News Value; National in Service."

Don't start skipping the eight-point bold face.

We may fool you and switch to the ten-point for the house ads and the eight-point for the gossip.

We are always in good humor. But we do get tired of hearing from exhibitors of how much value the trade papers—that goes for all—are to them and then having a New York executive say, "Well, you MAY be good, but I am not SOLD on trade papers."

We are going to do a little selling—or at any rate, a little shouting.

And here's a thought we had reserved for the next eight-point insert:

Eighty-four exhibitors wrote to Moving Picture World last week—letters of from one to four pages. This exclusive of subscription orders to the circulation department. And thirty-two of the letters required answers, SERVICE of one sort or another. That's what we mean when we say, "The COMPLETE——"

But you know the chorus. Sing it.

Bob Pritchard, we hear, is going to handle the field exploitation staff for Goldwyn in association with Howard Dietz. Good for Bob—and good for Goldwyn. R. E. Pritchard has a one-track mind that has been running towards Exploitationtown since his days as a New Orleans newspaper man, down through The News, the Allens, Educational, and on to Goldwyn. He'll show 'em something! We know it. He has. We have seen it.

Here's a tip to paste in your hat: "The Old Homestead."

Here's another: "To Have and To Hold."

And another, if the hat is big enough: "Under Two Flags."

The New York office executives of Paramount got their first look at the two specials heading the list this last week.

They have passed the promise stage—and the hope stage. They are walking around now with the silly grins worn by daddies when Number 1 arrives. You know how you'd feel yourself if you discovered a million dollar picture in the house.

They'll be raving about the cyclone effects in "The Old Homestead" five and ten years from now. The duel on the stairs in "To Have and To Hold"—oh, boy!

The same goes for Universal's "Under Two Flags." With this exception: More people have seen it. And more are talking about it.

United Artists has issued a neat prospectus on "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" that "sells" you through an admirable air of dignity, achievement and confidence. Nothing blatant—just smoothly written "under the skin" copy and interesting illustrations. Going forth to leaders of women's clubs, boy scouts and girl scouts, leaders of archery associations, campfire clubs, etc. And an excellent missionary.

Too Many Adjectives!

Mr. Robert E. Welsh, Editor,
Moving Picture World,
New York.

Dear Bob:

I have read with interest the letter of Mr. H. B. Watts, published on page 252 of your issue of September 23, under the headline, "Too Much Dirt."

Mr. Watts' message, directed to exhibitors, should be read with respectful attention by the advertising men in the distributing end of the industry, for it is based upon fundamental truths and sound business sense.

Mr. Watts says: "I think it is a mistake for an exhibitor to allow advertising to be run for his theatre that promises 'the greatest picture ever made,' and similar expressions, and then when his patrons come they find but an ordinary program picture."

It is widely recognized that the first principle of successful advertising is truthfulness. This is so generally accepted today that great merchants and big national advertisers insist that their copy shall make no misstatement but shall present the truth. They believe, and with reason, that any commodity worth advertising at all must have intrinsic merit and that its value can and must be described with accuracy and yet possess the true sales appeal.

That line, "the greatest picture ever made," has a familiar look. It has been seen many times in the advertising pages of the trade papers. Who ever believes it? Who is ever impressed by it? Is it not a truth that where one misstatement is recognized in any advertisement it is hard to believe any part of it? Perhaps each writer of copy who falls into this error believes that where there is so much shouting in the advertising columns of the trade papers, it is necessary for him to yell to be heard. But is it not true that always is moderation heard with more confidence than extravagance?

We have heard it said many times that "the show business is different;" with the deduction that because it is different a wider latitude is permitted in advertising. But every business is "different." I think it would be admitted by advertising agency solicitors that where they are seeking to persuade a non-advertiser to advertise, the first and most common argument they have to combat is that the particular business in question is "different." But the basic principles in humanity are the same whether the article purchased is amusement, soap, breakfast food or shoes. If money is to be spent what interests the purchaser is the question as to what the commodity will do for him; what service it will render him. Poor shows will fail in spite of extravagant advertising, since they do not render the service promised—entertainment. And it seems to be evident that the theatrical business is coming more and more to accept principles that have proven effective in other lines.

Editor's Note.—P. A. Parsons, advertising manager of Pathe Exchanges, is the first to respond to our request for opinions on the letter of H. B. Watts, published on this page last week. Mr. Parsons is not one of the industry's "ready letter writers" and when he sits down to his typewriter you may be sure that he has strong feelings on the subject. The letter published herewith takes on additional interest for that reason. In addition, it is the advertising manager's angle on a problem originally opened for discussion by an exhibitor. We want to hear from others. What do you think? Say it!

Some months ago that excellent publication, "The Better Way," published in the interests of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, in a discussion of literary style, summed up the best opinion on the subject of use of adjectives and hyperbole in a manner so good as to bear repetition; and what was written of style is equally applicable to advertising:

"Vigor, color, vivacity, earnestness are all perfectly compatible with restraint. And it is always well to remember that the voice of prejudice is loud, the voice of reason, quiet; that over-emphasis defeats itself, and that reiterated superlatives arouse skepticism. . . .

"If novelists, who are making no specific effort to induce people to act, have to be on their guard against this temptation, it is little wonder that writers of advertising—our commercial exhorters—find it necessary to be doubly on their guard. . . .

"Moderation itself becomes distinctive in an environment of superlatives. . . .

"William Matthews wrote 'Where all men are giants there are no giants; where all is emphatic in style there is no emphasis.'"

Emphasis is of the greatest value, but only where it has been conserved for the time when it is fitting and proper to use it. The advertising writer who always makes extravagant claims should not be surprised if all his claims are disbelieved. He has by over-use of superlatives and by hyperbole lost his power of emphasis.

The boy in the fable of our childhood days who amused himself by raising the cry of "Wolf! Wolf!" when there was no wolf, could get no one to come to his assistance when the wolf family came.

The ad writer who claims that every picture is a "knockout," "a marvel," "the greatest ever made," will not be believed when the time comes for him to advertise the true knockout.

Carelessness in the matter of accuracy comes very easily in this industry by reason of the nature of the product advertised. Unlike nationally advertised staples that are the same today as yesterday and will still be the same tomorrow, we have an unstandardized product. Each picture differs from any other in the advertising problems presented. Each must stand upon its own merits. With star, author, director and cast the same, one picture may be a really big financial and artistic success, while another will lack the merit sufficient to even pay production costs. It is easy, where an only fair picture follows a really fine picture with the same star and director, to endeavor to put over the inferior picture by advertising it as better than its predecessor, or as "So and So's Best." The exhibitor, often dependent upon the advertising pages of the trade papers and the campaign books furnished with the picture for his advertising hints, picks up the statement and hands it on in his own advertising. Naturally those persons who have read that advertising and because of it attend the theatre to see something as good as or better than the bigger picture that went before, have a feeling of resentment at the misrepresentation. Good will is lost, and good will is too precious and too hardly won to be risked by advertising that misrepresents. And thus the blame comes rightly back upon the distributor's own advertising.

It is very easy to write advertisements that are spotted all over with adjectives; that are based upon categorical claims supported only by superlatives. It is much more difficult to write an ad with moderation; to attempt to clearly and truthfully describe a picture without misstatement, and yet induce the desire to see it. But how sincerity shines by contrast; how the studied moderation becomes emphatic by contrast.

"Moderation itself becomes distinctive in an environment of superlatives."

P. A. PARSONS.

A.M.P.A. Election

John C. Flinn Selected President at Annual Event.

At the Annual Election of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, held September 14 at the Cafe Boulevard, the following ticket was chosen: President, John C. Flinn; Vice President, Victor M. Shapiro; Secretary, Thomas G. Wiley; Treasurer, Horace Judge; Board of Directors, Charles Barrell, A. M. Botsford, Arthur Brilant, Howard Dietz, Paul Lazarus, P. A. Parsons, Nat. Rothstein, Harry Reichenbach, C. L. Yearsley. Managing Editor A. M. P. A. Bulletin, J. M. Loughborough. Chancellor Chamber of Commerce, Samuel D. Palmer.

The only opposition in the ticket was for the office of vice president, Mr. Shapiro running against J. W. O'Mahoney, Mr. Shapiro being elected. Later his election made unanimous by a rising vote.

Mr. Flinn succeeds C. L. Yearsley, who retires as president to become a member of the Board of Directors. After the result of the election had been announced Paul Gulick paid tribute to the splendid work done by Mr. Yearsley and the other retiring officers of the A. M. P. A. Mr. Flinn was then called on for a speech.

Harry Wilson, a publicity man from the Coast who attended the meeting, extended greetings from the Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers.

Gets Extension

The American Film Company has been given an extension of time, until September 22, in which to file with the Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., its answer to the formal complaint issued on August 7. The company was charged by the commission with unfair methods of competition in the reissue and distribution of films formerly exhibited throughout the country under different names.

En Route to N. Y.

Mike Rosenberg, who with Irving M. Lesser, controls the activities of Western Pictures Exploitation and who with Sol Lesser is associated in the Principal Pictures Corporation, will arrive in New York this week direct from the Coast.

His stay will be brief and only matters of utmost interest pertaining to the Western Pictures Exploitation Company and Principal Pictures Corporation, will be discussed.

Changes Date

The convention of the M. P. T. O. A. of Nebraska and Iowa, which was to have been held in Omaha September 18, 19 and 20, has been postponed until the middle of October. The change in date was made so that Will H. Hays and Sidney Cohen would be able to attend. Mr. Hays suggested that the convention, instead of being solely for exhibitors, should be a regular get-together meeting of exchangemen also.

To Appoint Receiver

Justice Edward Finch, of the New York Supreme Court, has handed down a decision in the suit brought by John W. Noble against the Maritime Motion Pictures of Canada, Ltd., for an accounting and appointment of a receiver for "Clansman of the North." The decision holds sufficient evidence has been adduced to show that the venture was a joint one of the litigants, and that Noble is entitled to an accounting to date.

Hays Considers Distribution for Samuel Hill's Historical Record

A meeting of the executive board of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors will be called soon to consider possible distribution of several reels of film of historic interest, whose "shooting" was supervised and financed by Samuel Hill, of Seattle, a railroad man and friend of the late J. J. Hill. Though the names are alike they are not related.

Samuel Hill, who financed Marshal Joffre's trip around the world, is interested in the perpetuation of the existing friendship between Canada and the United States. A little over a year ago he learned that a treaty signed in Ghent, Belgium, in 1814 made fortresses on the Canadian border "unnecessary luxuries"; so, with a camerman, he went to Ghent and filmed the treaty in the archives there. Then Mr. Hill went to England and obtained a block of wood from the Mayflower, which he took to Belgium for Cardinal Mercier's blessing and then brought to the United States for insertion in a marble "peace portal" he had erected on the border at Blaine, Wash.

These incidents, and many others of similiar interest, were duly recorded by the cameraman, and now Mr. Hill wishes to obtain distribution for the film in the interests of world peace. The film was run off this week for Will Hays in the Famous Players' projection room.

Increase Sales Force

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, announces the appointment of D. R. Davis as representative in charge of the St. Louis office, effective September 18. Mr. Davis was at one time in charge of Pathe's feature work at Chicago and later Pathe short subject salesman under Frank Harris at St. Louis.

Walter F. Haynor, formerly Goldwyn manager at Washington, D. C., has been appointed an Associated Exhibitor's representative in the Philadelphia territory. He began his duties on Monday, September 18.

Paul DeOnto, well known throughout the middle west, has been named an Associated salesman under Bert Mendelson at Kansas City.

Eskell Appointed

Clifford F. Eskell, well known motion picture man in Australasia, has been appointed as general manager for Universal's New Zealand exchanges, it is announced by J. V. Bryson, Universal's export manager. Mr. Eskell's headquarters will be in Wellington.

Sell 16 New England Theatres at "Bargain Day" Prices

Lebovitch, of Boston, Wealthy Real Estate Broker, Purchaser

MOVING picture theatres were sold at "bargain-day" prices last Tuesday, September 19, when Judge DeCourcy, of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, authorized Bank Commissioner Allen to dispose of, for $550,000, the stocks and notes the Cosmopolitan Trust Company of Boston held of the various theatre corporations known as the Empire Circuit.

This circuit, which stretches from Maine to Rhode Island, and controls sixteen moving picture houses, valued at $1,228,818, was sold for the benefit of the trust company, which was ordered closed some months ago by the bank commissioner, as the stocks and notes are a part of its assets.

The purchaser of record, who thus obtained control of very valuable property at less than one-half of its valuation, is Samuel Lebovitch, of Boston, a wealthy real estate broker and operator. It could not be learned, however, whether he intends to operate the theatre chain, or if he bought for resale. It is not known that he previously has been interested in theatrical ventures, or that he has a working knowledge of the business.

When Bank Commissioner Allen took possession of the Cosmopolitan Trust Company he found that a portion of its property consisted of motion picture theatre stock, estimated as being worth $68,126, and notes carried on the books for $1,160,692. According to the petition filed in court, seeking permission for the sale, the larger part of the stocks did not appear on the books of the bank and did not stand in the name of the Cosmopolitan, but did stand in the names of certain other people, who, it is said, acknowledged they held it for the benefit of the bank. This stock now constitutes a part of its property.

The petition, which was offered by Henry O. Cushman, liquidating agent, recites that, by reason of the intricate and numerous inter-corporate dealings among the theatre corporations, and between them and the Cosmopolitan, and with other persons and corporations, it was impossible to determine with any degree of accuracy the amount of money actually invested by the trust company in these stocks and notes.

At the time the bank commissioner took possession of the Cosmopolitan Trust Company and found that it was financially interested in motion picture houses he named Samuel C. Bennett, Daniel R. Ruggles, Henry O. Cushman, Arthur K. Hunt and Guy L. Vaughan as a board of directors to manage the theatres. This board immediately set out to dispose of the stock and notes. They received offers varying in amount, none of which, in their opinion, was sufficient or complied with the terms of the sale.

Finally one interest offered the sum of $550,000 for these stocks and notes. Fifty thousand dollars were pledged to secure the transaction, and $100,000 were to be paid when the court permitted the sale. The remainder is to be paid in four monthly installments — $50,000 each for the first three months and $250,000 the last month.

The bank commissioner stated that, under the circumstances, he had been advised that it would be absolutely impossible to obtain an exact valuation of the property because the enterprises are of an uncertain character and depend upon many fluctuating causes.

The bank held stock in the following theatres: Nickel Amusement Company, Strand Amusement Company, Fall River Consolidated Enterprises, Inc., New York and Fall River Amusement Company, Empire Theatre Realty Company, Empire Amusement Company, Strand Theatre of Maine, Inc., Amesbory Amusement Company, Newburyport Theatres, Inc., Waltham Central Square Amusement Company, Waltham Theatres, Inc., Strand Theatres, Inc., Casco Theatre Company, Inc. Newport Amusement Company, Bijou Theatre Company and the Newburyport Amusement. The value of this stock was placed at $68,126.

The notes held and the amounts for which they were made out follow:

Newport Amusement Co.....	$94,101.49
Waltham Cent. Sq. Amuse. Co.	112,528.56
Newburyport Theatres, Inc.....	122,951.36
Newburyport Amusement Co...	141,755.14
Amesbury Amusement Co.....	10,000.00
Strand Amusement Co.....	25,000.00
Nickel Amusement Co.....	20,050.00
Fall River Consolidated Enterprises, Inc.	99,368.02
Empire Amusement Co.....	75,500.00
Empire Theatre Realty Co.....	135,203.94
New York and Fall River Amusement Co.	291,500.00
Nickelodeon Amusement Co....	33,734.40
Total	$1,160,692.91

These notes covered the approximate amounts due, without interest, and, with the value of the stock, $68,126, made a total valuation of $1,228,818.91, which was sold on the bargain counter for $550,000.

A New von Stroheim

An addition has come into the family of Erich von Stroheim with the birth, Monday, of a baby boy to Mrs. von Stroheim in the West Lake Hospital, Los Angeles. Von Stroheim is the Universal director who is now making "Merry-Go-Round." The Universal force is planning a reception for von Stroheim.

Denies Connection

The "Frohman Amusement Company," which is said to have offered Miss Muriel McCormick, of Chicago, a large sum of money to appear in pictures, and thereby acquired a good deal of publicity, has no connection whatsoever with Daniel Frohman, the noted theatrical producer, or with any of the activities of the late Charles Frohman, according to a statement made by the former.

Congratulations

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph I. Schnitzer are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter, who arrived on Sunday, September 17. The F. B. O. vice-president brought the news to the home office on Monday morning, and there was general rejoicing throughout the big R-C building.

Little Miss Schnitzer will be called Joan.

Wants Tariff Court

The creation of a permanent, non-partisan tariff court is provided for in a bill which has been introduced in the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., by Congressman Ansorge, of New York, which would divest Congress of its tariff-making powers.

Acord Well Again

Art Acord, who barely escaped with his life in an automobile accident three months ago, has recuperated and now is back at Universal City ready to start work on his next picture.

Acord started by auto for his Nevada ranch. He collided with a gravel truck along the route and ended up in a hospital with a broken leg, a fractured skull and cuts and bruises. Little chance was held out for his recovery. Excellent medical attention pulled him through, however.

Shauer Says Film Outlook in Europe Is Distinctly Hopeful

"The most impressive thing about conditions in Europe today, in my opinion, is the hopefulness existing in the motion picture industry and its prospects for the future," said E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and director of the Foreign Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who returned with Mrs. Shauer on the Majestic on September 12, from a visit of two months to Western, Southern and Central Europe.

"While political and general conditions abroad may not be all that is desirable, there is a more distinctly hopeful outlook for the motion picture industry insofar as it applies to the distribution, exhibition and exploitation of the highest grade American films. More than ever I am convinced that American producers who are giving the highest thought and artistic endeavor to the production of the high class stories need have no fear of losing any of their world markets to foreign producers.

"Everywhere I went I found the greatest popular interest in Paramount pictures. Our business in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy and Spain is better than ever and the extensive preparations being made by the exhibitors in these countries for still better conditions in the industry give promise of another record-breaking year for Paramount in these countries.

"Perhaps the most hopeful sign in Great Britain is the constant shortening of the time between trade showing and the release of productions. Two years ago this period ranged from twelve to eighteen months and at the present time nine months would be a good average. Within the next year or more this time probably will be further reduced to approximately six months, which is almost as close to our American releasing schedule as is physically possible. Several large theatres are in the course of construction and many others are in contemplation.

"One of the most promising signs of the great change for the better in film conditions I found in Belgium, where the exhibitors are showing all the alertness and aggressiveness of their American brethren in the presentation of high-grade pictures. The leading houses in Brussels and Antwerp are liberal users of posters, their advertising is of the best and their lobbies are always attractively billed. Arrangements have been made for first-run presentation of 'The Sheik,' 'The Miracle Man' and 'Humoresque' at rentals which have broken all records for Belgium.

"Our branch offices in France are all open and are doing a most favorable business; in fact, far better than anyone considered possible for the first year. Prospects for the coming year were never better.

"In Scandinavia, Carl York, and W. LeMat, who signed a contract some months ago for the exclusive distribution of Paramount pictures in Sweden, Denmark and Norway, have already begun their releasing program with the most satisfactory results.

"As to Germany and Central Europe, improvement in the industry is being held back by the political and economic conditions.

"Unless all signs are abortive the film industry in Spain is on the threshold of the best business ever known. Better presentation of the best pictures and the erection of a number of splendid theatres are positive signs of the coming of a new era.

"Signs of a similar improvement in Italy are to be found in the larger cities. Leading exhibitors are beginning to turn their attention to the proper presentation of pictures, a most hopeful sign for the coming year."

Illinois and Chicago M. P. T. O. Merge

On Tuesday, September 19, the executive committees of the State and City of Chicago organizations of the M. P. T. O. met and consolidated the two organizations, and agreed upon a new committee for the new coalition organization. Ratification of the amalgamation will be voted upon by the members of both organizations on Friday, September 22, and it is a foregone conclusion that the action of the two committees will be approved.

Joseph Hopp and Sam Abrams, the vice-president of the State organization, have for months worked diligently to effect the consolidation. On September 12, the local M. T. P. O. Chicago executive committee met and indorsed the plan submitted by these two gentlemen; the following day the State executive committee took like action. On September 19 both committees met in executive session and effected the consolidation, first in separate meeting confirming their prepevious work, and then in joint session to ratify the consolidation and arrange for the vote of approval of the membership of both the organizations.

In accordance with the act of the last State convention that the executive committee shall be composed of twenty-seven members, there has been important changes in the personnel of the committee. Inactive members haveb een eliminated and on September 19 the folylowing members were given places on the State executive committee:

Joseph Hopp, Lewis Frank, who operates the Halsted and Illinois Theatres, Chicago; Aaron Saperstein, who operates the Lincoln and Palais Royal Theatres, Chicago; Morris Siegel, who operates the President Theatre, Chicago; Julius Lamm, general manager of the Brunhild & Young syndicate which operates the Shakespeare and five other theatres in Chicago; and John Silha, Crown Theatre, Chicago.

In addition to the above, the executive committee is composed of the following: L. M. Rubens, who operates all the theatres except one in Joliet; W. D. Burford, of the Aurora Theatres Company, operating all theatres except one in Aurora; Glenn Reynolds, who operates two theatres in DeKalb; Ben Berve, of Rochelle; W. W. Watts, Princess Theatre and Vaudette Theatre, Springfield; Gus Karasotas, who operates two theatres at Springfield; Charles Lamb, Palm Theatre, Rockford; Dee Robinson, who operates five theatres at Peoria; William Pearl, Pearl Theatre, Highland Park; George Law, who operates two theatres at Pena; John Miller, who operates a theatre at Woodstock; Ed Tabor, Belvedere; George Hopkinson, Hamlin Thetre, Chicago; Vernon Langeon, who operates three theatres in Chicago; Emil Stern, general manager of Lubliner & Trinz Theatres in Chicago; William Cadoret, who operates two theatres at Kankakee; Henry Goldson, who operates three theatres in Chicago; Ludwig Siegel, Princess Theatre, Chicago; Sidney Selig, Gem Theatre, Chicago; Adam Dernbach, who operates a theatre at Wheaton, and Sam Abrams. James Dibelka, one of the most active members of the organization, has been made secretary.

Fourth Annual Meet

"The Fighting Parson" to Speak to Kansas Exhibitors

The Motion Picture Theatre Onwers of Kansas will hold their fourth semi-annual convention at the Hotel Broadview, Wichita, Kans., Monday, September 25, 1922. The most important thing to come before the convention will be the Legislative Program, to be laid out for the protection of the business. The prominent entertainment of the convention will be the big banquet which will be given by the film exchanges.

The speakers at the banquet will be prominent men of Kansas. W. Y. Morgan, of Hutchinson; C. B. Griffith, of Ft. Scott; R. J. Hopkins, of Garden City, and Rev. Earl A. Blackman are to be some of the speakers. Rev. Blackman is known throughout the country as "The Fighting Parson" and is National Chaplain of the American Legion.

On Way to Coast

Pola Negri to Start Work on "Bella Donna"

Pola Negri, after what she calls the busiest week of her life, during which she had been seeing reporters, posing for photographers, attending luncheons and dinners and, incidentally, seeing New York, left Thursday on the Twentieth Century Limited for Hollywood, where she will soon start work under George Fitzmaurice's direction in "Bella Donna," her first American picture for Paramount.

Miss Negri was accompanied by John C. Flinn, who will act in the capacity of personal representative en route. The schedule called for a two days' stop-over in Chicago.

HERBERT E. HANCOCK

Still Making Good

Hancock Finishes One Job and Starts Another Toward Success

This is about Herbert E. Hancock. He was the man William Fox and his General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan picked out to head the Fox News Reel when it was started in 1919. How well he has done his job is attested by the Reel's popularity, Fox says.

Having, with the aid of the Fox organization backing put the News Reel in its present enviable position, Hancock turned the service over to his brother, Don, and a few months ago became director-in-chief of the educational and industrial division of the Fox Film Corporation. That he already has put that new short subject feature of the moving picture business in the forefront of reels of its kind is readily seen from the favorable reviews which it received at its first showing recently.

Better Prospects in Texas; Minimum Daily Loss of $500

While Dallas now has thirty-two theatres and prospects look a little brighter for fall, things have been none too roseate for the local exhibitor during the summer just passed. This in face of the fact, too, that other lines of business have enjoyed "near prosperity." Building operations have broken all records, population is increasing by leaps and bounds and it would seem that the exhibitor surely must be in line for a little of the vaunted prosperity here.

An insight on conditions is given, perhaps, by a statement by E. H. Hulsey, the best known exhibitor in the Southwest, now occupying a high executive office with Southern Enterprises. Mr. Hulsey recently appeared before the Dallas Board of Commissioners and, in opposing a raise asked by union operators, declared: "This is no time for raises. I venture to say that the combined loss in the picture business in Dallas amounts to from $500 to $1,000 a day. I am willing to prove to an impartial committee that the loss of the corporation I represent alone runs into the hundreds of dollars every day."

Incidentally, Mr. Hulsey appealed to the Board of Commissioners for the repeal of an existing ordinance forcing all operators to pass a written examination before they are allowed a license to operate in Dallas. Mr. Hulsey said the union has Dallas sewed up under that arrangement and is in a position to dictate terms to the managers. He informed the commissioners that the theatre men are determined to close up their shows and suffer a loss of $3,000 a day rather than accede to the raises demanded, which are from $41.25 a week for chief operators and $36 for assistant operators, with $1.25 an hour for overtime, to $41.25 for chief operators, $40 for assistant operators, and $2.50 an hour for overtime on Sundays. Mr. Hulsey asked also the abolishment of the ordinance creating a board of examiners. (It has been the contention of some exhibitors that the board of examiners discriminated in favor of the union operators, and that open shop operators were unable to obtain a license.)

Following Mr. Hulsey's address, the ordinance on operators' examinations was amended to give the operator the right to operate a machine under license for sixty days in case of an emergency, provided the exhibitors furnish a $5.000 bond against any accident while the man is operating the machine. The temporary license, however, does not relieve the operator from an examination for a permanent license, which must be taken later on.

Events then followed rapidly. Boiled down, they are as follows: The mayor of the city "fired" the old examining board, named a new one, and said that he was not interested in whether the operator was a union or open shop man, so long as he was competent to handle a machine. The matter ended with an agreement between the operators and the theatre men which was described as a victory for neither side, although the theatre men at a meeting went on record for the open shop.

Fort Worth, sister city to Dallas, also has been having its troubles. The Majestic, an Interstate house, did not open for the winter season until Sunday, September 17, although the opening was scheduled for middle August. This was on account of trouble with the Musicians' Union, which was patched up satisfactorily, with no details of the agreement being made public. The Majestic, incidentally, has a policy to conform with the Majestic in Dallas, another Interstate house, and opened with five acts of vaudeville and a feature picture, on a three-a-day basis, with admission prices cut from $1.10 to 55 cents.

Dr. W. F. Box, familiar as a film man along Dallas Film Row, is planning the erection of a new theatre at Kosse, where a record strike of oil has been made. The Doctor has invested in lots fronting on North street in the newest boom city, and his new theatre will occupy one of these lots. "Doc" Box has made "ten strikes" in boom cities, also a few "bloomers," it is true, but he bobs serenely on the surface wherever there is action. Dr. Box is interested in a number of theatres over the state and has followed booms at Breckenridge, San Antonio, Mexia, Cisco, Eastland and other Texas cities.

J. A. Lemke, an exhibitor of Waco, operating the Crystal Theatre, has filed an application for injunction against the City of Waco and the censor of commercial amusements, to restrain the enforcement of the censor ordinance. The constitutionality of the measure is attacked.

There have been several shifts and changes in the El Paso, Texas, field. S. Vance Fulkerson, for years owner of the Bijou, has closed the show. The Rialto, which for some time was under the management of a company composed of El Paso residents, and was later taken over by Lewis and Andreas, has been shifted to the former owner, William Winch, who has changed its name to the Wigwam Theatre.

Following the oil boom at Colorado, Texas, a tent theatre which is a permanent proposition, opened up, playing an all-Paramount policy. This is the first opposition that Charles Taylor at the Best Theatre has had in some months.

S. T. Hodge, who operates theatres in Abilene, Winters, Stamford and other West Texas cities, has opened up a new house in Abilene, several doors west of his Gem Theatre.

W. B. Palmer, of Ranger, has reopened the old Majestic Theatre in that city, under the name of the New Liberty. This gives the city two theatres under his management, the other being the Lamb Theatre.

Johnny Jones, of San Angelo, has purchased the Lyric Theatre in that city from the Southern Enterprises, which gives him both theatres in the town with no opposition.

W. T. McElroy has repurchased the Majestic Theatre from the R. and R. Enterprises in Lubbock.

The Strand Theatre, in Fort Worth, closed, has recently reopened with Carr Scott, of the Mammoth Theatre, Dallas, at the helm.

An airdome has opened in Slaton, Texas, in opposition to the Wilselma Theatre.

Robert J. Littlefield, Jr., owner and director of the Rex and Happyland Theatres in Dallas, has obtained a lease on the Hippodrome in that city, closed for some time, and will, early in the fall, utilize the house for a dramatic stock company he is bringing from New York, to be under the direction of Carl C. Peters as local manager.

The Majestic Theatre in Dallas, a part of the Interstate vaudeville circuit, opened in early August with a new policy embracing multi-reel films as part of the program. The scale of prices has been considerably reduced from last year.

The Victory Theatre Company, of San Augustine, has been formed, with a capital stock of $6 800. The incorporators are W. L. Moore, B. P. Cartwright and M. K. Moore.

Following the securing of a charter at Austin, the Royal Amusement Company, of Waco, took over the Royal Theatre in that city. Three brothers, J. Leslie, C. E., and Dr. Guy F. Witt, are the incorporators.

The Floresville Amusement Company has been chartered at Floresville for the purpose of building a picture theatre, by V. Lichnovsky, E. Miculka and R. J. Goesch.

A $15,000 pipe organ has been installed by the Majestic Theatre, Fort Worth. About $2,500 will be spent on improvements.

Oklahoma Re-Elects Talbot

Officers of the Oklahoma Theatre Owners' and Managers' Association for the next year, elected at the close of the annual meeting here, are as follows: Ralph Talbot, Tulsa, president (re-election); Morris Lowenstein, Oklahoma City, vice-president; Josh Billings, Norman, secretary; Harry Britton, Norman, treasurer.

The next meeting will be held in Oklahoma City in April or May of 1923. Many topics, including Sunday closing, legislation and prices charged by the exchanges for film, were discussed.

The Oklahoma convention is an annual event that attracts as nearly 100 per cent. representation from over the State as is possible. The present meeting proved no exception. Oklahoma, recognized as one of the best show States in the Union, has just about the livest bunch of exhibitors anywhere.

Starting Week on Saturday Tried Out in San Francisco

Herbert L. Rothschild Entertainments has adopted a new policy for opening its pictures at the California, Granada, Imperial and Portola theatres. Instead of the first showings being on Sundays, as in the past, they are now starting on Saturdays. This change will give the theatres the advantage of the Saturday and Sunday crowds to carry the news of the excellence of the entertainment and will also permit house managers to get their prologues and special productions in running shape for the rush of Sunday business. This policy has also been adopted by the management of the Strand and is being considered by the heads of other local houses.

George Mooser, formerly of San Francisco, who went to the Orient several months ago in the interests of the United Artists' Corporation, has won a signal victory in Japan as to the rights of authors and producers in their pictures and it is believed in California film circles that a death blow has been dealt to the practice of pirating successful pictures in that field by selling duplicates broadcast. Mr. Mooser lived for several years in the Orient and it was his knowledge of the ways of the peoples there which led to his selection for this important work.

The specific action which brought about the favorable decision of the court was directed against Hanjiro Sudo, who exhibited a spurious copy of "Way Down East" in Asakusa Park, Tokyo, on May 4. The legal foundation for the suit and the decision which resulted, was the treaty regarding the protection of copyrights concluded between the United States and Japan in 1905. California film interests have been especially interested in the case, since considerable film has been stolen in this state and shipped to the Orient and ringleaders in smuggling plots have operated here extensively.

The Rosmor Film Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000, by E. F. Whiteway, Alexander Moroff and W. A. Howell.

The Rialto Theatre on upper Market Street, has been taken over by Ferris Hartman and Paul Steindorff and will be remodeled and redecorated. When it is opened in October it will be known as the Rivoli and will be operated largely as a home of musical comedy, although feature pictures may be shown from time to time.

The amusement firm of Douglass & Egan, at Merced, has been dissolved and Francis Egan has purchased the Liberty Theatre at Lemoore. Charles Douglass is planning to make a trip to Honolulu and upon his return will visit New York in the interests of an improved system of projection.

Weir Casady, manager of the Century Theatre, Oakland, has left for Salt Lake City, Utah, where he will become manager of the State Theatre for Ackerman & Harris. He was at one time with the Coliseum Theatre at San Francisco, and during the war period built and operated two picture houses at Camp Lewis, Wash.

The Warfield Theatre will inaugurate its new policy of showing moving pictures exclusively with an engagement of "The Prisoner of Zenda." George Lipschultz, a violinist, who has led orchestras for several years at Milwaukee, has been engaged to lead the new orchestra at the Warfield.

The Casino Theatre, for some time the home of musical comedy, is to be devoted to the presentation of moving pictures, commencing early in September, the first offering to be "Queen of the Moulin Rouge."

Loew's Warfield Theatre went on a straight picture basis commencing August 27, with the "Prisoner of Zenda" as the opening attraction. William C. Dowlan, production manager for this theatre and the State Theatre at Los Angeles, arranged a remarkable prologue.

The Hayward Theatre, at Hayward, is to be remodeled and a gallery added.

The City Council of Oakland, has passed to print an ordinance designed to ultimately eliminate frame theatre buildings. The ordinance prohibits the erection of frame theatres and provides that in case any such theatre now in use shall cease operations for thirty days it shall no longer be used as a theatre. The ordi- has been approved by organized theatre owners and building interests.

The Northern California Photo Plays Company has been incorporated here with a capital stock of $25,000, by J. S. Joffre, H. H. Harvey and J. E. Bennett.

The police play, "In the Name of the Law," is to be presented shortly at the Strand Theatre at a benefit matinee for Police Detective Ernest Gable, recently shot and seriously injured in a desperate gun battle with a thug. The benefit is being arranged by a committee which includes F. R. Newman, manager of the Strand; Monte Rice, exploitation manager for Robertson-Cole, and C. B. Beale, local exchange manager.

James Pilling, at one time manager of the old Empress Theatre, and well known in the theatrical field on the Pacific Coast, has been appointed manager of the Century Theatre at Oakland.

E. M. Masterson, of the Orpheum Theatre, Lovelock, Nev., visited San Francisco early in September to arrange his bookings for the winter season.

A sweeping change in policy has been made at the Oakland State Theatre of Ackerman & Harris, and a return has been made to the split-week plan, with a change of shows on Sundays and Wednesdays. Lester J. Fauntain, formerly manager of the State Theatre at Long Beach, has been appointed house manager.

Louisville Theatres Packed When Mercury Takes a Drop

With the closing of outdoor amusements, withdrawal of the river excursion boats, etc., business is coming back to the theatre, and even the roosts are being well patronized. On Sunday, September 17, even standing room was at a premium by 8 o'clock in the evening at the Alamo for "A Fool There Was," even though that theatre has had the courage of its convictions and has boosted prices to 40 cents a throw.

At the Rialto, even the top tier of seats near the roof was full, as Wallace Reid and Bebe Daniels in "Nice People" sounded good to the talent. The Majestic, with Nazimova in "A Doll's House," also drew big. Fourth street was a busy street on Sunday night, and the writer is willing to swear to that, as he was looking for a theatre with seating room and finally had to take three flights up. Cooler weather is making for a much better business all around.

The Alamo Theatre, after several weeks of work on the interior, has been transformed into one of the handsomest picture houses in the country. The interior has been redecorated throughout, a small stage for the presentation of novelties and prologues has been constructed, and the theatre as a whole, presents an entirely new appearance inside. About $20,000 was spent on improvements.

Moving pictures will be presented on a scale and style never before known in Louisville, according to Fred Dolle, manager.

A new orchestra, the Alamo Symphony Ensemble, has been organized by Walter J. Rudolph, a pianist of note who has been a member of the Chicago Musical College.

Outside theatrical chains are reported to be negotiating for the unfinished Cadick Theatre at the corner of Third and Sycamore streets, Evansville, Ind. The theatre was begun more than a year ago, but the company is now in the hands of a receiver and construction has stopped. One report has it that the Shubert interests may close a deal for the building.

The Broadway Amusement Company, operating the Alamo and Walnut theatres downtown, will begin construction immediately on a new theatre in the section of the city known as the Highlands and will have it operating in three months, according to an announcement by Fred Dolle, president of the company. The new theatre will seat 1,000 and cost approximately $50,000, according to Mr. Dolle. It will be built on the site of the present open-air theatre of the Baxter Theatre, on Baxter avenue. It was not stated what would be done with the Baxter Theatre when the new house is completed. The lot for the new house has a sixty-foot frontage and a depth of 200 feet. The structure will be modern in every respect and will be an addition to the Highlands.

"MONTE CRISTO" USHERS SEATED PATRONS

Putting the girls into French court dress was one of the schemes which helped the Strand Theatre, Cleveland, make a lot of money out of the new Fox super special. The world is theirs for the asking.

Berinstein May Quit Albany to Make Home in New York

William Berinstein, owner of the Colonial Theatre and who also owns and controls two or three picture houses in Elmira, is planning to make his future home in New York City. Mr. Berinstein has been a popular figure in motion picture circles in Albany for several years, and was prominently identified with the committee on arrangements at last winter's annual meeting of the New York State exhibitors in Albany.

The Majestic Theatre in Albany, which has been running a mixed program of vaudeville and pictures for several years, has just gone over to burlesque and serves to take the place of the Empire Theatre, now being demolished.

Clarence and Gertrude Taylor, running a picture theatre in Port Leyden, have just sold the house to John Castle of Norwood, who will take possession at once.

Courtesy goes a long ways and is a mighty pleasant thing to meet. All of which is by way of stating that the Lincoln Theatre, which has just opened in Troy, is fortunate in having secured Edward H. Crawford, of New York, as its manager. First, last and always, Mr. Crawford wants his patrons to feel at home.

Virgil N. Lappeus, who for the past year and a half has been assistant manager of Proctor's Fourth Street Theatre in Troy, has just been named to succeed John G. Wallace as manager of Proctor's Harmanus Bleecker Hall in Albany. Mr. Wallace has gone with the city engineer.

The Strand Theatre, which is being erected in Schenectady, was scheduled to open about October 15 and will be known as "The State." In the neighboring city of Troy the Max Spiegel interests are also erecting a theatre which will be known as "The Troy," and which is due to open in December. The two houses represent an investment of more than $500,000.

Fred Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square Theatre here, has been running double features all through the summer and, incidentally, reports excellent business since last June. Mr. Elliott is rather undecided as to whether or not he will continue double features through the winter.

Carter DeHaven, stage and screen star, was host at a luncheon at the Hotel Ten Eyck here to thirty guests one day this week. The majority of guests are well known in local film circles. Others, however, included County Judge Isadore Bookstein and Roy S. Smith, secretary of the Albany Chamber of Commerce.

Hughie Mack, who has been acting as stage manager at the Palace Theatre in Watertown, has quit and in his place Harry Horne has been transferred from the Robbins' Theatre in Utica.

Albany, Troy and Schenectady picture houses can hardly muster more than a ton of coal between them, but the managers are not worrying, believing that there will be sufficient coal to go round before cold weather sets in.

The Hudson and Colonial theatres here have just reopened, spic and span, and continuing under the management of George Roberts.

There is nothing in sight to warrant the assumption that Albany will have any new picture theatres for at least a year to come. In Schenectady there is a $350,000 house going up, while in Troy the Lincoln has just opened, a big Strand is being built and a smaller house is in course of erection.

Watertown, N. Y., is agog these days because the Roamax Film Company of Fort Lee has just sent about twenty people there and is shooting scenes in connection with the picture to be known as "The Little Mothers."

No talk is heard around Albany these days in regard to changing admission prices. With the settlement of the railroad strike better business is in sight in Albany, Schenectady, Troy and Mechanicsville.

St. Louis Theatre Changes to Cost About $2,000,000

The film industry is to add $2,000,000 in improvements to Grand boulevard in the vicinity of Washington boulevard within the next few months. Upon his return from New York a few days ago, Nathan Frank, new president of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, announced that plans had been completed for the completion of the large office building originally planned as part of the Missouri Theatre structure. He said more than $1,000,000 will be spent on the building and an additional $50,000 has been appropriated for additional improvements.

Charles H. Thimmig, owner of the Midway Theatre, is said to have closed negotiations for the erection of a $1,000,000 theatre and office building on the site of the Midway, Grand and Washington boulevards, a block from the Missouri. The plans call for a 3,000-seat theatre.

The office building part of the Missouri Theatre structure has been held up two years because of city zoning ordinance restrictions and the high cost of labor and building materials.

The Exhibitors Film Company has arranged to distribute the pictures controlled by the Fine Arts Picture Corporation, in Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois.

Joe Mogler, owner of the Mogler, Bremen and Excello Theatres, has been re-elected a member of the Missouri State Republican Committee. He has held the honor several years. Mogler is president of the local exhibitors.' association.

George M. Khoury has organized a company in Clayton, Mo., to finance a theatre and commercial building to be erected at Forsythe boulevard and St. Louis avenue, right on the Clayton Court House Square. It is estimated the structure will cost $50,000. Three stores, with offices above, and a 500 seat picture theatre would be included. St. Louis contractors have been invited to submit bids. Khoury has been operating an airdome in Clayton and is confident that a first-class picture house there would prove a winner.

Harry Earl, newspaper worker, is the new manager of the Rialto Theatre, which opened its season Sunday, August 27. It plays pictures and Orpheum vaudeville, changing its program twice a week.

Charles La Pee, Lyric Theatre, Sullivan, Mo., came to St. Louis last week to consult an eye specialist. A cinder lodged in La Pee's right eye and home talent were unable to remove it. He spent three days in St. Louis under the specialist's care, but was looking O. K. as he took train for home. He promised to keep his eye out of the path of cinders in the future.

J. Kollo opened his new theatre at Willisville, Ill., on August 28. It seats 350. The equipment, which includes two Power's machines and a Daylite screen.

W. Baumann has opened a small picture house at Ballwin, Mo. He will give three shows a week.

Jefferson City, Mo., is to have a new picture theatre, it is reported locally. J. Horsefeldt, one of the owners of the St. Clair Theatre, St. Clair, Mo., is said to have under consideration plans for a modern theatre for the capital city. Horsefeldt has been very successful in the grain and cattle business.

Fred L. Cornwell has let contracts for a new $120,000 theatre and store building at Moline, Ill. The theatre will seat approximately 2,000 persons on the first floor and balcony. The house, which will be thoroughly fireproof, may be ready for the winter season.

A new theatre will be opened at Frankford, Mo., by W. H. Donovan, a local business man. Donovan formerly held the Ford agency in Frankford.

Out-of-town exhibitors who were in recently were: J. R. Dennison, Ohio Theatre, Evansville, Ind.; B. Taylor, Orpheum Theatre, Paducah, Ky.; Tom Reed, Yenn, Hayes Circuit, Duquoin, Ill., and N. C. Norwein, Norwein Amusement Company, Bonne Terre, Mo.

Entertaining the Inner Man

Manager W. Deering is serving tea and cake each afternoon to the patrons of the Rialto Theatre, Winnipeg. The price of admission has remained stationary at 15 cents. The house is reported as highly successful.

Kansas Exhibitor Meeting in Wichita September 25

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas are to have their biggest convention at the Broadview Hotel in Wichita, Kans., September 25. It will be a record-breaker in point of business done, and the attendance is expected to be more than at any other meeting of the organization. There will be a number of important speakers, among them the Rev. Earl A. Blackman, national chaplain of the American Legion. His subject will be "Jesus and the Movies."

D. Filizola of the Theatrette at Ft. Scott, Kans., and H. L. Gess, who owns the Rex and Mystic theatres at Mulberry, Kans., were in town last week.

C. P. Rogers, who has the Whiteway and Iris theatres at Concordia, Kans., was a visitor at some of the exchanges last week.

W. J. Gable of the Grand Theatre, Beloit, Kans., was in town recently.

The Kansas City Film Exchange's baseball team has a game scheduled soon with the ball players of Merriam, Kans. Merriam is only a few miles from Kansas City.

Howard E. Jameyson, formerly advertising manager for the Liberty and Doric Theatres in Kansas City, and more recently advertising manager for the Butterfly Theatre at Milwaukee, has become exploitation manager for the local office of Universal. He is filling the vacancy left by Louis Kramer, who left this week for Chicago, where he will take charge of the exploitation in the Chicago territory for the Film Booking Office.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Ross Riley announce the birth, August 23, of a son, R. R., Jr., Mr. Riley is owner of the Wigwam Theatre at Oberlin, Kas.

T. A. Davis has purchased the Odeon Theatre, Cottonwood Falls, Kas., and the Lyric Theatre at Strong City, Kas., from C. W. Hermes.

When trains stopped running, C. H. Hunt of the Rex Theatre at Higginsville, Mo., brought his film back to the exchanges by automobile.

Chris Manfre, directing manager of the Superior Film Co., was married recently to Miss Frances Genova.

Shoolman Gives Boston Kids Excellent Lesson in Thrift

Max Shoolman, vice president and treasurer of the Olympic Theatres, Inc., gave an excellent lesson in thrift recently when he presented a bank book showing a savings desposit of $5 to each of the 104 boys and fifty-four girls who are inmates of the Jewish Children's Home on Canterbury street, Boston. The children were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Shoolman, at the summer estate of the latter at Bedford, Mass., where they were given a day of pleasure and entertained with all sorts of delightful events. The presentation of the bank deposits came as a surprise feature of the day.

The Fenway Theatre, in Boston, celebrated the opening of the fall season on Labor Day by the dedication of a new organ, the installation of which has just been completed. Lloyd Del Castillo, a musician of national reputation, has been engaged as organist.

The news of a settlement of the coal strike and the prospect of a flow of fuel to their bins within due course, has been received with much satisfaction by many of the smaller theatres throughout the greater Boston district, as in several cases the supply on hand is barely sufficient to carry them through December, and in some cases not even so long. They still worry, however, from the fact that the chairman of the Emergency Fuel Commission has decided that theatres are not on any priority list and cannot receive anthracite coal until the supply is much more plentiful than at present.

For the most part, however, the larger houses are not worrying. Many of these are equipped with oil-burning heat systems, while in other instances their heat is supplied from outside sources, such as the Edison Electric Light Company, which is on the preferred list and would have no real difficulty in obtaining coal, even if its present large supply was exhausted.

Pittsburgh Exhibitors Add to Their Theatre Holdings

The Harris Amusement Company, of Pittsburgh, has taken over the Strand Theatre at Youngstown, Ohio, and opened the same on September 2. The Strand is located in the heart of the city, and has a seating capacity of 850 persons.

M. Rosenberg, of the Rialto Theatre, 1600 Fifth avenue, has taken over the American Theatre on Fifth avenue, just a square distant from the Rialto. Mr. Rosenberg states that the American will be closed till the end of the month, and that he will make several improvements on the same. Dorfman and Cohen were former owners of this place.

A. G. Phillips has purchased the interest of his partner, E. A. Zeitler, in the Academy Theatre, Meadville, Pa., and is now sole owner.

A permit has been issued to the Kanawha Amusement Company at Charleston, W. Va., operating the Virginia Theatre on State street, to repair and remodel this picture house. The new theatre will be two stories high, and is to be constructed of brick, steel and concrete. The estimated cost is $100,000.

Lewis Lieb, proprietor of the Diamond Theatre at Cresson, Pa., has suffered an attack of blood poisoning, the result from a cut on his thumb off a broken pop bottle. He is recovering at the present writing.

Ike Silverman, of the Silverman Brothers, owners of the Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., is on a motoring trip through New York and Michigan. His brother Jake has recently returned from a trip to the West Coast, and displays a snapshot he had taken while standing with Douglas Fairbanks.

For a while all the film boys here were buying Hupmobiles. Now they are sporting Durant cars. The reason can probably be traced to the fact that Max Engelberg, owner of the Strand Theatre, McKees Rocks, is selling Durants when he isn't theatre managing.

A balcony has been installed in the Grand Theatre, Nanty Glo, Pa., and the capacity has been increased by 149 chairs.

The coal mines in the vicinity of Vintondale, Pa., are working full blast, and prospects for better business in that section are very encouraging.

William Bittner, of the Cambria and Park Theatres, Johnstown, Pa., in company with his wife, is spending a vacation at Asbury Park, N. J. The trip was made by motor.

The Smoot Brothers, controlling four theatres in Parkersburg, W. Va., were recent visitors among Pittsburgh's film exchanges.

With the removal of the Lyric Theatre to Summers street, Charleston, W. Va., that thoroughfare promises to be the Broadway of Charleston. The Strand, at the corner of Summers and State; the Capitol, right in the rear of the Federal building; the New Virginian, which is now under construction at the southeast corner of Summers and State streets, and the New Kearse Theatre, several doors from the Capitol, are the houses.

The Kearse is rapidly nearing completion. The exterior work has been finished and all that remains to be done is to finish the interior. This house will present legitimate attractions.

The New Virginian promises to be one of the most complete and finest picture houses in the state.

With the completion of the new building for the Lyric, the finishing of the Kearse and Virginian building, five theatres will be located in Summers street within the one square.

Elmer E. Rutter, publicity manager for the Manos Theatres at Greensburg, Pa., spent a few days in town recently circulating among the film exchanges.

Labor Day marked the reopening of H. R. Barney's Liberty Theatre at McKeesport, Pa. This house was destroyed by fire last March, and had since been entirely rebuilt. To use Barney's own words, "It is the biggest and finest in McKeesport," and its appearance proves that Barney has a right to boast.

The Eagle Theatre, located on Penn avenue, near Butler street, was re-opened on Labor Day. The Eagle has been closed for several months, owing to poor business.

New England Showmen Benefit by Distributor Competition

As a result of competition among various distributing concerns, all seeking first run engagements, New England exhibitors this year are not wanting for big pictures. This situation is having a wonderful effect on theatregoers who today are finding their way into New England theatres in seemingly greater numbers than ever before. The first run showings of Fox's specials, Metro's "Broadway Rose," which is being elaborately exploited; Universal's "The Storm," "Human Hearts," and "Under Two Flags," Paramount's "Blood and Sand," Goldwyn's "Remembrance" and other equally big pictures, are prompting competing exhibitors to hand out the greatest bills ever arranged in New England.

Despite the presence of strikes of various sorts in spots, all over the five New England states, the fact remains that the picture business in New England has returned with a bang, with every territory profiting accordingly. First run houses are using considerably more newspaper advertising space and advertise productions from six to eight months in advance. This renewed activity, together with the presence of much more exploitation than ever was done in that section, has had the tendency of jamming the theatres, even in the face of the heat.

Bill Canning is managing the Palace Theatre in Manchester, N. H., and through clever exploitation has succeeded in building a great clientele for his theatre, which utilizes a combination policy.

Charles Lovenberg, owner of the Bijou, Pawtucket, R. I.; Victory, Providence, R. I., and Bijou, Woonsocket, R. I., is rapidly recovering from an illness that has confined him to his bed for several months.

Martin Tuohey, manager of the Emery Theatre, Providence, experimented with his first Saturday morning children's performance. It was so successful that the performance will now be given regularly at the same time. Fox's "Just Tony" was the first attraction and it drew a capacity audience at 10 cents. Manager Tuohey has also solved the "supper show" problem by giving a special performance between 4.30 and 6.30 p. m. for school children, at special prices.

Competition in Providence was never as bitter as it is today. Bill Mahoney at the Rialto is showing Universal, Metro and Fox specials at 35 cents top, while the Modern and Strand are dividing the Paramount and First National product between them. Ed Fay is charging 15 cents at his Fay's Theatre for a first run showing of Goldwyn pictures and six acts of vaudeville, using a ten-piece orchestra. The Emery is showing six acts of vaudeville and second run pictures at 25 cents top during the afternoon and 50 cents top at night.

Sol Braunig is booking the new Capitol Theatre in Providence. This house opened several weeks ago and at 15 cents top with a three-time-change-a-week policy is making a success of the venture. This house was considered a "hoodoo." It is out of the theatre and shopping district, at the top of a hill, and has played everything from stock company to grand opera.

William T. Hart is touring New England, staging special "local movie contests" at various theatres. He was at the Bijou in Pawtucket, R. I., last week, the stunt helping business at that house considerably.

Payne Brothers will shortly open a 2,500-seat house in Pawtucket. This house will be known as the Le Roy, in honor of the son of one of the owners who was killed during the world war. The house is located directly opposite the Imperial, operated and owned by Senator Hartford, and nearby is Famous Players' Strand Theatre, the house that Alfred S. Black built.

Just what the coming season will bring in Pawtucket is problematical, but, nevertheless, the future is the concern of exhibitors there in general. It is generally admitted that the city already is considerably over-seated, and with the opening of the Le Roy shortly, the situation will be even more complicated.

A slight break in the weather, in favor of theatre patronage, helped business all along the line in Boston. The downtown houses reaped a harvest last week, this being particularly true of the Modern, Park, Olympic and State theatres.

Virtually 85 per cent. of the total number of theatres in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island are now opening. The remaining 15 per cent. will probably open within the next few weeks.

Fred Lovett, of the Royal Theatre, Olneyville, R. I.; Bill Mahoney, of the Rialto; Martin Tuohey, of the Emery; Fred Read, of the Strand; Sol Braunig, of the Modern and Capitol, and Matt Rielly, of the Victory, all of Providence, are making two trips weekly to Boston's Film Row, Tuesday and Thursday. These boys book after showings.

Reports that have been returned to Bill Gray's offices from his house managers indicate a healthy increase in business.

Harry Crull, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., has taken over the managerial reins of the Edward F. Albee Theatre, with Bill Westgate in charge at the other Povenberg house, the Empire.

B. S. Moss, the New York theatrical magnate, was a visitor to Boston last week.

Two magnificent new theatres, one at Brockton, Mass., the other at New Bedford, Mass., were opened on Monday of last week by the Olympia Theatres, Inc., of Boston, adding two more links in the Gordon chain of picture houses which are fast spreading all over New England. All are under the personal supervision of Nathan Gordon, founder of the Olympia chain of amusement houses, and one of the most prominent and successful theatrical men in the country.

Both of the new houses were opened under the most auspicious circumstances, with the mayor and city government present in each instance to give grace to the occasion, and the initial ceremonies were both elaborate and appropriate.

Is It Generally True?

Are film rentals generally lower than they were a year ago at this time? That holds true in Missouri, according to a survey made by the M. P. T. O. of that state, which announces a 40 per cent. decrease. The cause ascribed is that the past business depression has led exhibitors to be more careful in their buying.

What is the situation in your territory?

Buffalo Exchangemen Turns Exhibitor; Olympic Altered

Tom Joy, formerly a member of the Buffalo Metro staff and now manager of the Hippodrome in Carthage, opened that theatre Friday evening, September 1, with "Turn to the Right." The house has been completely overhauled.

The Olympic, Buffalo, remodeled and redecorated, re-opened Labor Day with "The Storm." William McKenna is manager. Preston Sellers, Jr., and Joseph A. Rasjeya are organists. Eric Hurdler is conducting the orchestra and Samuel A. Geddis is in charge of projection. A $35,000 organ has been installed.

Arthur L. Skinner gave his patrons a triple feature bill when he opened his fall season at the Victoria, one of Buffalo's leading neighborhood theatres. Mr. Skinner also brought back the Victoria Concert orchestra.

Herman Lawrence the past week celebrated First Anniversary Week at the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, with an "All Fun Bill," Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy" was the feature.

Shea's Theatre, Jamestown, has added vaudeville to its program. Now its Keith vaudeville and high class pictures. The new policy started Labor Day.

Harris Lumberg, proprietor of the Lumberg Theatre in Niagara Falls, has gone on a two week's fishing trip in the wilds of Canada. Harris is splitting the Paramount program with the new Strand in the Cataract City.

Nicholas Dipson, of Batavia, well-known Western New York exhibitor, is having a great time in Italy, according to postcards.

C. J. Carlson, manager of the Grand Theatre, Westfield, died suddenly last week.

Michigan Theatres Reopen; Ushering in Autumn Season

The Savoy Theatre, Chene and Catherine streets, Detroit, was re-opened on September 2, by its original owner, Mr. Halstead. The house was one of the first in Detroit and has been remodeled into a very cozy place.

The Regent Theatre, Battle Creek, after being closed for two months, re-opened on September 9. The house has been entirely redecorated and remodelled, until it is now entirely different from its previous appearance. The opening attraction was "Sonny," featuring Lick Barthelmess.

The Gladmer Theatre, Lansing, was re-opened September 5 after having been completely renovated and redecorated. Manager Claude Cady has spent over $25,000 in decorations and alterations.

The New Harper Theatre opened September 1 and enjoyed a great patronage. It is very tastefully decorated and one that Korbell and Korbell, proprietors, may well be proud of. William Clark, well- nown among the men in the film industry, is in charge of bookings and management.

Harry Abramson and Louis Wesper have taken over the Ludeway Theatre on Michigan avenue and are renaming it the Theatre Royale. They plan a number of important changes to the house in the way of needed improvements. Mr. Abramson formerly managed the Olympic Theatre.

E. M. Crawford, formerly manager of the Fieber and Shea house in Akron, has been appointed manager of the Regent in Flint, Mich., for W. S. Butterfield.

"Dad" Whitman has purchased the interest of Charles Meade in the firm of Meade and Whitman and will continue in the State rights field hereafter under the name of Rex Film Company.

Charles Seaman, of the Consolidated Theatres, Grand Rapids, has contracted for 100 per cent. Educational for his Majestic Theatre and Strand.

Larry Hayes, of the Dawn Theatre, Hillsdale, created a lot of talk by an exploitation stunt he used in connection with "The Black Bag," which played his house a week ago. He offered $5 in gold to the person who could detect or ascertain the man who was on the streets of the town carrying a black bag. As a result, he did a big business on the picture.

Colored Woman Brings Suit Against Indiana Exhibitor

Alleging that she was denied the privileges allowed white persons at the Hippodrome Theatre in Fort Wayne, Ind., Olla Jones, a negress, has filed suit in the superior court at Fort Wayne against Tony H. Nelleson, proprietor. She says in the suit that she was admitted to the theatre but was denied full and equal enjoyment of accommodations, advantages and facilities because she is of African descent.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has filed suit in the circuit court in St. Joseph county for $12,830 against the Blackstone Theatre Corporation, operating the Blac stone Theatre at South Bend, on a claim for film rentals. The Goldwyn concern alleges that films leased to the theatre during the last three years incurred an obligation of $20,000, part of which was paid. Interest from January 1, 1922, also is asked in the suit.

Burglars worked the combination on the Standard Realty and Theatre Company's theatre at Clinton on Tuesday night, September 5, and escaped with between $1,300 and $1,400. The money represented the receipts for the Saturday, Sunday and Monday's business. An investigation disclosed that the robbers apparently had concealed themselves in the building during one of the shows and then opened the safe after the employes had left.

Iowa Exhibitor's Coolness Averts Serious Fire Panic

Heavy damage which is covered fully by insurance was caused by fire at the Star Theatre, Colfax, Iowa. The flames started in the projection booth and quickly got beyond control. Quick wittedness on the part of Manager De Baggio averted a near panic. The theatre is to be rebuilt. It was recently remodeled and redecorated.

Shepard & Lamb, Storm Lake, Iowa, exhibitors, whose house was destroyed by fire early this year, have been presenting shows in a tent at Storm Lake.

On September 15 the new Hippodrome Theatre, Keokuk, Iowa, recently constructed by Baker & Dodge, opened. The new house seats 1,300.

L. B. Seymour, who formerly operated the Rex Theatre at Glenwood, opened a house at Tabor, Iowa, September 1.

The Strand Theatre, Sherburn, Iowa, has been reopened. It recently was purchased by W. A. Gilfillan from A. D. Roloff.

Harry Pace has taken over the operation of the Rialto Theatre, Pocahontas, Iowa. Pace formerly operated houses at Orange City and Traer.

Wilart Baltimore Plant to Cost $200,000, Employ 300

Plans for the plant to be built by the Wilart Cinema Industries, Inc., organized in New Rochelle, N. Y., nearly four years ago, have been drawn by E. G. Blanke, an architect of Baltimore, and it will be built in that city on the Reisterstown road near Park Circle.

The cost of the structure will be approximately $200,000. A lot measuring 300 by 144 feet has been purchased by Matthews & Peters, investment bankers, representing the Wilart company in Baltimore, from B. Glasscock and B. Howard Richards. The cost for the property was $35,000, it is said.

Three hundred persons will be employed at the plant, which is to be constructed in a "U" shape, and projection machines and moving picture cameras are to be manufactured.

Glazed tile and stucco will be the material used for the exterior, and the California mission style of architecture will be used. There will be a sunken garden, two stories and a basement and a roof garden. The building will be fireproof throughout; there will be concrete vaults for the storage of films; located right back of the offices which will take up the entire right wing on the first floor. Over the offices will be the laboratory and in the left wing the assembly rooms will be located.

The New Gem Theatre 617 Duncan place, re-opened to the public under the management of Joseph Robbins, on August 25. Mr. Robbins managed the Comedy Theatre, 412 East Baltimore street, for six years.

The Gayety Theatre, long known as a burlesque house in Baltimore, which introduced moving pictures as part of its program during the latter part of last season, has been sold by the Baltimore Theatre Company, representing the Columbia Amusement Corporation, to Jacob I. Hamburger and Louis Applefeld. The assessment on the property is $235,000, but the purchase price was not given.

Nebraska Theatre Reduces Prices to 10 and 15 Cents

With prices reduced to 10 and 15 cents, the Lyric Theatre, Norfolk, Neb., which was closed last fall, reopened September 2. The Norfolk Amusement Company, which owns the Grand Theatre, will also operate the Lyric. The theatre has been completely remodeled and redecorated. Robert Ballantyne is manager of the Lyric.

The Schmidt Theatre, Stapleton, Neb., opened recently. William H. Schmidt is owner of the house.

Blaine Cook, proprietor of the Rialto Theatre, Beatrice, Neb., has purchased the Gilbert Theatre from George Monroe. The latter is to manage a house at Clinton, Iowa.

Work on the erection of the new theatre at Verdel, Neb., sponsored by L. H. Black, has begun.

Thomas & Bush have purchased the Strand Theatre, Hastings, Neb., from J. E. McQuiston.

Under the management of W. C. Dolan and Harry Brisbee of Indianola, the Opera House, Holbrook, Neb., has opened.

Verne Haycraft of Lewisville has purchased the Star Theatre, Madelia, Minn., from W. W. Woltz.

A Paramount Release

A SIMPLE WINDOW DRESS FOR "LOVES OF PHARAOH"

This was planned by Frank J. Miller, manager of theatres in Augusta, Ga., for the big Lubitsch picture. The color scheme prevents good photography, but you can get an idea of the construction from this reproduction.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

Newsy Bits

Millarde Johnson, of Australasian Film, Ltd., has purchased the Australasian and New Zealand rights to the initial B. P. Schulberg production, "Rich Men's Wives" that Al Lichtman Corporation is distributing.

Arthur Lee, of Lee-Bradford Corporation, who have redoubled their distribution activities in the independent field, returned to New York this week from Boston where he closed several important deals.

Sam Jaffe, business manager of Preferred Pictures, Inc., has left New York for the Coast after spending a brief vacation in the metropolis. Jaffe announced that work on the third B. P. Schulberg picture, "Are You a Failure?", on September 25.

Niagara Pictures Corporation of Buffalo has acquired the distribution in western New York of "Uncle Tom's Cabin". Manager Harry Marsey is now arranging for a road show to accompany the picture on tour.

The newly announced Rialto Exchanges, Inc., stated this week through one of its officials that it will shortly open headquarters in Los Angeles, for the purpose of cooperating with producers.

Twenty-four sheets will be posted extensively in many sections of the Western Pennsylvania territory to advertise the latest C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation special and incidently the first release of the "Big Six" series, "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned".

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, exploitation director for Arrow Film Corporation, is in Toledo, O., doing advance exploitation on that firm's latest special, "Night Life In Hollywood" which opens next Monday at Doc Horater's Alhambra Theatre.

Equity Films, Inc., has acquired the American rights to the Einstein film. Edwin M. Dadman is in charge of the distribution. This concern has quarters in the Selwyn Theatre Building, New York.

Mike Rosenberg, who is associated with Sol and Irving Lesser in independent production activities on the Coast arrived in New York late this week and joined his partners who are preparing for the road showing of "Oliver Twist", the Jackie Coogan special.

Atlas Film Exchange of New York has purchased the metropolitan rights to the new feature, "Why Do Men Marry?"

That Charles C. Burr, producer of the Johnny Hines features, "Torchy" comedies and associated with Whitman Bennett in the production of "Secrets of Paris", will further extend his business interests is evident from reports that have come to this office. C. C. Burr has a vitally important deal under way, which can not be disclosed until finally completed, probably early next month.

First-run showings of independent pictures are common these days and, if current bookings are any criterion, the better State rights pictures will not want for good dates.

Matt Radin, owner of the Capital Film Exchange of New York has developed into a legitimate producer, for he is interested with the Minsky Brothers in the new stock burlesque project at the Park Theatre in New York.

The Week In Review

CANADIAN producers have hit upon a plan that will certainly help the industry in the Dominion They have decided to retain the same distribution rights on their product as American producers enjoy on theirs in the United States. Ernest Shipman, who is considerably interested in Canadian production of independent pictures, was consulted by this department, and he agreed that the move is one that will inspire increased production activity in the Dominion, which has made meteoric progress in picture making during the past four years. Mr. Shipman is included among the prominent Canadians involved in the new plan.

ARE exhibitors in the market for independent pictures? Announcements of first run showings of independent pictures prove they most assuredly are. Beginning with the next issue in our independent territorial news section of this department will be published a list of important first run showings in every territory. That will tell the story and at the same time give readers an authentic idea of just what kind of pictures are in demand.

THE anxiety of Broadway theatres to book independent pictures on an equitable basis is perhaps the best and surest sign of progress in the market that this writer can think of at this time. Heretofore, it has been the policy of Broadway managers to demand a flat guarantee that the picture will attract a specified gross. This gross has been anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000 weekly. In addition to that the independent distributor has been imposed upon to the extent that he had to meet all advertising bills. In other words, the independents gained nothing, other than the distinction of having had their pictures played on Broadway, while the showman has pocketed an excessive profit.

BUT with the independent market truly independent to the extent that their splendid box office pictures are that big that they justify asking a reasonable rental for their product, this unfair method of booking has been eliminated. And today Broadway managers are paying as big prices for independent productions as they are for the other kind. It is a fact only too well known in the show business that the B. F. Keith, Moss and Loew circuits in the Metropolitan section have secured their biggest profits from independent pictures. This statement is made with rentals and grosses in mind and the two compared proportionately to the rentals and grosses recorded on the other films.

EXHIBITORS want money-making pictures and they don't care who has or makes them, so long as they are entertaining, satisfying and can be turned into money. That is all the exhibitor asks. So long as independents turn out pictures with box office value just so long will they enjoy the patronage of exhibitors. Of that we are now convinced. Warner Brothers, Arrow, Al Lichtman, Equity, Charles Burr, Whitman Bennett and a number of others are convinced of the same thing. Give the exhibitor what he wants and you will have no cause for complaint for lack of patronage.

EVERY producer and distributor in this business owes a vote of thanks to Harry Charnas. If the entire country could be covered as Mr. Charnas covered his territories there is no doubt in the mind of the writer that independent pictures would be shown 100 per cent. It was a master stroke. It accomplished good for the entire field. In dollars and cents it will, eventually, prove the greatest and best investment Mr. Charnas ever made. As for Mr. Lichtman he has endeared himself to thousands of exhibitors. He delivered messages that were an inspiration. He spoke from the heart—and opened the eyes of thousands of theatre owners to the possibilities of the independent market. In other words, it was a big enterprise—the greatest venture undertaken by any branch of the independent field. And it was a huge success.

NOT until this week did this writer fully appreciate the great quantity of junk that cheap exchanges have securely tucked away on their shelves, ready to shoot out whenever the opportune time presents itself. A careful list of these junk shops is being compiled by this department and at the proper time it will be published for the information of the trade and exhibitors in general. Fact is that most of these junk dealers make no effort to hide their plans.

Thinking of "angels," seems as if quite a few of our more notable stars are falling in line with this class of backers. Two of the biggest State rights productions of the past season were made possible through the financial aid of these stars.

Trade Notes

Joe Lefko, the popular manager of the Federated Film Exchange of Pittsburgh, is planning a drive that should create quite a stir among exhibitors in that territory.

Fourteen thousand people paid admission to the Stone Theatre in Brooklyn last week at a test showing of the Houdini special, "The Man From Beyond." This is a new record for the house. This picture will be road showed.

A new film building will shortly be opened in Boston. Several independent concerns in that city already have leased quarters. The building is expected to open the first of October.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, left on Saturday of this week for Boston. When he returns early next week some very important information is expected.

Harry G. Kosch, counsel for the Independent Producers & Distributors, Inc., and counsel for Arrow, left Thursday for Pittsburgh. He will return ate in the week and expects to spend several days in Washington.

Ernest Shipman, who has entered the picture production field on an elaborate scale, will move into new and larger quarters on October 1st at Fifth avenue and West 46th street.

This department has been besieged with letters and telegrams from independent exchangemen, congratulating Moving Picture World on its campaign to aid in the elimination of the unjust five per cent. tax, which would throw many concerns out of business.

Certified Pictures Corporation of New York this week announced four pictures. They are: "The Snitching Hour," featuring Arthur Housman; Nita Naldi and Gladys Leslie, "The Thoroughbred," "Her Half Brother," and "Are The Children To Blame?"

Ricord Gradwell, President of Producers' Security Corporation, is planning a busy season and elsewhere in this section appears an announcement of a series of pictures he already has acquired for State rights distribution.

Lightning Photoplay Corporation of Boston will move into the new Film Building that will open Oct. 1. The name of this concern will be changed to Progress Exchange.

Nathan Hirsch, of Aywon Pictures Corporation, stated to a representative of this department last week that he will announce his complete 1922-23 output next week. He already has issued several announcements concerning some of his features, but with the consummation of several deals his plans for the new season have been finally perfected.

Whether or not Federated Film Exchanges will handle any features remains to be decided upon the return of Managing Director Joe Brandt, who is completing a nation-wide tour of the exchange centres.

Lou Berman of the Independent Film Exchange of Philadelphia is planning the addition of several salesmen to his Philadelphia and Washington exchanges.

There is a rumor in Boston that Alex Ekelberg, who together with several others has been handling several State rights pictures in that section, will retire from the business.

Will Hays Joins Independents In Fight Against 5 Per Cent. Tax

Producers, Distributors and Exchangemen Fall in Line; H. G. Kosch Very Hopeful

Due to the discovery that several of the national companies are involved in the five per cent. sales tax situation because of their distribution system, it became known this week that Will Hays had taken up the problem. Disclosures made known last week in Moving Picture World prompted action in every corner. Harry G. Kosch, counsel for Arrow Film Corporation, and who acted for the Independent Producers' and Distributors' Association, left on Thursday for Pittsburgh, but before going he made the statement to this department that he expects to receive some definite word from Washington within a few days.

The activities of agents of the internal revenue department in New York this week prompted many distributors to call in their counsel. Moving Picture World, following publication last week of the request made by independents that it call a meeting of independent producers and distributors for the purpose of discussing the situation, received twenty-four letters from distributors, exchangemen and producers, all anxious to be on hand.

A very important development in the situation is expected within the next few days. The Washington correspondent of Moving Picture World has been very active collecting data, and it is hoped that by the time the meeting is called some very important information will be available. During the past week seven agents of the Treasury Department visited the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, for the purpose of collecting the tax.

The interpretation placed on the tax by the Treasury Department is said to strike several program companies, and because of this development the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, through Will Hays, have decided to take action. Jack Connolly, the Washington representative of Will Hays, is collecting data.

Mr. Kosch, on behalf of the I. P. D. A., has already filed a brief with the Washington authorities, but no decision has as yet been received.

The date of the Astor Hotel meeting will be announced next week in this department and by letter to those who have expressed their intentions of being on hand. These include exchangemen from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo and Pittsburgh. A committee to take the matter in charge is being organized, and will be announced next week.

Skirboll Buys "Secrets of Paris"

The possibilities of the latest Charles C. Burr-Whitman Bennett production, "Secrets of Paris," with an all star cast, have prompted several sales on that production, which, according to statements sent to this department, will be elaborately exploited. Joe Skirboll of Pittsburgh already has begun his exploitation on this production, which includes in its cast the following: Lew Cody, Montagu Love, Gladys Hulette, Walter James, Effie Shannon, Delores Cassinelli, J. Barney Sherry, William (Buster) Collier, Jr., Harry Sothern, Rose Coghlan and others. The production is said to be replete with elaborate settings.

Brandt's Feature Gets Good Start

Joe Brandt's initial "Big Six" production, "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned," which is being distributed through the enterprising C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, showed to one of the greatest and biggest weeks recorded at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre in New York City this week. The Monday opening was the biggest ever experienced by that house in many, many weeks, the attendance holding up all through the week. Many big dates have been booked on this excellent feature.

Export-Import Gets Two Big Features

A radiogram received by Louis Auerbach, of Export & Import Film Company, this week from Ben Blumenthal, president of that company, and Hamilton Theatrical Corporation, revealed the fact that the latter has purchased the rights to the Biblical spectacle, "Sodom and Gemorrha," which, according to the German trade paper, "Filmshau," represents the finest example of continental cinematographic art. It is said that eighteen months were consumed in making the spectacle, which was begun April, 1921, and completed in July, 1922. It is in ten reels, the story having been prepared by Ladisaus Vajda and adapted by Michael Kertess.

Export & Import Film Company this week announced the acquisition of the latest Pola Negri feature, "Sappho", a modern version of the famous story. This picture, released at a time when the attention of the fans is focussed on the doings of Pola Negri, who arrived here last week, will have especial significance in the distribution plans now being arranged. No definite news as to the method of distribution was available this week, although it is stated three national distributing companies are dickering for the picture.

Talking pictures are said to have been finally perfected in Germany, and, judging from reports coming from that country, Germans are manifesting a great interest in these films. The synchronization is said to be perfect, but the reproduction of sound, especially the human voice, is reported in later dispatches to American newspaper to be direly in need of improvement.

Construction on the British plant of Rothacker, the laboratory magnate, is well under way in London, says a report from the other side.

"This Freedom", the new book written by A. S. M. Hutchinson, author of "If Winter Comes", will be produced in England by Ideal Films, Ltd., which this week purchased the screen rights to that story.

A late dispatch from the other side brings word to the effect that T. E. Davies, J. P., has taken over the H. Winik interests in the Western Import and Pearl Distributing Company of London.

Harry J. Cohen resigned as foreign manager of Metro last week. Arthur Loew is expected to succeed him in that position.

Producers Security Is Booming

Pursuant to its announcement policy of giving the independent market big exploitable pictures, Producers Security Corporation is negotiating for a number of special features. Several of these deals are expected to be closed within the next week. Among the productions that Producers' Security Corporation is now handling, according to Ricord Gradwell's announcement, are Dorothy Gish in "The Country Flapper"; Richard Barthelmess in "Just A Song At Twilight"; "The Right Way," "Squire Phin," "Welcome To Our City," "Mr. Potter of Texas," "Mr. Bingle," "Diane of Sleepy Hollow," and "Madame Sans Gene."

Many Dates on Graphic Film

Simultaneous with the announcement that Frank Zambreno of Progress Pictures Exchange of Chicago, had already started his exploitation on the initial Graphic production, "Wildness of the Youth," produced by Ivan Abramson, came word this week that many important first run dates had already been secured on the picture. The metropolitan bookings are reported as being particularly heavy.

Get Dick Barthelmess Feature

Producers' Security Corporation has acquired for independent distribution a new Richard Barthelmess special production, that will be released in the State rights market as "Just A Song At Twilight." While no detailed announcement was available, officials of Producers' Security Corporation verified the report. The cast is said to be an all-star one. Additional information is expected some time next week.

Unity Starts New Production

Unity Productions, Inc., will shortly start production on "A Woman's Story," which will be available on the State rights market. This picture will follow "Why Marry?" starring Edy Darclea. Many territories already have been sold on the latter picture. The picture was enthusiastically praised by every reviewer last week.

Warners' "Rags to Riches" Capitol Date Sign Showmen Seek Big Films

America's most representative picture houses are clamoring for exploitable independent pictures with the result that distributors of this type of features are being besieged with inquiries from showmen. Heretofore, independent producers have found it next to impossible to secure a Broadway showing without being forced to guarantee the management an almost prohibitive gross. This procedure has, fortunately, been radically altered, for the competition in all film centers is so keen that showmen are inclined to grab pictures with box office merit regardless of who has them. And what is more they are paying real money for these pictures.

Warner Brothers' initial special, "Rags To Riches" starring Wesley Barry, has been booked into the Capitol Theatre in New York for a world premier showing during the week of September 24. This booking is a forerunner of an unusual number of other equally big first run showings being arranged by exchanges throughout the country. That the demand for such pictures is great was further proved by the booking of the entire Warner series of seven features by Maurice Fitzer of the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.

Further evidence of the readiness of exhibitors to book big pictures regardless of who has them is furnished in the bookings on the initial Al Lichtman special, "Rich Men's Wives," which is being shown generally in representative first run houses.

To aid the Capitol Theatre in putting over the picture, the Warner Brothers' huge float is being utilized to tour the entire city of New York. In addition to this moving 24-sheet, a big billboard, newspaper and ballyhoo campaign has been evolved. Sam Rothafel is said to have arranged an unusual presentation for the future, which includes in its cast, beside Wesley Barry, Niles Welch, Ruth Renick, Richard Tucker, Russell Simpson, Minna B. Redman and Eulalie Jensen. This is a Harry Rapf production, directed by Wallace Worsley, the story having been written by Will Nigh and Walter De Leon.

The opening of Arrow's "Night Life in Hollywood," at Doc Horater's Alhambra Theatre in Toledo, O., on Monday, September 18, is reported having been greater than that of "Ten Nights In a Barroom". There were a total of 250 admissions more than that paid at the premier of the other picture.

Al Lichtman's B. P. Schulberg production, "Rich Men's Wives", is making a spectacular showing at its first run dates, according to data received from showmen who have booked the picture.

"The Country Flapper," Producer Security's Dorothy Gish feature, and "Life's Greatest Question", distributed by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, held up the bill at the Victory in Providence, R. I., and, as the result of clever exploitation devised by Manager Matt Reilly, the engagement opened with a bang.

J. H. Soloman, of the Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, Virginia, did a great business on "When Dawn Came", according to his own report.

First run showings were numerously reported this week. The independent field's product was well represented on Broadway this week by "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned", the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature, which topped the bill at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, and Equity's feature, "What's Wrong With the Women?" at the Cameo.

Harry Lande, of the Quality Film Exchange in Pittsburgh, reports heavy bookings on "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" in that territory. The release of this picture in Ohio and Michigan is being held up a month, pending negotiations for first run showings.

Negotiations were this week said to have started for a Broadway showing of the second Al Lichtman picture, "Ching Ching Chinaman," which is reported as having been completed and a print already in New York. It is believed that Joe Plunkett will book this picture at the New York Strand.

Fred Mitchell, of the Loew office in New York, is overlooking no bets and sees all independent pictures, with the result that 100 per cent of the good product is shown throughout the Loew metropolitan theatres.

Several road shows of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" pictures are making their appearances in various parts of the country. Up in New England two versions of the famous play are said to have been sent out.

Equity Special Gets Important Showings

"What's Wrong With the Women?" Daniel Carson Goodman's production for release on the independent market through Equity Pictures, had its premiere in two key cities simultaneously this week. In Philadelphia the picture is now playing the Palace and Arcadia Theatres, two of the leading Stanley houses in that city. It will run a week in each house. This day and date engagement in the Palace-Arcadia is considered a unique tribute to the picture. The Stanley Company has seldom given such a booking to any independent picture. "What's Wrong With the Women?" is being distributed through the Masterpiece Film Attractions of 1329 Vine street, Philadelphia, and the booking was arranged by Ben Amsterdam, president of Masterpiece.

In New York, where it is being distributed through Commonwealth Film Corporation, of which Sam Zierler is president, the picture opened last Sunday at the Cameo Theatre, a Broadway first-run house, where it will play an entire week. Following this booking the picture will start over the entire Keith Circuit.

Mr. Goodman's production is enacted by an all-star cast, including Montagu Love, Rod LaRocque, Constance Bennett, Wilton Lackaye, Barbara Castleton, Julia Swayne Gordon, Huntley Gordon, Hedda Hopper and Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein.

Blazed Trail Production Ready About November 1st; Eastern Studio Activities

Word received by the State Rights Department of Moving Picture World indicates that the new Blazed Trails Production, Inc., special, "Lost in a Big City," which Arrow will distribute, will be ready for release about the first of November. According to a letter received from producer and star, John Russell, who turned out "Ten Nights in a Barroom," work on the picture is well under way at the Gloversville, N. Y. studio. In the cast appear: John Lowell as Harry Farley, Charles Boyer as Sidney Heaton, Charles Mackay as Maberly, Jane Thomas as Helen Farley; Evangeline, Marbely's daughter; Jimmy Phillips as Dick Watson, Ann Brody as Mrs. Leary, Charles Robbins as "Raisin" Jackson, Whitney Haley as Guboni, and Edgar Keller as Salvatore. L. Case Russell, adapter of "Ten Nights," furnished the scenario. George Irving is directing. The technical staff includes Herbert Fajans, technical director, and Joe Settle, cameraman.

Mr. Russell, in part, writes:

"We had quite an unusual set on Labor Day, when we used six of the N. Y. State Troopers, Captain Toby, who is in charge of G Co. at Troy, bringing five men to appear in a scene. The story, as revamped by Mrs. Russell, is up-to-date, bootleggers and State Troopers providing excitement for the climax. Mrs. Russell went to Albany and arranged with Major Chandler, head of the organization, to use enough of his men to give us a genuine thrill at the end of the picture. We are building a bootleggers' hang-out on one of the lakes near here, and will stage quite an unusual battle between the bootleggers and Troopers.

"One of the actors is cast as a Trooper, and he has been furnished full equipment by the organization: in fact, they are co-operating in every way. Major Chandler's son, who has been with the Fox organization, came up last week to be with us. He is acting as Mr. Irving's assistant for the present. We have arranged to have a regular Trooper on every scene where Edward Phillips, who plays Ned Livingston, the Trooper, appears, to prevent technical errors."

Production this week started on "The Shylock of Wall Street", which Burton King is directing. It is expected that the company will be "shooting" in and around New York for the next seven weeks. The cast is headed by Dore Davidson, who plays the titular role, a part which, it is said, will give him every opportunity to prove his right to stardom; Gene Burnell, star of "Determination," and Zena Keefe, who last appeared in "Broken Silence".

The task of finally cutting and titling Will Nigh's latest production, "Notoriety", which Bobby North and Larry Weber will State right through Apollo Pictures, Inc., was completed this week. The picture, it is said, will be ready for showing within a few weeks.

John Wenger, production director at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, and Matt Radin, of Capital Film Exchange, New York, will shortly start work on the production of a novelty short subject series that will be released in the independent market.

Eddie Polo, who made "Cap'n Kidd", a serial, for the independent market, and who has been abroad making a special, is expected to resume work in the metropolitan district within the next two months.

There is some talk current in film circles in New York that, Nathan Hirsch, head of Aywon Pictures Corporation, will finance the production of a new picture for distribution through his company.

Will Nigh expects to start production on his next picture for Apollo release some time early next month. He will use the Tiffany studio in West 44th street, New York City.

"Othello" Is Nearly Ready

The work of cutting and editing the continental Shakespearian photoplay, "Othello," which Export & Import and David P. Howells have acquired for the American market is rapidly nearing completion. It is expected that a private showing of the film will be given early next week for a few of the screen and dramatic critics who first saw the film in its original form.

Lou Berman Repeats History

The premiere presentation, in the Philadelphia district, of Warner Brothers' production, "Your Best Friend," featuring Vera Gordon, was held recently at the Bijou Theatre, Atlantic City, under the auspices of Lou Berman, Independent Film Corporation.

The feature is being held for an indefinite run. A strange coincidence is recorded by this opening in that a year ago almost to the day and date, Berman held the premiere of "Why Girls Leave Home" at the same theatre. Frank Walters, of the exploitation department of the Independent Film Corporation, put over a very effective campaign.

Canadian Producers Reserve Dominion Releasing Rights

OTTAWA, ONT. (Special).—At a conference, held here September 16, of delegates representing the active and proposed Canadian producing units it was decided to reserve for Canadian management the distribution of all productions made with Canadian capital on Canadian soil. By the adoption of this policy Canada does not establish a new precedent, but merely elects to exercise the same rights enjoyed by the United States, Great Britain, Italy and France in connection with the marketing of their product.

The paramount factor in determining this move on the part of Canadian producers is the preferential tariffs and special commercial treaties in force between the Dominion and a majority of the foreign countries. Under these treaties, it is pointed out, Canada will be enabled to save for the buyers of foreign rights to her productions vast sums in duty that, in the case of exportation from the United States, would be exacted by the importing governments, but from which Canada is in some cases partially and in others wholly exempt.

As far as concerns the American market the production movement in Canada is expected to be reciprocal in its scope. The Dominion occupies the status of a customer in the film markets of the United States to the extent of approximately $4,000,000 annually. Now, however, with the advent of the industry in the Dominion and its establishment on a permanent and nation-wide basis it is freely predicted that the future will see this amount increased to $5,000,000 and possibly $6,000,000.

The making of pictures in Canada has, throughout the current year, assumed tremendous proportions and a healthy and continued growth is promised for it by the following prominent men:

The Honorable William Pugsley, Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick; The Honorable W. E. Foster, premier of the same province; Senator E. L. Girroir, K. C., president Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., and other members of Parliament; W. H. McWilliams, president Winnipeg Productions, Ltd., president Canadian Elevator Co., and a director of the Royal Bank of Canada; Major P. B. Wilson, president Sault Ste. Marie Films Ltd., and vice-president Spanish River Pulp and Paper Company; W. C. Franz, president Algoma Steel Corporation; The Honorable Tasker H. Cook, Mayor of St. John's Newfoundland, and others, forming in each separate provincial unit a board of about twelve directors representative of the financial, civic and political life of Canada. The general upward trend of pictures in Canada these men aver will mean increased patronage, which, in turn, will enlarge Canada's demand.

Those in attendance at today's meeting included representatives of Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., Northern Pictures Corporation, Ltd. Winnipeg Productions, Ltd. Sault Ste. Marie Films, Ltd., Prince Edward Island Films, Ltd., New Brunswick Films Ltd., Halifax Films, Ltd., and Newfoundland Films, Ltd.—each operating under a provincial charter—and Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., which has just completed "The Man From Glengarry" and "Glengarry School Days." Ernest Shipman of New York also is involved.

Harry Cohn Signs Great Cast Names

Word comes from the New York offices of the C, B. C. Film Sales Corporation that Producer Harry Cohn, in charge of West Coast production centre, has completed the signing of an all-star company.

Following the success which met "More to Be Pitied" everywhere, this company announced that it would continue its policy of all-star production, featuring no one player above the others, but selecting the entire cast for the fitness of its various members to portray the roles. This has been done for "Only a Shopgirl." Edward Le Saint will direct.

Included in the company are Estelle Taylor, well-known for many splendid characterizations, most recent of them the creation of the leading roles in Fox's "While New York Sleeps" and "Monte Cristo;" Mae Busch, who won wide favor in "Foolish Wives" and "The Devil's Passkey" for Universay, and Goldwyn's "The Christian;" Richard Dix, popular young leading man in "The Sin Flood," "Dangerous Curve Ahead," "Yellow Men and Gold" and "The Wall Flower" for Goldwyn; Wallace Beery, who has appeared in "The Four Horsemen" and "Tale of Two Worlds;" Claire Dubre, of Paramount's "To Have and to Hold;" Tully Marshall, in Paramount's "Is Matrimony a Failure?" and Warner's "Beautiful and Damned;" Willard Louis, in Paramount's "Man Unconquerable," "Too Much Married," and most recently with Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood;" Baby Josephine Adair and Billy Scotte, of "Alias Julius Caesar," and Goldwyn's "Voice in the Dark."

Pioneer May Resume; News of the Courts

Plans are underway for the resumption of business by Pioneer Film Corporation, provided those plans are acceptable to a majority of creditors. A. E. Lefcourt, President of Pioneer, has proposed a waival of $135,000 of his $450,000 claim. According to statements made this week, it is intended to give all creditors their total claims. The receivers are Jacob Schechter and Thomas H. Matters, Jr.

United States Moving Picture Corporation has filed an answer in the New York Court to the suit of James K. Polk, former President of the company. It admits that notes given to Polk and James W. Martin for $12,500 and $30,000 have not been paid, but claims that the notes were given for no value, further alleging that Polk, who controlled the directors, caused the notes to be executed for $42,500 in excess of the purchase price of certain property bought for the defendant by Martin. A counterclaim for $13,800 is made on the ground that Polk purchased territorial rights to "Determination" and "Flesh and Spirit" and failed to pay.

Patrick A. Powers has filed a suit in the New York Supreme Court against Clark Cornelius Corporation seeking to recover $15,000 on a note made out for ninety days. The note was issued June 3 of this year.

Edward A. Leopold has sued Alexander Film Corporation in the Supreme Court, New York seeking to recover a balance which he alleges is due for posters printed by the Otis Lithographing Company. The defendant has filed an answer denying the charge.

A summons has been filed in the New York Supreme Court against the H. C. Witwer Stories Productions, Inc., by Fidelity Pictures, Inc. No amount is mentioned.

Buys Series

H. C. Simeral Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., have contracted with Arrow Film Corporation for the new series of William Fairbanks' pictures which Arrow will release. H. C. Simeral, who heads the company bearing his name, is most enthusiastic concerning his recent purchase for a number of different reasons.

"Madame Sans Gene" Will Soon Be Ready

Despite the reported controversy over the story of "Madame Sans Gene," Aubrey Kennedy is speeding up plans for immediate release of the feature. He has placed the releasing arrangements in the hands of the Producers' Security Corporation.

When Mr. Kennedy, who has been quietly working on the picture for several months, announced the feature ready for the market, Miss Kathryn Kidder hastened through her attorneys to inform Mr. Kennedy that all film rights to "Madame Sans Gene" belonged to her.

Immediately Mr. Kennedy took issue with her contending that his picture is adapted from a famous incident in history and is based strictly upon the story of "Madame Sans Gene," the washerwoman who became a Dutchess, and which is familiar to everyone. Kathryn Kidder appeared in a stage production of the same name.

Meanwhile, the releasing preparations are said to be going merrily on with the public as well as exhibitors and distributors as the picture is promised for a September release.

Von Tilzer Back

Jack Von Tilzer, general sales manager of East Coast Productions, has returned from the Middle West, where he closed territories on the J. B. Warner series of Westerns.

Will Nigh Will Title All Feature Pictures

After one month of cutting the 100,000 feet of film shot on Will Nigh's coming special, "Notoriety," the independent director has begun titling. The captions will be written by Nigh himself, who wrote the original script. Some of the titles, taken from the scenario, are said to be very effective. As in his former productions, Nigh will make it a point to be brief and juicy. The plot of "Notoriety" allows a fine opportunity for variety in the wording of the titles. The tenement life element will give the titler the popular twist on which to work with, while the society part of "Notoriety" will have the class in the captions.

All titles will be colored, and artists have already been engaged for the purpose. It is stated that the art work will represent the finest color titling and hand painted decoration ever introduced in a production. No expense will be spared in embellishment. A departue from the usual color titling will be made. Instead of photographing a scene from the picture and coloring it for the sub-title illustration, Will Nigh will have original paintings in colors. The scenes will not be taken from the film, but will be allegorical of the title of the picture.

Boom "Arrow Month" South

Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, is assisting materially in putting "Arrow Month" across in a big way. They have made a special drive on the various Arrow subjects which they control in Kentucky and Tennessee and the results have been highly gratifying.

Immediate Play Dates On Lichtman's Initial Feature

At a time when play dates are being sought by sales managers of all of the large distributing companies, contracts received at the Al Lichtman offices indicate that exhibitors throughout the country are arranging to show "Rich Men's Wives" at once rather than put off the actual date of exhibition to some indefinite time in the future.

The financial stringency through which many companies in the business have gone through in past months resulted in widespread orders being issued to all members of the sales forces to concentrate their energies on immediate play dates rather than the signing of contracts in bulk without any immediate prospect of bolstering up hard hit treasuries with ready cash.

For that reason, officials of the Lichtman Corporation feel that the reception accorded "Rich Men's Wives," which was made by B. P. Schulberg, of Preferred Pictures, as the initial release through the Lichtman exchanges is somewhat out of the ordinary.

Mrs. A. B. Maescher to Make Series of Ten Productions; Rapf and Warners in Action

LOS ANGELES (Special).—Mrs. A. B. Maescher, producer of "Night Life in Hollywood," has organized a new motion picture producing company, the De Luxe Film Company of Los Angeles, which will make pictures for release by Arrow Film Corporation. Under the present arrangement ten super-productions will be created. J. Frank Glendon will be starred. Diana Alden is also in the cast of the first picture.

Mrs. Maescher has built up a strong organization, and is surrounding herself with many of the most capable experts in the field. Eugene Evans, a well-known newspaper man, will be general manager of the new company; while Mr. Jack Pratt will be its director-general, in charge of production. The scenario department will be headed by J. Grubb Alexander, favorably known as one of the leading literary lights of the present day. Among his best known stories are "The Thunderbolt" and "The Beauty Market," for Katherine MacDonald; "The Bleeder," "The Undertow" and "The Brand of Lopez," for Sessue Hayakawa, and "The Innocent Cheat," a Ben Wilson production, in which Roy Stewart starred.

Levinson Gets New Foreign Spectacle

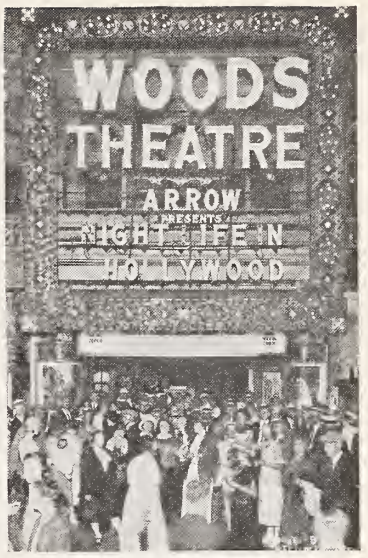
Jesse A. Levinson has acquired for distribution throughout the United States and Canada, "The Plaything of an Emperor," a costume picture based on the celebrated affair between Napoleon Bonaparte and Countess Marie Walewska.

Their famous liaison, which occurred in 1807 and resulted in Napoleon's changing his military plans in order to be near the Countess, is well-known to all students of history. It has been made the theme of numerous novels and plays in many languages, and is extensively treated in all biographies of Napoleon.

The photoplay, which is six reels in length, is said to contain many elaborate settings and scenes, including such high lights as the royal ball in Napoleon's honor and the grand banquet at his headquarters. Against this background of splendor a human and touching love story is developed by Rodolph Lettinger, as Napoleon, and Marjorie Verlaine, as the Countess. The direction of Arthur Rippert, who made the picture, establishes him as one of the leaders in his field.

Realizing that only the most faithful costumes and settings could re-create the atmosphere of this brilliant historical period, the producers devoted a great deal of pains to historical research.

First scenes of two forthcoming Warner Brothers pictures were filmed last week at the Warner coast studios, according to an announcement. Harry Rapf, who recently completed the second Wesley Barry picture "Little Heroes of the Street", began filming "Brass", the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce, and Sam and Jack Warner started work on "The Beautiful and Damned", F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel dealing with the modern flapper.



SOME OPENING!

Glimpse of Crowd that Jammed Into Woods Theatre, Atlantic City To See Opening of Arrow's "Night Life In Hollywood'

Players have been engaged for "The Beautiful and Damned", which will feature Marie Prevost. The complete cast includes Kenneth Harlan, Tully Marshall, Louise Fazenda, Harry Myers, Cleo Ridgeley, Kathleen Key, Parker McConnell, Walter Long, George Kuwa, and Charles McHugh. The picture is being directed by William Seiter, and the story was adapted for the screen by Olga Printzlau. Sidney Franklin, who directed Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through", will direct the Rapf production of "Brass".

Francis Ford, who has been producing pictures that Anchor Film Corporation has been distributing in the independent market, will shortly launch a producing enterprise of his own. He is negotiating with Peggy O'Day as the star for forthcoming releases.

The services of Peggy O'Day, who has been starring in Western features, is in big demand locally. During the past week she has received several good offers. This versatile star not only appeared in the last Francis Ford feature, but also aided in the editing and cutting of that picture.

Lichtman-Saenger In Big Southern Deal

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—(Special)—Under the terms of an agreement entered upon by E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, and Al Lichtman, covering distribution of B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Pictures in the tier of 11 Southern states, the Al Lichtman Southern Exchanges have been formed.

The arrangement provides for the formation of three subsidiary companies to operate under the direct supervision of Richards, who makes his headquarters in New Orleans. Distribution will be effected from exchanges in Atlanta, New Orleans, Oklahoma City and Dallas. One company will be known as the Al Lichtman Exchange of New Orleans; a second, the Al Lichtman Exchange of Dallas, and the third, the Al Litchman Exchange of Atlanta. Subsequently, a branch will be established at Oklahoma City to handle distribution in the State of Oklahoma.

The New Orleans office will handle sales in Louisiana and Mississippi. Dallas will take care of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas and Atlanta, all of North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

Messrs. Richards and Lichtman are equal partners in the transaction. For the Lichtman Corporation, the deal swings behind it the full support of the powerful Saenger circuit of theatres in Louisiana and Mississippi by virtue of Mr. Richards' connection with that circuit as vice president and general manager.

Chicago

Edward H. Hayden is making the Rothacker laboratory his headquarters in Chicago while he is in that city taking scenes for the Irving Cummings production, "Chicago Sal," an original story by Harvey Gates, who wrote "Hurricane's Gal." Milton Sills, Alice Lake and little Richard Hedrick are in the cast.

Bill Steiner of William Steiner Productions, Inc., stopped off in Chicago on route to the Coast and paid a brief visit to the Windy City film alley. While in Chicago he was the guest of Frank Zambreno, the alert manager of the Unity Pictures Exchange.

Frank Zambreno of Unity is not complaining over any scarcity of booking dates. He is one of the most popular exchangemen in the Middle West, and knows exhibitors by their first name.

Something of an important nature is brewing at the Chicago offices of Celebrated Film Players Corporation, of which Joe Friedman is president. Mr. Friedman has been away for several days on a hard-earned vacation, but he is expected to get back into harness this week. His brother, Henry, was in charge during his absence.

Charles Bigelow, assistant superintendent of the Chicago Rothacker laboratory, has been transferred to the Rothacker-Aller plant at Hollywood, Cal. He was tendered a farewell dinner by his friends in Chicago just prior to his departure.

The opening of the new Astor Theatre in the Loop district has been a source of considerable interest among independent distributors here, who will be given a strong representation in that busy theatrical section.

Warner Brothers' first 1922-23 release, "Rags to Riches," starring Wesley Barry, will be given its Chicago premier at the Chicago Theatre early in October, according to the present plans of Balaban & Katz, which new independent firm is handling the Warner product here through the First National Exchange, which it controls.

Insofar as this department's Chicago correspondent knows, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," which played one week at the Randolph Theatre in that city, has not yet been disposed of to any local exchange.

Frank Zambreno of Unity Pictures, Inc., has released "Ten Nights in a Barroom" generally in this section. He showed that Arrow special last Spring at Barbee's Loop theatre where it played two weeks, but he withheld general distribution until this Fall.

REPUTABLE CONCERN

wishes to handle first class program pictures on a percentage basis. Will give ample bond and will arrange in a satisfactory way for protection of all moneys due owner. Box 278, care of M. P. World.

Atlanta

Arthur Bromberg of the Bromberg Exchanges of Atlanta, Charlotte and New Orleans, has returned to Atlanta following a trip to New York via the automobile route.

C. B. Whitehead has joined the sales force of the Eltrabran Film Exchange of Atlanta. He will cover Tennessee and Alabama.

The Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Atlanta and Dallas is concentrating on "Flesh and Blood" and "I Am the Law." The latter picture already has been showing generally in the 16 States wherein the firm operates, and the exploitation forces at all three exchanges owned by this company are now working on the newly acquired feature, starring Lon Chaney.

"The Fatal Wedding," a reissue starring Wallace Reid and Lillian Gish, did a land office business at the Criterion Theatre in Atlanta. The showing was a complete surprise to film folks in general, for many of them passed the picture up when offered to them and regretted that action when the crowds jammed into the Criterion.

A new sales policy that is particularly beneficial to exhibitors has been put into effect by the Enterprise Distributing Corporation. W. K. Jenkins, general manager, has returned from a trip to Dallas and other branches operated by Enterprise, where he explained the new policy to his sales staff.

Elsewhere in this section is published in detail the new road-show plan put into operation by Fred Cubberly, in charge of the F. & R. Exchange in Minneapolis. This is the plan to which this department made reference several weeks ago and promised to reveal when it was perfected. This promise is now being fulfilled.

MACLYN ARBUCKLE
Star Whose Latest Feature Is "Mr. Bingle" Which Producers' Security Corporation Is Handling

Len S. Brown has joined the sales force of the new F. & R. Exchange in Minneapolis. He will be in charge of one of the new road shows that that exchange will send out under its new plan. Mr. Brown came to the F. & R. Exchange from Los Angeles.

The recent visit to Minneapolis of Will Hays is still the object of conversation among exhibitors and exchangemen.

Ben Friedman has completed his plans for the new season, but no definite announcement as to the identity of the new production and method of distribution has as yet been made.

New England

Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Film Exchange in Boston has started the new season with a bang if first run bookings are any criterion.

There is some talk hereabouts relative to the possibility of the establishment of a new exchange to be financed by New York interests.

George Fecke of Motion Picture Distributing Corporation is planning several big first run showings of "Yankee Doodle, Jr.," in several New England cities.

Sam Grand's Federated Exchange in Boston is working overtime in anticipation of a big season. Several of Grand's bigger pictures already have been booked for important showings.

Al Lichtman's "Rich Men's Wives" is being given its premier showings in Boston first run houses this week. William Mahoney of the Rialto, Providence, R. I., also has booked this feature.

While it is generally known in this territory that Harry Seigal of Pioneer Exchange, Boston, has been dickering with the promoters of the new co-operative exchange project, nothing of any definite nature has materialized.

Matt Bielly of Keith's Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I. has booked the following pictures for first run showings at that house: Equity's "What's Wrong with the Women?" from Federated Exchange, week of October; Lesser's "Man From Hell's River" from Federated Exchange, week of October 23; "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" from Federated, week of October 30; "Insinuation" with Margery Wilson appearing in person, week of October 16; "The Country Flapper" from Eastern Film Exchange, and "Life's Greatest Question" from Film Booking Office, week of September 18. Next week will feature "Flesh and Blood."

The Poli Circuit of Connecticut and Massachusetts are seeking good independent pictures for their houses with the Boston state righters coming in for a more equitable share of business.

New York City

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of New York has tied up his newest Equity feature, "What's Wrong With the Women," with the B. S. Moss and B. F. Keith circuits, with Loew to follow.

Berkowitz and Mills, who operate the Elk Photoplay Exchange in New York, have opened a branch office in Buffalo.

Matt Radin of Capital Film Exchange has acquired the metropolitan rights to "Deserted At the Altar," Phil Goldstone's new feature.

Nathan Hirsch of Aywon Exchange is distributing the Anchor Film Corporation product, the first release being "The American Toreador."

Morris Schlank, of Anchor Film Distributers Company, of Los Angeles, left last week on his return trip to the Coast. He intends making all the exchange centers on the southern route, his first stop being Atlanta.

Charley Getz of Warner Exchange is a happy film man. Despite the fact that only two of the series of new Harry Rapf productions have been completed he obtained a contract from the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, for the entire output.

Herman Garfield is planning to make a series of "Buster Brown" comedies of two-reelers for distribution in the State rights market.

Quite a commotion was started among independent exchanges in New York this week when representatives of the Internal Revenue office visited them on a mission to collect the five per cent. tax sales.

This was a big week for independents at Broadway houses. C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," which Bobby North's Apollo Exchange is distributing in the New York territory, played at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, while Equity's "What's Wrong With the Women?" held the top berth at the Cameo bill, with Warner's premier showing of "Rags to Riches" to follow at the Capitol Theatre next week.

Kansas City

Al Kahn, who operates exchanges in Kansas City and Omaha, has finally taken over the entire Warner Brothers' 1922-23 output. The pictures included are "Rags to Riches," "Main Street," "Broadway After Dark," "Brass," "A Dangerous Adventure," "Little Heroes of the Street," "Your Best Friend," "The Beautiful and Damned" and "Little Church Around the Corner."

The Standard Film Company of Kansas City is organizing an outdoor club among school children in every city and town that have booked the 40 new westerns being distributed by that exchange. C. F. Foye has been appointed to take charge of this work; he is a well known lecturer and is already meeting with much success in this new enterprise.

John F. Paine of Superior Pictures, Kansas City, is back at his desk after a motor trip to New York, where he looked over future releases for which he is angling for this territory.

Jack Von Tilzer of East Coast Productions, Inc., of New York, is touring the Southwest and made a stop here. He visited film row to dispose of the local rights to the J. B. Warner series of six five-reelers.

Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Kansas City has purchased the Missouri rights to the Western Pictures Exploitation Company feature, "Flesh and Blood," and already has procured a number of good first run dates.

Cubberly Explains New S. R. System

MINNEAPOLIS — (Special)—J. Fred Cubberly, manager of the Finkelstein & Rubin exchange here, this week put into effect his road-show license plan, which is something virtually new in the way of independent distribution. The experiment, which is new, is attracting much attention among exhibitors and exchangemen throughout the country in general.

The plan, as explained by Manager Cubberly, is as follows:

"The exhibitors in towns of 5,000 population or less will be offered a contract for 24 full and complete programs, to be played at the rate of two programs per month. Definite play dates for the year to be agreed upon at the time of signing contract. As a protection to the exhibitor, a one picture cancellation clause is provided in the contract. Each program will consist of a feature and such short subjects as best suit the needs of the theatre. Each program will be played on a percentage, the exhibitor agreeing to do a certain amount of newspaper advertising, and the F. & R. Film Co. agreeing to supply a certain amount of accessories at no cost to the exhibitor.

"In each town the F. & R. Co. will appoint a local treasurer who will check up all shows and make reports to the company and lend such help to the exhibitor as may be possible. The exhibitor pays no money for his programs or advertising until after it has been taken in at the box office. The F. & R. Film Co. will organize the biggest publicity department of any exchange in the United States and devote its entire time to helping exhibitors who are playing F. & R. Road Show Attractions get business at the box office."

Northwest

The growing strength of the independent pictures is demonstrated by the fact that the week of September 30th will see two state right features booked into leading downtown theatres for full week runs in Seattle. At the Coliseum, "Rich Men's Wives," the first Al Lichtman release, goes on, while "Flesh and Blood" will be shown at the Liberty. Both of these pictures are released through De Luxe Feature Film Co., in the northwest.

Neal Hart, Mrs. Hart and Master Hart are vacationing in the Pacific Northwest, and were in Seattle this week. Hart is the star of the Neal Hart Westerns, Wm. Steiner Productions. From Seattle he will go to Vancouver, Victoria and other Canadian points. He is studying conditions, characteristics, etc.; absorbing "local color" across the border. He will spend some time in the Port Angeles and Hoods Canal country while in Washington. Hart headquartered on Film Row, at the offices of Greater Features, Inc., who distribute the Hart Features from their exchange in Seattle, Butte, Denver and Salt Lake.

Greater Features, Inc., has leased the unoccupied portion of the building occupied by their Butte exchange, at 107-109 North Montana Street, to the Parker-Rand Company, a heating and ventilating concern, who will use the offices for a high class salesroom.

Philadelphia

Tony Luchose and Oscar Neufield are planning an expansion of their business interests, according to information received by the Philadelphia correspondent of the State rights department of Moving Picture World, it is rumored here that they shortly will open a new exchange in another territory.

Lou Berman of Independent Film Corporation, distributing Warner Brothers' pictures in this territory and in West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, District of Columbia and Delaware, has already signed most of the big first run theatres on "Your Best Friend," which was given a splendid premier showing in Atlantic City last week.

Bill Haggerty is back on the job as exploitation director for De Luxe Film Exchange.

Tony Luchose has purchased the eastern Pensylvania and southern New Jersey rights to Arrow's newest special, "Night Life in Hollywood."

Whether or not Dave Starkman will continue with his proposed State rights producing project has not been definitely decided, for he is now successfully operating Woods Theatre in Atlantic City, N. J.

The deal whereby Sherman and Starkman were to become partners in the operation of the Graphic franchise in this territory has fallen through, according to reliable reports current here.

Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Attractions, Inc., has no complaint to make on the first run situation, which is perhaps the most serious to be found anywhere. The fact is that Ben's co-operative plan has proved so attractive that even the Stanley has lined up his product for its houses.

Detroit

While the exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World last week to the effect that the Skirboll Brothers had acquired control of Warner Brothers exchange here created much discussion, no definite announcement relative to the personnel of that organization has been made. Neither is the future status of Dave Warner been made known.

The visit to Detroit of the trade paper editors and Al Lichtman as guests of Harry Charnas of the Standard Film Service Exchange here last week is still the talk here. The enterprise is one that is certain to add prestige to the progressive exchange. Incidentally, the special showing of Lichtman's "Rich Men's Wives" secured many fat contracts for Standard.

Jess Fishman, manager of Standard Exchange, Detroit, is shortly to make a personal tour of his territory, which is rapidly improving. Michigan was hard hit by the industrial depression and is recovering only slowly.

The Minter-United Exchange of Detroit is featuring its new Fall program with "When Dawn Came," "The Unconquered Woman" and "Thundering Hoofs."

The Warner specials are in big demand here, but owing to the uncertain state of the Warner exchange these contracts have been held up. However, important announcements concerning first runs are expected to emanate from there within the next few weeks.

Favorite Film Exchange of Detroit has taken over the new series of Jack Hoxie pictures. The first three pictures are reported as having been already delivered.

Arrow Closes Canada Deal

Another important sale announced by Arrow for the week just past, is one to Canadian Exhibitors Exchanges, Ltd., of Toronto, who have aequired the fourteen Broadway and twelve Mirthquake comedies for Canada.

Harry Segal Buys Bradford-Lee Film

On his return to New York this week, Arthur Lee, of Bradford-Lee, distributors of "Determination," announced that he had finally closed a deal with Harry Segal, of Pioneer Film Exchange of Boston, whereby that live exchangeman will handle that special in New England. The deal has been under way for several months, this fact having been exclusively published in Moving Picture World when negotiations were first opened.

"Determination" will be routed as a road show by many exchanges that have purchased rights to the feature. In most cases some members of the cast will be booked along with the showings. Misses Gene Burnell and Irene Tams have been making personal appearances. The success encountered by the former has brought a big demand for her services. She is now working on a new special, "The Shylock of Wall Street," in which also appear Dore Davidson and Zena Keefe.

Harry Segal, confident that the forthcoming season will be a stellar one for independents, has acquired a splendid line-up of pictures and will move to his new and larger exchange on the first of the coming month. According to Mr. Lee, "Determination" will be first fall release.

Schlesinger Invades Europe for Warners

Gus B. Schlesinger, general manager of the Warner Brothers foreign department, left last week for England to negotiate for the distribution of the forthcoming series of Warner pictures.

Mr. Schlesinger will remain in Europe for three months, and during this time he expects to not only successfully dispose of the Warner productions, but also to make a first hand study of foreign conditions. His study of the foreign market will center on the production advance of European producers, and what is in most demand by exhibitors and buyers in general.

The productions to be disposed of by Mr. Schlesinger include "Rags to Riches" and "Little Heroes of the Street," both featuring Wesley Barry; "The Beautiful and Damned," featuring Marie Prevost; "Brass," also with Miss Prevost; "Main Street," the Sinclair Lewis novel, and "Little Church Around the Corner," written by Marion Russell.

Starts Exploitation Department

In accord with its policy of giving every possible support to the twenty Goldwyn super-specials to be released this season, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is engaging a full exploitation force to assist exhibitors in putting the picture over with the public.

The personnel of the staff and the exchanges to which its members are assigned will be announced soon.

The department will be under the direction of Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for Goldwyn, with R. E. Pritchard as exploitation manager.

Announces Cast for New Feature

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has just been advised by Arthur F. Beck, who is producing Leah Baird attractions, that the fourth picture featuring this popular screen actress is well under way.

It is being directed by Wallace Worsley, who also directed Miss Baird's recent success, "When Husbands Deceive." Dorian Neve wrote the story, which at present bears the title, "All Mine."

Additions to Cast

Two noteworthy additions have been made to the cast of Elsie Ferguson's new Paramount picture, "Outcast," which Victor Fleming is now directing at the Long Island studio. They are John Davidson and William David.

Fox News to Have Third Anniversary

October 4 will be the third anniversary of the organization of Fox News. The history of the numerous successes achieved in that brief interval and the many promising possibilities for the future which are under exploitation at present are well formulated in a statement issued by Don Hancock, director-in-chief of the news reels, which follows in part:

Fox News enters into the fourth year of its existence; it seems to me appropriate that a survey of its rise to the leading position in the field today, with an outline of the plans that have been made and the prospective pictures that are now being planned, is in order.

Facing competitors strong in the field, in October, 1919, after a three months' period of organization, Fox News became part of the program of the hundreds of theatres that have housed the exceptional Fox Film Corporation feature productions in the past.

Starting with a complete list of staff cameramen, and a goodly number of field representatives, Fox News conducted several campaigns for the increase of its service, with the result that today our camera representatives number 1,008.

The success of Fox News is due greatly to the excellent system devised at its inauguration, all editors having previously been newspaper men.

During the past four years, Fox News can rightfully take credit for giving to the public more exclusive scoops of big events that really mean something than any other news reel in existence.

Plenty of Action in "One Week of Love"

With the last shots being made on "One Week of Love," first of the sixteen super specials scheduled for production by the Selznick company during the season 1922-23 being made on the Pacific Coast, there is arriving daily a mass of information which seems to indicate that this big photoplay is destined to start the Selznick season off with a bang.

The story has remarkable scope, dealing with "high society" life, the customs and manners of the more commonplace people, and, in addition, with exciting incidents in the borderlands of the United States and Mexico where the law of might is about the only "convention" which is recognized.

Some of the big situations have to do with the extremely hazardous business of driving aeroplanes over the lofty western mountains. There is a particularly thrilling aeroplane crash. Another big situation shows the wreck of a train as it is crossing a torrential mountain stream. The stills prove that all of this thrilling action has been caught for the picture.

Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle are co-starred.

Bara Popular

The announcement recently made by Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Picture Corporation, that he had signed Theda Bara for one of the sixteen big Selznick super-specials for the season 1922-23 to mark her return to the screen after an absence of two years, gave rise to considerable speculation as to just how badly the general public wanted Miss Bara back. The Selznick company thought they knew after having made careful investigation of the matter but happenings of the past ten days have proved the public interest in a manner far beyond anything that was anticipated.

Comes to New York with Film

Richard Walton Tully arrived in New York recently from Los Angeles, bringing with him the completed film of Guy Bates Post in "Omar the Tentmaker," his second motion picture production. As in the case of the recently released presentation of Mr. Post in "The Masquerader," "Omar the Tentmaker" will be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Mr. Tully, accompanied by Mrs. Tully and their daughter, will sail shortly for England, where he will produce "The Masquerader" on the London stage, as well as superintend the London premier of "The Masquerader" in picture form.

Playgoers Film for September 24

"The Man She Brought Back," a Charles Miller attraction, is announced for release by Playgoers Pictures September 24. The cast includes Earle Fox, Doris Miller, Frank Losee, Charles Mackay, Donald Russ, Harry Lee and Frederick Burton. It is in five reels, from the story by Jasper Ewing Brady and directed by Charles Miller.

This release follows the Playgoers' attraction, "Face to Face," a romantic mystery drama featuring Marguerite Marsh and Coit Albertson, which was released September 17.

Engages Auditor

E. D. Leishman, formerly connected with Warwick Mitchell & Company, public accountants, has been engaged by Universal as a travelling auditor. He has left New York for Pittsburgh, where he will begin work.

Natchez Premier

The national premier review of Oliver Morosco's production of "Slippery McGee' will be held in the city where the picture was filmed—Natchez, Miss. So great has been the interest in the Morosco feature in the Mississippi city that George R. Bentel, vice-president and general manager of the Morosco Holding Company, is preparing to send a special print there that the Natchez citizens who so graciously co-operated in the production may have the first view of the film.

Ballin Casting for "Vanity Fair"

Hugo Ballin is to produce "Vanity Fair," and it is announced that he will start casting for this picture the first of next week.

Sometime ago the Ballin's stated that they would make no more "program pictures," so-called, but would devote their time to specials. The success of such special productions as "Jane Eyre" and "East Lynne" prompted this idea. Accordingly, the Ballin's asked the public, sometime ago, to select the next subject. Thousands of letters were received. The final result was the selection of Thackeray's masterpiece.

"Vanity Fair," which Thackeray, himself, styled "a novel without a hero," will make, it is believed, one of the most unusual films ever screened.

Mabel Ballin will portray the role of "Becky Sharp." The players for the parts of "Joe Sedley," "Sir Pitt Crawley" and the many other important characters will be selected in the very near future. It is probable that the picture will be made in the East.

In Coming Picture

Master Joseph Depew, ten-year-old veteran of the screen and stage, has been re-engaged by Director Dell Henderson, in whose production, "The Broken Silence," for Arrow, Joe played an important role. This time, Joe will complete work which was started in the spring on "Jacqueline." It is said he recently scored a big hit in "Timothy's Quest."

Fox Buys Novels

Wiliam Fox has purchased "Gentle Julia," by Booth Tarkington. In addition the film producer has closed negotiations which have been pending and now owns the moving picture rights to "The Shadow of the East." This sensational novel is a sequel to the famous "Sheik" by the same author, E. M. Hull, and bids fair to eclipse its noted forerunner.

"If I Were Queen" An Early Release

The second week of October will see the release of the long-heralded "If I Were Queen," Ethel Clayton's first production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America. Every effort has been made to introduce Miss Clayton as an F. B. O. star with the best picture of her career, and it is stated that "If I Were Queen" is the most artistic and elaborate photoplay which has ever been made at the R-C studios.

To assure Miss Clayton capable direction Wesley Ruggles was engaged to handle the megaphone for the first Ethel Clayton F. B. O. release. His work in "If I Were Queen" is one of the outstanding features of the production.

According to F. B. O. officials Miss Clayton has never had such an opportunity to allow her personality full play as in "If I Were Queen." A great part of the story is laid in a mythical Balkan principality, with the star cast as an American girl cast into the vortex of its intrigue and enmeshed in a royal romance.

These scenes allowed Mr. Ruggles to present elaborate interior scenes as well as permitting Miss Clayton to wear regal gowns and coronation robes with beautiful effect.

Warner Baxter, one of the screen's most popular leading men, is cast in the leading male role, and Victory Bateman furnished comedy relief.

A number of physical thrills are incorporated in the picture; a train wreck is presented in the early reels and the breaking of a dam and flooding of the valley follows closely. These scenes are laid in the mountainous little kingdom and Mr. Ruggles has secured perfect types of the Central Europe peasants to contrast with the rich court scenes which follow.

"If I Were Queen" will be issued with a high-class line of advertising accessories and

The success of D. W. Griffith's production of "Orphans of the Storm," on the occasion of the initial showing in Toronto, Canada, of this United Artists release, has resulted in one more big theatre being added to the list of motion picture palaces of that city. The Griffith film was shown at Shea's Hippodrome, formerly devoted exclusively to vaudeville. So great was the success of the engagement that Michael Shea has abandoned his policy of vaudeville and will, hereafter, display only the larger feature pictures in this house.

To Open House with "Oliver Twist"

Colonel Fred Levy, franchise holder of Associated First National Pictures in Kentucky and Tennessee, announces that his new Kentucky Theatre in Lexington will open early in October with Jackie Coogan's recently completed super-feature, "Oliver Twist."

"I have been anxious to book a big production for the new theatre," said the Colonel, "and really did not know what I would select until Sol Lesser gave me a peep at Jackie's beautiful production. Immediately after viewing this Dickens' classic, my troubles were over insofar as the opening program was concerned."

The new Kentucky Theatre is said to be one of the finest houses in the entire South.

Big Houses and Circuits Book Fox This Season

That the foremost exhibitors have contracted for the program of Fox attractions for the season of 1922-23 was contained in a statement issued this week by the contract department of Fox Film Corporation. The fact that these theatre owners have evidenced marked eagerness in negotiating such early bookings is ample proof of the showmanship which has been instilled into the production of the Fox features.

The 1922-23 schedule is headed by a list of fourteen specials, of which the following have already been announced: "The Fast Mail," with Charles Jones; "Silver Wings," with Mary Carr; "Monte Cristo," with John Gilbert; "A Fool There Was," "Nero," "Lights of New York," "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" and "My Friend the Devil."

In Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania, the Fox product has been sold to the Stanley Company of America. In Philadelphia "The Fast Mail" has already completed an engagement at the Victoria Theatre and the New Aldine has completed a successful run of "A Fool There Was." "Monte Cristo" is now in the third week of an advertised indefinite showing at the Stanton Theatre.

Equally notable is the Fox line-up in the South, where the Lynch Circuit, which dominates all Dixieland, has contracted for the Fox product 100 per cent. This will bring the William Fox attractions, including "Nero," "Monte Cristo," "Silver Wings" and the other specials to the best houses in the Lynch territory.

Announces Cast for New Feature

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has just been advised by Arthur F. Beck, who is producing Leah Baird attractions, that the fourth picture featuring this popular screen actress is well under way.

It is being directed by Wallace Worsley, who also directed Miss Baird's recent success, "When Husbands Deceive." Dorian Neve wrote the story, which at present bears the title, "All Mine."

Additions to Cast

astically regarding the high calibre productions which he previewed at the Fox Film Corporation offices, New York.

In the Central West, the announcement states, Fox has sold a large portion of his season's line-up to the Skouras Brothers Circuit in St. Louis, including more than seventeen theatres in St. Louis, among which are the New Grand, Central, the West End Lyric and the Pageant Theatres. In Boston and the New England territory Fox is strongly entrenched.

Out of the Pittsburgh exchange the entire product has been sold again to the Rowland & Clark Theatres. In Wheeling, W. Va., Fox productions have been bought by the Plaza Theatre.

The Fox specials, "The Fast Mail," "A Fool There Was," "Lights of New York," "Nero" and "My Friend the Devil" will be presented first to the Bostonians in the theatres controlled by Jacob H. Lourie, whose Park, Modern and Beacon Theatres will house these attractions.

Buffalo will be well represented with the Fox product for the coming season. Mike Shea, of the Hippodrome, Court Street and North Park Theatres will show the William Fox special productions, including "Nero," "Monte Cristo," "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" and "Silver Wings." Loew's State Theatre recognized the superior merit of the attractions featuring Charles Jones, Tom Mix and Shirley Mason, and accordingly have already scheduled all of the releases for each of these stars for the current season.

From the Cleveland territory contracts have been negotiated with the Pantheon Theatre, and in Youngstown, Feiber & Shea, and in Akron, with J. B. Dunlevy. In Canton the Mozart Theatre has purchased the entire product.

In Dallas, the entire product goes to the Rialto Theatre, owned by Joe Phillips, and to the Washington Theatre, operated by Mr. Wm. Neville. In Galveston, the Dixie Theatre, which Mr. A. Martini owns, has booked Fox solidly. In San Antonio, the Rialto, and in Waco, the Royal Theatre, both owned by Mr. L. Santikos, have been lined-up. The Strand Theatre, Wichita Falls, Mr. R. Douglas, owner, has contracted also.

"Under Two Flags" at the Strand

"Under Two Flags," Priscilla Dean's latest Universal-Jewell production, and which is a screen adaptation of Quida's celebrated novel and stage play, has been booked into the Strand Theatre, Broadway, for the week of September 24, and perhaps longer, for its New York premiere. "Under Two Flags" is said to be Universal's greatest fall release.

James Kirkwood plays opposite Miss Dean. Stuart Holmes has the villian role. Others principal in the cast are John Davidson, Ethel Grey Terry, Robert Mack, Burton Law and Albert Pollett.

"Under Two Flags" was adapted to screen form by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., adapter of many screen successes.

Universal Engages Colleen Moore

Colleen Moore has been engaged by Universal. Officials at 1600 Broadway announce she has been selected to head an all-star cast which will present "Forsaking All Others," as a Universal-Jewell production. Cullen Landis, popular leading juvenile, has been signed by Universal to support Miss Moore in this picture.

Hartford to Direct "Blue Water"

David M. Hartford has completed the filming of "The Rapids" for Sault Ste Marie Films, Ltd., and has moved his producing organization from the Canadian "Soo" to St. John, New Brunswick, where "Biue Water," by Captain Frederick William Wallace will be placed into production. This is the fourth Canadian picture to be directed by Mr. Hartford—"Back to God's Country" being his first.

New Brunswick Films, Ltd., of St. John, are sponsoring this production.

Ernest Shipman, who is organizing these Canadian producing units, has secured the film rights to "Viking Blood" and others of the Frederick William Wallace stories, which are strong in all the welter of wind and spume, torn canvas, striving men, winsome women, and the lure of the Bay of Fundy fisher folk.

Demand Increases

As evidence of the increasing appreciation of the value of the Paramount press sheets on the part of exhibitors, the company states that the sale of the four-column newspaper ad mats and cuts during the past year has increased over 100 per cent., while the demand for the so-called supplementary mats and cuts is approximately four times what it was a year ago. Proportionate increase in the demand for all the other advertising accessories is reported.

"Tailor Made Man" Highly Praised

Charles Ray's "A Tailor Made Man" was highly praised by the critics for the Cleveland, Ohio, Press and the Cleveland News when this United Artists production was shown in that city recently.

Finishes Film

D. W. Griffith has finished the production upon which he has been working for the last five months. It will be presented in New York in the manner Mr. Griffith aways follows in showing his work.

His plans for the future are complicated by the present coal shortage. It has been Mr. Griffith's intention to make at least one or more pictures in this country before taking up his plans for the productions he intends to make abroad.

With the coal shortage altering his plans, Mr. Griffith has arranged a conference with a committee of Engish representatives next week, when a definite decision may be made about his next production.

Gripping Scenes in Paramount Film

Suspense, that wonderful weapon of the playwright and scenarist is said to be employed to marvelous effect in "On the High Seas," a new Paramount picture in which Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt are featured, supported by Mitchell Lewis. It is an Irvin Willat production.

The suspense in the scenes where the liner is on fire and Miss Dalton refuses to be hurried, waiting to dress until her way of escape is almost barred by flames, is almost unbearable, Paramount states, and her final rescue brings about a situation that is almost unparalleled, it is said.

Miss Dalton, in the role of a carefully reared girl of luxury-loving disposition, is in a leaky open boat with two stokers, one a low type of brute, the other a gentleman. Later, when a terrible fight ensues between the two men, the villainous stoker is killed, and they wallow helplessly in the storm until a war vessel picks them up.

Hobart Bosworth in Neilan Picture

Marshall Neilan has finished the photography on his first production made in association with Goldwyn, "The Strangers' Banquet," adapted from Donn Byrne's novel. He is now engaged in editing and titling it.

"The Strangers' Banquet" is the biggest production of Mr. Neilan's career, it is stated. Hobart Bosworth is appearing in one of the leading roles.

Did Good Business

The productions of United Artists Corporation and the subsidiary organization, Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, were well represented in various theatres of Philadelphia last week. The productions which played to good business were "The Three Must-Get-Theres" and "A Tailor Made Man."

Universal Lists Prosperity Nine

Universal's new series of feature attractions, to be called "The Prosperity Nine," and to be released this fall, is nearing completion at Universal City. One of the nine already has been received in the East, and others are expected next week.

The Prosperity Nine is composed of nine Universal Attractions of unusual merit, made by such stars as Frank Mayo, Lois Wilson, Jack Mulhall, Herbert Rawlinson, Gladys Walton, Hoot Gibson, Colleen Moore, Ralph Graves and Cullen Landis.

Universal's best corps of directors has been engaged in turning out these special productions, and Universal officials assert the pictures promise to be the greatest group of box-office winners ever put out under the Universal banner. Carl Laemmle has named the group the Prosperity Nine because he believes the pictures will arrive on the screen simultaneously with a wave of better times.

The pictures, to be released one each week beginning October 23, are "Wolf Law," starring Frank Mayo, directed by Stuart Paton; "Broad Daylight," featuring Lois Wilson and Jack Mulhall, directed by Irving Cummings; "Another Man's Shoes," starring Herbert Rawlinson, directed by Jack Conway; "The Lavender Bath Lady," a new Gladys Walton feature; Hoot Gibson in "Ridin' Wild"; "The Jilt," an all star production directed by Irving Cummings; "The Altar Stairs," starring Frank Mayo; Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis in "Forsaking All Others," directed by Emile Chautard, and "One Wonderful Night," another Herbert Rawlinson feature.

The Prosperity Nine will follow closely on the heels of the Winning Nine, Universal's first group of 1922-1923 releases, which now are meeting with extraordinary success in every locality.

The first four pictures of the Winning Nine already have been released generally. They are "Don't Shoot," with Herbert Rawlinson; "Paid Back," with an all-star cast; "Top o' the Morning," with Gladys Walton, and "The Galloping Kid," with Hoot Gibson. Four others in the first fall group have been received in the East and many are enjoying pre-release showings.

"Broad Daylight," one of the first of the Prosperity Nine, already has been received in the East. It is a strong mystery and underworld drama. Lois Wilson and Jack Mulhall are the featured players. Other well-known actors in the cast are Ralph Lewis, Wilton Taylor, Robert M. Walker, Kenneth Gibson and Ben Hewlett. The story was written by Harvey Gates.

Goes to Europe to Film Story

Cosmopolitan Productions sent a specially selected company to Europe Saturday on the President Harding, to film Blasco Ibanez's story, "The Enemies of Women," amidst the scenes where the author located his latest, and as many consider his greatest romance.

The members of the cast who sailed are Lionel Barrymore, Alma Rubens, Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, W. H. Thompson, William Collier, Jr., and Gladys Hulette. Alan Crosland, will direct the picture.

Critics Acclaim Vignola

One of the greatest tributes ever accorded a motion picture director was paid to Robert G. Vignola this week by the critics of the New York newspapers who, after viewing the premiere of Mr. Vignola's Cosmopolitan production, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," unanimously declared him to be among the most out-standing figures in the directorial ranks.

The New York Times, generally conservative in its reviews, said, in part: "More than anyone else the man responsible for the genuine merit of 'When Knighthood Was in Flower' is Robert G. Vignola. It is, first of all, Mr. Vignola's film and he should be proud of it."

The New York Daily News said: "The triumph belongs to Robert G. Vignola. In the field of artistic production and direction he has hung up a mark for others to shoot at and he has hung it high."

The New York Mail said: "Robert G. Vignola, who directed this picture, has by this picture elevated himself to the ranks of those who can do the biggest things in the film world and do them splendidly."

Zit's Weekly said: "The direction by Vignola stamps him as the greatest director in the country today."

The Evening Telegram said: "It is one of the greatest film epics ever made in America. 'When Knighthood Was in Flower' establishes a new standard of magnificence for motion picture plays."

All the New York papers devoted from a half column to two columns each in reviewing this magnificent motion picture and the consensus of the critical opinion was that Mr. Vignola had produced a classic in screen art seldom equalled.

Big Picture Here

Something new in the way of transportation of motion picture film was put into effect by Douglas Fairbanks when Harry D. Buckley left Los Angeles to personally conduct the first print of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" into New York.

The film, which is said to be insured for half a million dollars, reposed in a can in the express car, but because of unsettled conditions on the railroads due to the strike situation, Mr. Buckley, who is the Fairbanks' road show manager, chaperoned the film through the "trouble zone" in Chicago and conducted it safely into New York, where arrangements will be made for showing it at a premiere in one of the "legitimate" theatres on Broadway.

Rapid Booking of "Remembrance"

Goldwyn's production of "Remembrance," its new Rupert Hughes picture, and the first release under the new policy of but twenty productions a year, all of them big super-features, is being booked rapidly in first run theatres, says a statement from Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

The national release date for "Remembrance" is October 8. In a few instances there will be pre-release showings, notably at the Capitol Theatre, New York, on October 1 and at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, on September 24. The film has already been booked in a number of prominent theatres for October screening. November bookings are also being received rapidly.

First National Plans to Give Free Advertising to Exhibitors

First National is announcing the distribution of a complete line of fall announcement advertising, without charge, to franchise holders and exhibitors playing First National attractions, with particular emphasis upon service to the smaller theatres.

Behind this innovation which sets a precedent that it is predicted will become an annual custom in the industry, are two motives: First, to give exhibitors in the small towns an equal opportunity with those in the large cities to put on handsome advertising displays. Secondly, to make it possible for exhibitors to cash in on their ideas of a big opening splurge for the new season.

This innovation is in response to the repeated demands of exhibitors in the smaller towns who have wanted to feature a fall opening with effective publicity, advertising and exploitation fanfare, but who have been unable to obtain the advertising material for it.

It is to encourage such fall opening announcements and stimulate exhibitor interest in selling the public on attractions for the opening year that First National decided to give away the fall announcement advertising.

Great Help to Showmen

With adequate advertising material at hand the exhibitor will be able to place his product before the public in an annual display that will have the same prestige and spectacular effect that have marked the fashion displays of clothing stores, the automobile shows of motor agencies and the food exhibits of wholesale provision houses.

With the proper advertising at hand the exhibitor will be able to give a fall opening and sell the idea, to his patrons, of the many good things to come.

In the free distribution of this advertising a special eye has been turned upon the smaller theatres. From the standpoint of exhibitors this national and simultaneous fanfare of attractions for the coming year offers a great opportunity for enlisting increased patronage, and definitely establishes a standard of the year's worth while attractions before the theatre going public.

The following material comprises the fall announcement package: A two-color campaign press sheet, containing brief concise news stories of First National attractions and stars for the coming year that can be used in newspapers as a program announcement by theatres that will play the First National schedule.

Five rotogravure sheets in subdued handsome colors. There is one each on Mack Sennett's "Suzanna," Richard Walton Tully's "The Masquerader," starring Guy Bates Post; R. A. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust" and Thomas H. Ince's "The Hottentot." A fifth one is a composite of big scenes from many of the forthcoming attractions.

Colored Star Portraits

A five-colored announcement sheet with a film strip of First National stars and featured players, and a list of attractions to be released through First National. Sixteen 11x14 finely lithographed colored star portraits, including the following favorites: Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, John Barrymore, Richard Barthelmess, Guy Bates Post, Katherine MacDonald, Jackie Coogan, Charlie Chaplin, Hope Hampton, Mabel Normand, Dorothy Phillips, Miriam Cooper, Buster Keaton, Anita Stewart, Claire Windsor and Strongheart, the wonder dog.

A slide enabling exhibitors to make a screen announcement of the coming annual opening display. A postcard to request cuts and mats reproduced in the press sheet from the First National exchange. The cuts and mats in this press sheet will be supplied without charge.

Miscellaneous material, consisting of program suggestions, samples of miniature star photographs to be given away at small cost, lobby strips with the pert and pertinent slogans from the First National symbol: "Standing Room Only. A First National Attraction today" and "Look who's here for the whole year," the latter being especially appropriate for exhibitors featuring First National attractions and who wish to sell their patrons on this standard of entertainment.

Equally valuable with the element of timeliness for a fall display are the all-year advertising and exploitation possibilities that the announcement package offers. Some of the rotogravure sheets feature special attractions; but the composite one can be used throughout the year as well. In the case of the star portraits these are adaptable as long as the theatre contemplates using any attractions with these stars.

Exploitation For All

Second only to the precedent established in a big fall opening is the exploitation aid that these accessories offer. For the first time in the history of the industry, First National says, the smaller exhibitors are placed on an equal level with the big city exhibitors in availability and use of artistic paper and attractive tie-up lithographs.

Obstacles of time, money and lack of equipment have been bridged in the precedent which, in addition to paving the way to a spectacular display in the theatre, will also open a path to effective and compelling co-operative exploitation campaigns with retail merchants.

Luncheon Given by Carter De Haven to New York Exhibitors and Trade Paper Representatives at the Hotel Astor

"Curse of Drink" Will Be Given Big Boosting

The "Curse of Drink," the Blaney melodrama, starring Harry T. Morey, Marguerite Clayton, Edmund Breese, George Fawcett and Miriam Batistta, which is being distributed on the independent market by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, will be elaborately exploited throughout the country. The six-reel thriller is just beginning its career in the picture houses of the Eastern States and according to reports from exchanges who are distributing it locally, the campaign of propaganda on the feature will bring record box-office receipts.

Steiner Has Three Studios

William Steiner will maintain the Neal Hart unit in Hollywood for several productions. The Hart Company's recently made a trip to the Far North to secure shots for "South of Northern Lights." Steiner will make a flying trip to the coast next month, and is looking for good Western and semi-Western stories for the Hart unit. Arrangements are under way for a studio in Hollywood, which will give the Steiner Productions three studios, Cliffside, N. J.; Hot Wells, Texas, and Hollywood, Cal.

De Haven Is Host to N. Y. Showmen

One hundred and twenty-five leading exhibitors, representatives of the daily and the motion picture trade press greeted Carter DeHaven, whose two-reel comedies are now being released through the Film Booking Offices of America, at an informal luncheon at the Hotel Astor in New York on Monday, September 18. Mr. DeHaven was the host of the afternoon.

The F. B. O. comedy star is making a Coast to Coast tour and in every city is renewing acquaintances with old friends and making a host of new ones. At the Hotel Astor on last Monday he kept his audiences laughing during the entire luncheon with a running fire of stories and "gags." The entire gathering was strictly informal and not a serious note was sounded.

The only reference to the motion picture business made at this genial gathering was uttered by Mr. DeHaven in closing, when he explained the purpose of the luncheon. He stated that it was against his policy to show any of his pictures at such a luncheon, as he wished to make it purely a social and not a business meeting.

He explained that he has already finished six of his comedies for F. B. O. release and that he would shortly be back at the R-C studio starting on the seventh. His contract with the F. B. O., said Mr. DeHaven, stated that his comedies were to be sold individually and not as a series, so that the exhibitor would not be forced to book a number of pictures in order to secure one which particularly pleased him.

Power Necessary

Enough electricity to illuminate 500 homes was used to light one of the huge sets used in the screening of "Peg O My Heart," Laurette Taylor's photoplay. King Vidor is directing the picture at the Metro studio. This is a screen version of the international stage success by J. Hartley Manners.

With the total amount 850,000 watts of electricity, not only could 500 homes be illuminated, but there would remain current enough to operate in each the phonograph and player piano, the doorbell and cooking range, to charge the wireless battery, manufacture ice in the refrigerator, heat the curling irons, percolator, toaster, and cook the waffles, to do the ironing, make the ice cream and do the family washing.

McGregor to Enact Leading Role

Malcolm McGregor is to have the leading role in "Cold Courage," the Metro production of "All the Brothers Were Valiant," Ben Ames Williams' sea story. Irvin V. Willat is to direct.

It was less than a year ago that Mr. McGregor, formerly a Yale swimmer, was selected by Rex Ingram for a prominent part in "The Prisoner of Zenda." His work in this production won him a long-term contract with Metro. Soon after this Alan Holubar chose him for the principal role in "Broken Chains," the Chicago News $10,000 prize-winning scenario. Upon the completion of this part he was immediately assigned to play in "Cold Courage."

In this sea story Mr. McGregor will enact the part of Joel Shore, an apparently cowardly sailor who develops into a real man.

REX INGRAM
Director of Many Big Metro Pictures

To Produce "Coronation" on the Coast and Abroad

Mae Murray, Robert Z. Leonard, her director, and a technical staff left New York recently for Hollywood, where the Metro star's next picture, "Coronation," will be made. Announcement of this was made the other day by William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of Miss Murray's photoplays.

Need of studio room more ample than that provided by any eastern motion picture plant is one determining reason for the transference of Mae Murray's production activities to the west coast, according to Mr. Atkinson. He said, regarding the move

"This new Mae Murray picture is to be the most lavish of any she has attempted. It was at first thought impossible to present her most recently completed screen play, 'Broadway Rose,' within the New York studios, but by the exercise of considerable ingenuity in erecting settings, it was accomplished. In the case of 'Coronation,' however, the task is manifestly impossible.

"This picture will be made partly in California, and partly in Europe. In fact, it is but the first of the coming series of Tiffany Productions which will call for locations both in this country and abroad. There is a tendency of some stability now to seek foreign backgrounds in foreign countries. The insistence upon absolute realism by Mr. Leonard has prompted him to the decision to make the European episodes of 'Coronation' in the country where the story calls for their occurence.

"Exhibitors have come to expect, from past performances, that photoplays starring Mae Murray and presented by Robert Z. Leonard represent the highest mark in artistry and lavishness."

Coincident with his announcement of the departure of Miss Murray and her husband for Hollywood, Mr. Atkinson made public the purchase for this star of the recent Broadway success, "The French Doll," presented for a long and prosperous run in New York by Ray Goetz. Like "Coronation," parts of "The French Doll" call for foreign backgrounds; and or this Miss Murray will make a second trip to Europe.

The itinerary of the Mae Murray company will be to Hollywood for some of the episodes, thence to Europe for the remainder, before returning to New York for cutting and titling of the production. When time comes for the making of "The French Doll," Mr. Leonard will take his staff to Florida for the Palm Beach scenes and thence to France for the Parisian, according to M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany Productions.

The photography of "Coronation" will be done by Oliver T. Marsh, who was cameraman of "Peacock Alley," "Fascination," and "Broadway Rose." The story was written by Edmund Goulding. The producing company is Tiffany Productions; the distributor, Metro Pictures Corporation.

Metro Will Start Making "Passion Vine" in Miami

Rex Ingram will begin the making of his forthcoming production for Metro release, "The Passion Vine," at Miami, Florida, next week.

Locations have been finally chosen, technical facilities arranged satisfactorily and such settings as are required in the outdoor scenes erected. The next few days will be consumed in going over every detail of plan in order to reduce to a minimum the time necessary for minor re-arrangements after actual beginning of the filming.

With Mr. Ingram is John Russell, author of the story, who will serve in an advisory capacity. "The Passion Vine" is a colorful romance of the South Seas, one of the famous volume of short stories by Mr. Russell, published under the title, "Where the Pavement Ends."

After a wide circulation here, the book was given a most hearty reception in England. It is first-hand writing, for Mr. Russell spent several years cruising about the islands near Papeete, living with the natives, chumming with beachcombers, hearing the outlandish tales of traders in the clubs on the fringe of civilization and coming upon tales even more stirring. He has been beyond where the pavement ends; and his presence with the Ingram organization will be invaluable in insuring that every detail of dress and custom and setting be accurate.

The leading roles will be enacted by Alice Terry and by Ramon Navarro.

For a later Rex Ingram production, "Scharamouche," a novel by Rafael Sabatini, has been purchased by Metro, it was announced this week.

Patrons Praise Metro Pictures

Unsolicited testimonials to the merit of recent Metro photoplays received by branch managers of the various exchanges throughout the country from patrons of motion picture theatres provide a valuable indication of the enthusiastic reception which those recent releases are receiving.

Individuals in various walks of life and with occupations and interests widely different daily express in these letters their own sense of satisfaction with the films, as well as a message of congratulation to the company which sponsors them.

Two of these photoplays—Clara Kimball Young in "The Hands of Nara" and Viola Dana in "The Match Breaker"—have been the subject of specially enthusiastic comment.

One of the letters recently received was written by Mr. C. F. Stuhler, a member of Publicity in America, Inc., and forwarded to the Metro home offices in New York by Lawrence Beatus of the Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Critic Recommends "Zenda" Film

"'The Prisoner of Zenda' is a romance done with genuine distinction. It is the first picture of the new season that I am going to list among the best photoplays of the year. It is a pleasant change to be able to recommend without ualifications a new movie drama."

So writes the special motion picture reviewer of the Toronto Sunday World in his weekly digest of photoplays of August 27. This critic devotes more than a column of space to an appraisal of the merits of Rex Ingram's production for Metro Pictures Corporation of "The Prisoner of Zenda, which began a run in a leading theatre in the Canadian city. The account continues in part as follows:

"There are a lot of reasons why 'The Prisoner of Zenda' is a photodrama that can be recommended.

"The producer has given us Anthony Hopes story, and has caught in a marked degree the romantic spirit of the novel. It is a long time since I have seen a picture with as much of the feeling of romance. If costume dramas could all be done as Rex Ingram does them, they would soon be the most popular type of screen offering. Unfortunately, he is one of the few men who can make you feel that you are in France, or Ruritania or the Argentine, or wherever the action of his story happens to be."

Morhange Buys for Foreign Market

The arrival of Marcel Morhange, of the New York Film Exchange of Buenos Aires, has been the talk of the export market during the past two weeks. Besides several independent productions, Mr. Morhange has bought the exclusive rights on the Mermaid comedies and the whole output of the Goldwyn and Vitagraph companies for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Mr. Morhange will remain in town for two or three weeks longer to complete his purchases of independent pictures.

Chester E. Sawyer, of 130 West Forty-sixth street, has been appointed by Mr. Morhange the New York representative of all his film enterprises.

Sun Books Big Vitagraph Film

The Sun Theatre, in Omaha, has booked "My Wild Irish Rose," Vitagraph's big special production, for the week of October 22, and is planning an extensive advance exploitation campaign. The Sun will have the cooperation of the many music dealers of the city, all of whom will work out original plans for the tie-up. The success of this picture wherever any effort has been made in exploitation has been striking.

STARS IN METRO PRODUCTION

Novel Teaser Drive Gets Big Business

A novel advertising campaign, consisting in a series of teasers in a leading newspaper, successfully tied-up local stores as well as the name of the photoplay when the Rex Ingram production of "Turn to the Right" was shown by Fred. S. Meyers at the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

It was a highly effective teaser campaign, and unusual in that it successfully aroused advance interest not only in the photoplay itself, but in the shops which also figured in the campaign.

Mr. Meyers placed two advertisements, each two columns wide and two inches high, in prominent positions in an issue of the Hamilton News, which preceded his showing of "Turn to the Right." One of these was worded as follows: "When you shop, do you 'Turn to the Right' Dealer, or do you buy at random? There's a message in store for you, telling you where to 'Turn to the Right' store for the right thing. Watch tomorrow's News."

The other advertisement carried this announcement: "'Turn to the right' merchant when in need of any of life's necessities. 'Turn to the Right' Store for quality merchandise, in other words, ADVERTISED goods. 'Turn to the Right' of page 3 in tomorrow's News."

On the following day appeared a large advertisement of many of Hamilton's leading shops, with the phrase, "Turn to the Right" stressed in many ways. In the "ad" slip appeared an announcement that the Metro photoplay would be seen at the Palace Theatre. The splendid co-operation of local merchants with Mr. Meyers resulted profitably for all concerned.

American Releases Play to Capacity

Three of Los Angeles' important theatres, conducted by three of the ablest managers, are playing American Releasing Corporation's attractions at the same time.

George Beban's "The Sign of the Rose," is at Miller's California Theatre in conjunction with the added attraction of George Beban and his company who appear in person, acting the flower shop episode.

At the Mission Theatre, the third week of Pyramid's "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" finds Manager Harry David jubilant, while the first showing in Los Angeles of Pyramid's "My Old Kentucky Home" is crowding the Alhambra.

"Nazimova" Scenes to Illustrate Book

One of the most prominent of American publishers is preparing a new edition of Oscar Wilde's "Salome," to be illustrated by photographs of scenes from Nazimova's motion picture production of the same name. The book will appear coincidentally with the release of the photoplay, it is expected.

Exhibitors should be quick to grasp the exploitative advantages of such a publication. It will mean that joined with the force of the national publicity campaign for Nazimova's "Salome" will be that of the publisher's in behalf of the new Wilde book.

This latter will doubtless embrace specially prepared window displays and country-wide newspaper advertising, with a mention of the photoplay, necessarily. Tie-ups with the book stores and with the book departments of department stores will be almost automatic, and the returns from such co-operative sales efforts will be no less so.

The idea of "Salome," the book, illustrated by pictures from "Salome," the screen play, is the publisher's. Happening to catch a glimpse of a photograph in one of the great national magazines, the book concern immediately saw the possibilities of a popular edition of the dramatic poem by Oscar Wilde.

'When Danger Smiles' New Duncan Film

William Duncan has completed shooting on "When Danger Smiles," and is now cutting and titling. The negative is expected East very soon, to be prepared for early release.

The Duncan company went far afield for the locale of this feature, and Duncan's insatiable appetite for new stuff in scenic background insured a new vista throughout. The Southern California mountains and deserts will appear in "When Danger Smiles."

There are big scenes, tense situations, stirring horsemanship, and a pretty love story that winds up as it should.

Edith Johnson appears opposite Duncan in "When Danger Smiles," and never has she appeared more attractive, or in a role more suited to her.

Will Start Filming Ade Story

George Ade is to have an active hand in the filming of his second original story for the screen, "Back Home and Broke," which is to be a Paramount vehicle for Thomas Meighan.

As in his first original story for the screen, "Our Leading Citizen," in which Mr. Meighan appeared, Mr. Ade will write the sub-titles and otherwise cooperate in the making of the film which will soon be put in production at the Paramount studio on Long Island.

First National Picture Opens Theatre

One of the handsomest and best appointed motion picture theatres in the country is the Regent at Elizabeth, N. J., erected at an expense of $500,000, which recently opened with an All-First National program. This big house forms another link in the New Jersey chain controlled by the Fabian Enterprises, of which Jacob Fabian, second vice president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is the head.

The Regent opened on Wednesday, September 6, with Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader," Buster Keaton in "Cops," and other First National attractions.

Completing Photography

Director R. A. Walsh is taking interiors for "Passions of the Sea," formerly called "Captain Blackbird," Carey Wilson's tale of the South Seas, at the Goldwyn studios and expects to finish photography on the film within a few days.

Universal Buys "Bavu"

Universal has bought the screen rights to "Bavu," the Russian melodrama produced in New York last winter. Word of the purchase was received this week from the Universal home office.

It is understood that the play will be made into an all-star screen feature.

Two Lichtman Features Ready

The second and third of the series of Preferred Pictures to be distributed through the Al Lichtman Corporation are completed, according to B. P. Schulberg on the coast. These are "Shadows" and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and represent the first of the Tom Forman productions for Preferred and the second from Gasnier.

Advertising Benefits Exhibitors

Although it made its first appearance only a week ago, already the force of Metro Pictures Corporation's national advertising campaign in The Saturday Evening Post is distinctly felt at the box-office.

The initial full-page insertion in this periodical was seen in the issue of September 2, advertising Viola Dana in "The Five Dollar Baby." Exhibitors have reported to the Metro exchanges in the seven days elapsed since this display was made that their patrons have inquired in a manner bespeaking genuine interest, of the date of the showing of this photoplay at their theatres.

By means of the supplementary folder issued to exhibitors by Metro, motion picture showmen have had explained to them in full the most effective manner of linking their local advertising with that broadcasted nationally in the Post.

Each Metro release will be heralded by a full page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post. The advertisements are scheduled to appear every other week, coincidentally with, or a short time before, the actual release date of the film advertised. In this way, exhibitors will be enabled to satisfy immediately the requests of their patrons for presentations of the pictures.

Metro to Release Laurel Comedies

Metro Pictures Corporation will act as the distributing medium for a series of eight comedies, presented by the Amalgamated Producing Company and starring Stan Laurel, it is announced by W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro. The first two of the series—"The Egg," and "The Weak-End Party"—have already been completed and are scheduled for release within the immediate future.

A capable staff has already been selected by the producers which will insure the success of this series of comedies. It numbers executives who have had considerable experience in the making of this type of photoplay, and it is felt that the staff and the resources at its disposal will materially assist Mr. Laurel in making the releases substantial box-office hits.

Gill Pratt has been chosen as director of the staff. His experience of eleven years with the best comedy companies in motion pictures qualifies him admirably to fulfill his present position. No less fitted for their respective places are his associates. Norman Tourag, associate director, has for the past three years been connected in an important capacity with Larry Semon, Clyde Brockman, formerly with Buster Keaton, has been engaged to provide special "stunts" for the series, serving in the same capacity as Percy Penbrooke.

Changes Title

B. P. Schulberg, in a wire to Al Lichtman from the coast, states that the title of the second Preferred Picture has been changed to "Shadows." The picture was produced under the title of "Ching Ching, Chinaman" from a prize story by Wilbur Daniel Steele, and despite the fact that the title might indicate the character of the story as being Oriental, the action occurs in a New England fishing village.

Keystone Company Gives Outing

A good fellowship week-end party was given by the Keystone Engraving Company to its employees and members of the Motion Picture Industry at the Ferndale studios, Yaphank, Long Island, Saturday and Sunday, September 2 and 3.

Practically all of the outdoor sports were indulged in. One of the events was a target shooting contest in which all participated. This contest was won by Edward Nolan, of the Keystone Engraving Company, with a 46 score out of a possible 50. After the contest Hugo Ellenberg, of the White Plains Rifle Club, a crack shot, gave an exhibition of fancy shooting.

The main event was a ball game between the guests and employees, in which the guests bested the Keystoners. Walter Addison, president of the Keystone Company, acted as chief host. He was ably assisted by Harry Kaplowitz.

Noted Story Bought by Universal

The Universal scenario department announces the purchase of the world screen rights to "The Power of a Lie," a novel by Johan Bojer, Norwegian writer. This book won for its author the laurels of the French Academy.

"The Power of a Lie" is the story of a man whose whole life is changed, and those of all around him, by one lie. It affects the whole community in which he lives, and becomes so powerful that he finally believes it himself.

New Exploiteer

W. C. Herrmann, general sales manager of the Big "U" Exchange, the distributing center for Universal pictures in the New York territory, reports the addition of a new member to the Big "U" exploitation staff. The newcomer is James F. Biggin, of East Orange, for several years on the staff of the Newark Star Eagle.

Uses All Elements in "Ebb Tide"

Listed among new records in the record-smashing business of making motion pictures is said to be the recent achievement of George Melford in his conquering of about every natural element during the production of "Ebb Tide," his Paramount picture version of the Robert Louis Stevenson-Lloyd Osbourne South Sea classic in which Lila Lee, James Kirkwood, Raymond Hatton, George Fawcett, Noah Beery and Jacqueline Logan are the principal players.

"Ebb Tide" was taken on land, on the water and under the water, while transportation to and from a Pacific Island location required travelling over the water in a hydro-aeroplane.

On the water there was a dramatic scene in which a 330-foot schooner was burned. And also on the surface one sees the beginning of a strenuous fight with an octopus by Lila Lee and James Kirkwood which is the big punch of the story. The octopus fight and scenes of pearl-diving are continued under water.

A Special Edition

A special photoplay edition of "The Hound of the Baskervilles," the Sherlock Holmes story which is now being distributed by the Film Booking Offices of America, is to be issued.

The edition will carry a specially designed jacket, mentioning the photoplay, and will be illustrated by the most thrilling scenes from the feature.

Papers Highly Laud Talmadge Production

Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame," a First National attraction, opened at the Strand Theatre, New York, to crowded houses Sunday, September 17. Managing - Director Joseph Plunkett, of the Strand, arranged an effective musical accompaniment for this Joseph M. Schenck production.

Motion picture critics of the New York newspapers were enthusiastic in their praise of Norma Talmadge in this, her latest screen vehicle. Following is the substance of their comments:

Herald—The picture is more consistently dramatic than "Smilin' Through," and there are sufficient intense scenes to outfit several romances. Times—It is unquestionably a fine picture because it presents the always competent Miss Talmadge with an excellent story, intelligent direction and an unusually good supporting cast.

American—Elaborately mounted and finely directed is this film version of Balzac's classic of the French court in the reign of Louis XVIII, but the sumptuous settings are wholly subordinate to the sincere, straightforward, convincing acting of Norma Talmadge and Conway Tearle in the leading roles.

Tribune—Every foot of it is interesting. World—A remarkably fine performance by Miss Talmadge and one of corresponding excellence by Conway Tearle, combined with a sincerity of direction and a splendor of background, make it a real and holding drama of the screen.

Morning Telegraph — Norma Talmadge does a most appealing piece of acting. Evening World—Miss Talmadge's wonderful acting, judged flamingly, is about 8,000,000 candle power as compared to other films we have beheld lately. Telegram—All the pomp and glory of the court of Louis XVIII is brilliantly presented on the screen.

Mail—"The Eternal Flame" possesses an indefinable something of superlative art that gives it the atmosphere of a classic.

Sun—Miss Talmadge in this lavish picture has upheld the standard she set in "Smilin' Through."

First National Men See "Oliver Twist"

Sol Lesser opened the trunk that contained the eight reels of Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" and exhibited the picture before a private audience composed of Associated First National Pictures executives. The showing was held this week.

Everyone viewing the production claimed it as a winner of winners and that this Dickens' classic will establish new records in box-office figures has more than been assured by all.

The statement that Lesser has made regarding the road-showing of the "Oliver Twist" production and the manner in which he contemplates doing it has caused considerable comment.

Lesser is well versed with road-showing pictures, but it is hard for anyone not knowing the inner workings of a road-show film to fully realize the tremendous amount of work involved in an endeavor of this nature.

The Eastern offices of the Jackie Coogan Productions, of which Irving M. Lesser is manager, resemble an ammunition plant during the war insofar as activities are concerned. There is not an hour throughout the day that long lines of people are not waiting to confer with the Coogan executives on matters pertaining to the road-show scheme.

All lithographs, lobby displays, window cards, heralds, cuts, mats and every possible asset to the exhibitor are now being made in New York. Everything must pass the supervision of Lesser—everything must be right in every detail.

A. S. Kane Announces Three Big Pictures

Arthur S. Kane has announced three Associated Exhibitors features for October.

On October 1 is predicted "The Head Hunters of the South Seas," a Martin Johnson adventure film taken among the cannibals of Malekula, an island of the South Seas.

On October 15 Associated presents Morris Kohn's Dependable Pictures attraction, "Till We Meet Again." This is a William Christy Cabanne production, with a cast headed by Mae Marsh. It was adapted by Edmund Goulding from the story by William Christy Cabanne.

October 29 is the date set for the release of Edward A. MacManus' production, "The Woman Who Fooled Herself." From an original story by Charles A. Logue, this attraction offers as the featured players May Allison and Robert Ellis. It was co-directed by Mr. Logue and Mr. Ellis.

Breaking Records

Reports from the eastern offices of the Jackie Coogan Productions state that Jackie's "Trouble" feature is making more than good in every territory it has or is playing.

According to Irving M. Lesser, who is in charge of the New York offices of the Coogan unit, this Coogan production has met with only the greatest of success everywhere. Letters to this effect have been received from exhibitors in all parts of the land.

In Los Angeles at the Kinema Theatre, "Trouble" went over in a very big way, playing that playhouse two weeks. The same results were obtained in San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Denver, Chicago, and other large cities.

"The Young Diana" Goes on Tour

Marion Davies in "The Young Diana," after four weeks on Broadway in three principal picture theatres, now goes on tour of the Keith & Proctor houses throughout the country. Cosmopolitan's picturization of Marie Corelli's famous story was first presented at the Rivoli on August 27, and immediately booked for another week at the Rialto.

In both the Riesenfeld houses it made records for late summer business, it is said. At B. S. Moss' beautiful Cameo Theatre the picture held the screen for two weeks and started the fall season with a new record for receipts.

W. DeMille Starts New Picture

William DeMille started September 18 on his new production in which Bebe Daniels and Lewis Stone are playing the leading roles, with Kathlyn Williams, Adolphe Menjou, Winter Hall, Edward Martindel, Bernice Frank, Maym Kelso and others in important parts. Clara Beranger wrote the story.

First on the List

The first of Goldwyn's "big twenty" productions for the new season to be shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, is the Rupert Hughes picture, "Remembrance," written, directed, edited and titled by himself. It also happens to be the first picture on the Goldwyn schedule of releases. It will be shown at the Capitol a week in advance of its national release date.

The picture will be given special exploitation and a special Rothafel presentation.

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Sometimes a Stunt That Sells Seats Will Eventually React Against the House

JUST because a stunt brings money to a house, it does not always follow that the stunt is a good one. Sometimes it will sell and at the same time raise such an aftermath of antagonistic discussion that the eventual result is hurtful.

One manager recently worked a stunt which he says brought an increase of fifty dollars a day in the business, but we would not have such a stunt worked in a house in which we had an interest for many times that sum.

For obvious reasons the manager's name and house are not given, but this is a verbatim copy of a recent report:

Doing the Damage

"Using the title as an inspiration, I tried a new stunt on this picture, and judging by receipts it did some good. (Note: the feature was Metro's "They Like 'Em Rough").

"About a week before the picture opened, I began the trick and this is it. By reason of the fact that I am acquainted with quite a few of the young women about the village, I am constantly with or near some of them, so during this week every time I saw one I would pinch her arm, pull her hair, slap her or do something rough to her, and when she would say anything about it I would say: 'They like 'em rough,' and they would laugh it off. Consequently the other fellows picked it up, and by the end of the week practically every girl that had been out of her house had a blue spot somewhere because some one had told her they like 'em rough.

"It got to be a sort of byword amongst the young jellies and flappers. Of course, all the time I was plugging them with newspaper advertising and a trailer on the screen. Something caused business to jump way up the two days we played the picture. We are generally below the average Monday and Tuesday, but this time we went about $50 over each day. All the younger crowd saw the picture and were pleased with it. Frequently now when I see one of the victims they remind me of where I or someone else used them for a walking advertisement."

The Comeback

Possibly the flappers liked this unique advertising stunt, but the trouble is that the publicity was not confined to the flappers. It is more than probable that the parents of some of these youngsters objected to the manhandling their girls received and resented the license thus offered the young men to attempt familiarities that would not be countenanced under ordinary circumstances.

This talk might not hurt business quickly, but it must inevitably react against a house to have it said that the management instituted such an orgy of sadistic practise in the town. The manager thought only of the advertisement. He does not seem to have had the inherent good sense to realize that such an offense against decency and good taste must in the end be resented even by those who thought for a time that it was a good joke.

One such action can hurt business for months. It can undo all of the good impression for which level-headed exhibitors have been striving ever since the business of picture exhibition emerged from the era of the pitch dark house.

It is the pictures and not the manager personally who will be blamed, and we hope that the recital of these facts will deter other managers who may be afflicted with similar "inspirations."

Your patrons are your guests and as such are entitled not only to your respect but to protection against the insults of others. Keep that always in mind and let such "inspirations" run for the other fellow.

Penny Penrods

Roy Smart, of the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala., has a new one. To get a desirable window, he gave a dry goods store one hundred single passes to Penrod.

This not only brought him a window, but the store gave a space in its newspaper advertising to announce that it had on sale a limited number of tickets to "Penrod" at one cent each. It was handled precisely like any other store bargain and it reached the mothers as well as the boys.

Six boys in swimming trunks and barrels painted up for the attraction were used for a street ballyhoo, the boys being paid in passes.

The cash investment was very small and business was better by a third.

What's the matter? No one has sent Lem Stewart a good word yet. Shoot!

A Dog Race Novelty for "The Silent Call"

A dog race is the novel idea worked by the Quality Theatre, Independence, Kans., for "The Silent Call," with the co-operation of a First National exploiteer.

The stunt is very simple, but it will get all of the town down to the "track" and make talk for a week before and months after the event. It can even be worked for a repeat on some picture not germane but needing a little help.

The rules are simple in the extreme. No dogs are barred. Each dog must be accompanied by its master or handler and a helper. The helper holds the dog at the starting line (at one end of the block), and the handler stands at the finish line to call the dog. The dog must be caught and held by its owner to finish the race, and a dog crossing the line and not caught is debarred in favor of one caught and held.

Two Sets of Prizes

The prizes were one dozen photographs, a new collar and five pounds of dog meat for the pups. The owners were awarded ten, five and three passes. It is a good thing the dogs could not read, or they would all have sought to be third.

If more dogs are entered than can be handled conveniently, run the race in trial heats and a final.

The exploiteer writes that the only sad part is that the stunt put the picture over to such business that the house wanted to hold the film for a week and could not get an extension of time from the exchange.

The stunt was pulled at noon and all dogs were blanketed for the attraction.

COMPETITION IS NOT MERELY THEATRES, SAYS RENAUD

Paramounteer Kenneth O. Renaud made this drawing to combat the attitude of the man who has the only house in town and feels that his patrons have no alternative. It's drawn for the small town man, but it applies to the cities with equal force.

Changed Wire Idea and Won Attention

Replacing the fake telegram with real messages got a record business for "Sonny" at the Paramount theatre, Nebraska City.

There are in most small towns a handful of persons whose opinion on a picture will sell or prevent the sale of many seats. They are the men and women who pose as authorities for their groups of friends.

To get these interested in a play the management knew would be well received, wires were sent them from Omaha with "Am coming home. Meet me at the Paramount theatre tonight. Love. Sonny."

Oranges Not Lemons

The Sunkist orange growers association has gotten behind Dorothy Phillips in "Hurricane's Gal" because that Holubar star is tied to an orange drink made from the real fruit.

Mud Baths Helped a Wallace Reid Stunt

Harry Eagles, the Seattle Paramounteer, is getting to be something of a Belasco when it comes to exploits. He wants them to look like the real goods.

It struck Eagles that most of the "Dent" cars used to advertise "Across the Continent" looked as though they had never been off paved streets, so when he went to Yakima to foregather with H. A. Gillespie, of the Liberty theatre, he decided to do something real.

Gillespie had boarded in his front for the posters and had a Ford car with a tin torpedo body; the sort you buy from a mail order house. This was properly bannered and it looked all right except that it was too respectable.

Eagles took a real car and located a mud hole not far from town. Every half hour the ballyhoo car was sent through the puddle and then speeded into town with the air of just having arrived from New York and all points east.

The appearance of the car added surprisingly to the interest the public felt and crowds would gather round the apparent traveler as it pulled up at some prominent spot. Then the driver would pass out heralds and turn back for another coating of mud and did it all over again.

It was just a little touch, but it contributed mightily to the pull of the advertisement.

HOW THE BLACKSTONE THEATRE, DETROIT, PUT IT OVER

The Schreiber Brothers have to pull them in with a front display and the colorful posters for "The Sheik of Araby," which used to be known as "The Man Who Turned White," gave them plenty of material for a legitimately big shout.

A Paramount Release.

IT TOOK TWO MEN TO FIGURE OUT THESE STUNTS

H. A. Gillespie, of the Liberty Theatre, Yakima, can do very well all by himself, but when he had the collaboration of Carry Eagles, the Mountaineering Paramounteer, he just ripped the town from its foundations and turned it over.

Bettered the Banner

Using the regulation lobby on "Over the Border," W. W. Grist, of the Palace Theatre, Corsicana, Texas, added his own touch on the banner.

This carried the title and was painted to present the letters stuck into a snowdrift, which built up the idea of a cold locale and completed the work of the snow lobby just below.

With a ten dollar outlay they did about 25 per cent. additional business, which made it worth while.

Sold on Teaser

Hammering away on the teaser line, "He never saw a woman until he was twenty-five," gave Roy Smart a big business for "The Lotus Eater" at the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

He started this on a slide and then mimeographed it on postcards with the addition of "John Barrymore enacts the story in 'The Lotus Eater,' with Wesley Barry at the Noble, Thursday and Friday."

These cards were written in longhand on the stencil, so that the effect was that of a personally written card. Some 900 were sent out and with the usual advertising campaign, it put the story over to more money than a manager has a right to expect in summer.

Getting a good angle sold at small cost.

Mix and the Moon

Tom Mix is one of the best bets at the Imperial theatre, South Pittsburgh, Tenn., and E. C. Ogg goes to some pains to put him over to the fullest publicity.

For "Chasing the Moon" a pumpkin moon was used, lighted within by a high-powered lamp, the rest of the lobby lights being in blue. Tinsel stars were scattered about. For three nights before the showing a pony and rider stood in the lobby as the two night houses went in, the pony's head being checked to cause him to apparently look at the pumpkin moon.

Ran Real Horse Race on Main Street, N. Y.

Pulling off a horse race on the most important stretch of Broadway sounds like an almost impossible feat, but it was worked by the Film Booking Office recently, and was not as difficult as it sounds.

In the first place, it should be remembered that the F. B. O. recently handed the police a cut of their receipts on "In the Name of the Law" during its run at the Cohan theatre. Having established amicable relations, that angle was comparatively simple.

And Broadway on a Summer afternoon is not the busy thoroughfare it is supposed to be out of town. Along about two or three o'clock the automobile traffic is very light because business vehicles are not allowed on the street and the pleasure cars are mostly at the beaches or up in Westchester. A traffic stoppage for a few minutes is unimportant at that time so far as vehicular traffic is concerned, while at the same time the pedestrian traffic is fairly heavy and there is always a crowd at Forty-third street watching for the baseball returns from the Times bulletin.

The conditions were ideal from the press agent's angle, and four blooded horses raced from Forty-fifth street to Forty-third pulling up in a dead heat almost in front of the theatre entrance.

Each horse was blanketed for "My Dad," then playing at the Cohan, and the stunt brought a maximum of publicity with a minimum of jam through an intelligent exploitation of the peculiar traffic conditions.

A Film Booking Office Release

Film Booking Office exploiters staged a two-hundred-yard-dash with four real racers to the great advertisement of "My Dad," running at the Cohan Theatre. It was spectacular, but not as difficult as it sounds.

Gave the High Sign to Yakima Populace

Generally you will find H. A. Gillespie, of the Liberty theatre, Yakima, Wash., doing something. This trip it is using the sides of a couple of mountains for his billboards.

He took a couple of barrels of whitewash and painted "Orphans of the Storm, Liberty theatre, Now," on the ground so high up the steeps that it was legible for two miles. As the hills command the approach to the town, he got not only the residents, but the automobile trade, and he did not even have to wash it off, for the first rain did his cleaning up for him.

This is not a new stunt. The main idea is centuries old, and more than one college has its letters on a side hill near the institution, but this is the first time the stunt has been recorded for pictures and it is so good and cheap that the wonder now is that it was not thought of before and put to use.

For the front Mr. Gillespie boarded in with compo stuff and then covered with the regular paper, which gave a striking effect. It brought him more than the usual business at a comparatively small expense.

A Teaser Clansman Stirred Bellingham

Lots of houses have helped to put over "One Clear Call" with a mounted Klansman, but the Liberty Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., worked it on a better angle. Manager Al Finklestein put out a masked rider, who was not in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klan. The chief difference was that he worse loose white trousers instead of the robe and the hood was not peaked, but there was an essential difference in his appearance. He would not reveal his identity.

After a couple of days as a teaser, he added a banner on the horse's neck, and the house capitalized the interest created. The odd part was that Klansmen approved the change as not copying their regalia, while the other side approved of not advertising the Klan.

Splash ads and open letters, partly planned by John Leroy Johnston, the First National exploitation man in that territory, was an additional push toward clean-up business. August standouts are rare in Bellingham, but "One Clear Call" made the grade, thanks to intelligent exploitation.

Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla., used the conventional lobby on "Over the Border," but in addition he ran a white line across the sidewalk, on one side of which was "U. S." and on the other "Canada." This won a lot of persons who might have passed over the lobby, but who had to cross the line.

A United Artists Release

HOW H. A. GILLESPIE DRESSED HIS HOUSE FOR "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

He got the entire display from the posters put out for the Griffith attraction and made a wonderful flash for the Liberty Theatre, Yakima. He backed this up with letters twelve feet high on the hills just outside the town, the legend being visible for two miles because of the height and legibility of the sign. It was merely whitewash sprinkled on the ground.

Flapper Contest Is Expanded In Prizes

When the "Flapper Contest" was first announced, we expressed the belief that it would be a wonderful stunt wherever it was played.

Apparently not many have tried it out, but Rick Ricketson, Paramounteer at Denver, is simply mopping up for exhibitors with the Paramount Family Reunion.

He started in with a straight flapper contest, but that was just one prize. As he now works it there is a prize for the tallest and the shortest, the plumpest and the most slender, the youngest, the most demure and the most saucy and the prettiest girl in town is elected the Paramount Girl. The merchants donate the prizes in order to horn in on the excitement. Hooked to a local paper or run through straight newspaper advertising, it can jazz business in a 20,000 town like a fire in the courthouse square.

Rick's latest achievement was to knock a street carnival flat in Longmount, Colorado. The Eli wheel ran backwards and the spindle didn't run at all. They were all down at the Isis looking the girls over and the manager was so pleased that he wanted to come back the next week with a bathing beauties contest, but Rick wisely persuaded him to space the stunts further apart.

You are losing money if you do not work this stunt and play it clear across the boards and back again.

THIS BEATS THE PAINTED SODA FOUNTAIN MIRROR IDEA

It was worked by the Reynolds Theatre, Union City, on "My Boy." Manager Andrew Cox supplied the letters and the confectioner put them up and felt that he was getting the best of the deal, which was just how Mr. Cox felt about it.

Built-up Display Beats Lithograph

A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, contributes a lobby design on "The Loves of Pharaoh", which is easily built and which has a hundred times the interest of a lithograph.

He cut the figures from a six sheet, backed them with a distant desert scene, with a crescent moon and some tinsel stars, draped in with some handy hangings formerly used for house decoration, and painted a banner.

At small cost he had a production instead of a lithograph and it helped to persuade the public that this must be a good picture.

Pyramids, flanked by palms, were used atop the marquise, with inverted pyramid pennants for the underside.

Catch Fools First

One of the most popular roads out of Anniston, Ala., is a deep cut with banks about twenty feet high. The ambulances wait at one end of the cut and the undertakers at the other.

When he booked a recent First National at the Noble theatre, Roy Smart put up a banner reading "Accidents are inevitable, but they happen to 'Fools First'". This was done just before a polo match at the military reservation to which the road led, and the banner had the entire town guessing, for they all went out to the match.

Tagged the Canines for Paramount Week

You remember the hit the dog matinees made when they first came along. Remember how the pups would get into arguments and supply their own ballyhoo? Max Doolittle has a good memory, so he adapted the idea to Paramount week with a stunt that can be worked from several new angles.

He advertised for a dog congress in front of the Paramount Princess theatre, Sioux Falls, one morning. The street in front of the show shop was a mass of argumentative pups.

The child owners were given tags—ordinary red baggage tags—printed on one side with an advertisement for "Nice People" and on the other side with an announcement of Paramount Week with the text, "My master says if I carry this tag all week he can see a free show at the Paramount Princess theatre." This was in much smaller type than the "This is Paramount Week".

Most persons, seeing all of the dogs tagged, examined one of the tags and thereafter each additional tag was cumulative advertising. A single tag was worth little, but the aggregate was a big sale. The matinee was a repeat ballyhoo.

Another stunt for the same house was a large doll awarded the child writing the best criticism on "The Bachelor Daddy". The doll cost $10 and brought daily stories for ten days with an aggregate of 1,500 lines. It was offered by the newspaper as a literary stunt and not as an advertisement, and the youngsters went to it wholesale.

Max seems to be rounding into his old form.

A MASQUERADE SUIT AND A LITTLE NERVE DID THIS

Eli M. Orowitz, Paramounteer, and E. J. Hazzard, of the Strand Theatre, Allentown, Pa., batted this out. The devil took cat naps, but woke every few minutes to change the card on the chair, the three cards showing being used in rotation.

Has Frozen Lights for the Snow Lobby

Southern Enterprises purchased the rights to "I Am the Law" for the states in its territory, and there were some who questioned the value of the move, but Lem Stewart, who urged the purchase, got behind the picture: which he felt would make good, and the managers have been reporting business largely in excess of the usual ten to twenty percent increase. Some of the houses have boosted it as much as 50 percent, and J. B. Robinson, of Fort Smith, Ark., recently got a forty percent addition at a cost of only $20.

When it came to the Palace he made a miniature winter landscape for the lobby, with a frozen lake made from a block of ice. Into the cake of ice were frozen stills from the play and an electric light bulb, with the wiring extending beyond the cake. The heat from the lamp reduced somewhat the life of the cake of ice, but it made so much talk that a large proportion of the increased receipts should be credited to this clever idea.

Stills and posters and even dolls frozen into cakes of ice are not new, but the electric bulb is distinctly different, and to be recommended; particularly if a colored bulb is used. In this case the usual dip cannot be used. The color should be in the glass.

Eddie Collins Has Idea from the Past

Eddie Collins, of the Rialto theatre, Dennison, Texas, has a memory and can remember back to the time when this paper had a pink cover. A couple of years this side of that someone got out the wall paper circular, printed on decorator's samples and running to the effect that "we are tearing the paper from the walls" in an effort to accommodate the crowds.

Eddie figured that this would be a good stunt to revive on "The Wall Flower", and he did that little thing, getting a showy throwaway for the Goldwyn release at less than the usual cost. The wall paper makes a thousand-dollar splash, and if you work it right the paper stock costs you nothing. You merely cut up the old sample books.

R. B. Wilby Drives September Bookings

R. B. Wilby did not need an editorial to get him to back the September opening. Even before the drive was started by Moving Picture World to get better business by getting the patrons started right, Mr. Wilby was on the job.

He got out a twelve-page rotogravure booklet on the September attractions at the Strand, Birmingham, and played them right across the boards, adding "The Loves of Pharaoh", his first October booking, for good measure.

A page each is given to "Her Gilded Cage", "Blood and Sand," "Nice People" and "Manslaughter", one to the Lubitsch production, one to future bookings, one to comments on the pre-showing of "Nice People" and "The Loves" to the Birmingham endorsing committee, and the rest to general jazz for the pictures.

Mr. Wilby was getting out fine printing when a smeary throwaway was the best the rest of the exhibitors were doing, and this booklet shows the result of his long experience. It is better than the average accessories material and one of the best we have seen. He has his patronage clinched for the season.

Two for One Stunt Brings Big Profit

H. V. Smoots, of Harris and Smoots, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, sends in an idea which has worked well for him. The chief object is to get the interest of persons who are not regular picturegoers, but it also stimulates business.

Every second week the papers print a small coupon, occupying a two-inch single and containing only the name of the house and the offer to sell two tickets for the price of one on presentation of the coupon on a certain date.

Instead of cutting the receipts in half, Mr. Smoots says that it has boosted business from $60 to $125 above that of the average day, Saturdays excluded, and he thinks that some of those who come in at the reduction also attend on other days when they pay full price.

By adding a key letter, it is possible to tell which of the two local papers gives the best result, and provides a valuable check upon this data.

If your business is slack, give the idea a trial for one time, at any rate.

HOW THE LIBERTY THEATRE, PORTLAND, BUILT OUT TO THE CURB FOR THE DICTATOR

Always strong on the front display, the Liberty has exceeded itself for this Wallace Reid feature. The first view shows the effect from the front, with the vine-clad mission style building; in the centre is an angle view, while on the right is a shot of the interior of the sidewalk structure showing the double wall construction. Note the lantern over the box office which gives the final touch to the effect. The display did not cost as much as it looks and it will be useful some months from now on another picture.

OLLIE BROWNLEE REVIVES THE STRIKING CHECKERBOARD

This design is easily the most striking of all fronts, but it has not been much used of late. It put over "If You Believe It, It's So" for all the money in Muskogee when it played the Palace theatre, and it cost only eight dollars to build and paint.

Made One Hundred; Might Have Made More

Nothing but a terrific rainstorm prevented H. G. Griffin, of the Pheil Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., from making $200 on a ten dollar investment. As it was, he went a hundred dollars over the top instead of much more into the hole.

His life preserver was a pair of rolling pins, some sheet tin, a strip of webbing, a board and a motor.

He had the motor on hand, so that really should not be counted in the cost. He made a pulley wheel to fit over one of the rolling pins. The pins were the sort with the loose handles. These were placed at opposite ends of the arch above his entrance. The motor was geared to the pulley, which had been wedged to one of the pins. Over the pins ran a four-inch webbing, such as upholsterers use. A six-inch board was put up to keep this belt from sagging. To the belt were fastened six horses in sets of threes, so that while three were running along the board the other three were being carried on the underside. It was nothing more than an adaptation of a stunt worked for "Across the Continent" lately, but Mr. Griffin worked it for "Thunderclap."

The chief difference was that he cheapened the cost considerably by using material easy to obtain instead of having his rollers turned up. Now he has a rig he can use on a number of other displays by knocking off the horses and using ships or automobiles. The horses were cut out from tin and riveted to the belt. Rivet only at one point that the belt will pass over the rollers easily.

This stunt is so useful that it will pay to make one up and hold it in readiness for emergencies.

At the Small End

Defuniak Springs, Fla., has a population of something like two thousand, but the local paper has a subscription list of 1,300 on account of the circulation in nearby towns. The other day the sheet carried a page hook-up for "Smilin' Through". It just goes to show that it can be done in any sized town.

Adopts World Slogan for Paramount Week

Stewart Bird, of the Galax theatre, Binghamton, Ala., used the Lindlar lobby on "Over the Border" with the suggested changes made by this department and it brought the best business the house has had this summer.

The canadian side was dressed with bare limbs treated with whitewash and sprinkled with mica, and the other side was a strong contrast with greenery and flowers. Blue lighting was used on the "cold" side of the lobby with yellow on the opposition which is a further refinement of the idea. Keep that in mind for other split lobbies.

ONCE MORE JACKIE'S ORIGINAL SUIT COMES TO THE FORE

This is serial Number 27,750, and it was worked by the Rivoli Theatre, La Crosse, where Manager Friese used it as the basis of an impersonation contest which, old as it is, got 175 children out for a parade and free viewing of "Trouble."

Hunted for Trouble With a Magnifier

William Friese, of the Rivoli Theatre, La Crosse, Wis., used old stuff to get "Trouble" over when it came to his house, but old friends seemed to be best, for he made a real clean-up with young Mister Coogan.

He borrowed one of the "original" costumes and put it in the window of a music store with the announcement that the store would supply the prizes in a Coogan stunt. Some of the impersonators wore skirts and others had their hair hanging in pigtails down the back of their overalls, but they all got in free at a special matinee, and most of the town came to watch the preliminary parade.

Mr. Friese also used the man with the lantern, which has been the basis of numerous stunts, but he added a magnifying glass to aid the old fellow in his announced hunt for "Trouble." The lantern was lighted even in daylight and the ballyhoo was gotten up in a slicker and a winter cap to further emphasize the oddity of his stunt.

From the box office report he seems to have been the only man in La Crosse who needed a lantern to find "Trouble."

Stole a Carnival

That the Elks were holding a carnival while he was playing "The Crossroads of New York" did not worry William Friese, of the Rivoli theatre, La Crosse.

He hired a rube and an antiquated rig and sent the outfit down to the fair grounds where the ballyhoo man addressed the crowds on the subject of the picture. He was a glib talker and he sold a lot of tickets, chiefly because he spoke in Swedish, which is the alternative language in La Crosse.

Fairs do not annoy Friese. He knows they can be made to work for him.

Beat a Fanatic

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., had too much good sense to reply to a revivalist who was thundering at the motion pictures at each service. He made it a point to encounter casually as many influential people as he could. To each of these he gave a pass and a personal invitation to see "If You Believe It, It's So."

Most of those invited came to the opening performance and their comments did so much to counteract the thunderings of the revivalist that the house did a twenty-five per cent. increase over the average business instead of the loss a revival usually entails down South.

Treat on Jackie

First National franchise holders seem to lack imagination and they cling to the street parade, the impersonation stunt and the ice cream cone for all Coogan and Barry pictures. Now and then some one of them manages to inject a new angle to the old idea, but they don't seem to know anything else.

The Reynolds theatre, Union City, Tenn., managed to get a new slant to the cone stunt by announcing that it would celebrate Jackie's birthday with the presentation of cones to all boys under twenty, but Manager Cox found that some of the "boys" in line were close upon seventy and he did not have the heart to chase them away.

The cream was supplied by a local concern in return for the advertising, and they donated the sides of their three delivery wagons to advertise the stunt and the theatre.

The house also made effective use of the new Coogan statuettes for window displays. This is a new idea as applied to Jackie, though the statuette itself is by no means novel.

HOW TO GET INTO HER GILDED CAGE WORRIED KNOXVILLE PEOPLE ALL DAY SUNDAY

But Monday morning W. E. Drumbar cut a doorway, as shown to the right, and the crowds poured into the theatre to see the Swanson picture. The cage was made to extend onto the sidewalk about three feet, but where city ordinances do not permit this the front can be made straight, which will simplify the building. This works best where you open Monday after a Sunday shut down, but you can work it by keeping the bars uncut until opening time.

Nice Open Display Gets in Business

James A. Hart, of the Rex Theatre, Oshkosh, sends in some of his advertising work and adds: "Have been a reader of your department for some time and have used several of the stunts and also have copied some of the ads. I am sorry to say I am unable to send in a new stunt in return, for your department has been a great help to me." We'll extend Mr. Hart's credit on the stunts. He is overdue, but some day he will hit on a scheme that will pay back to the others the help they have given him. Meanwhile, his advertisements may serve as models for others, for he has negotiated the problem very nicely on "Back Pay" in a series of three reading advertisements. These three are all along similar lines and are a fine example of selling on the appeal of the story. The first example is a three sixes, and starts off with the keynote title from the film, which explains the main title. He uses just the title with the addition of "This is what Hester Bevins, the woman with the crepe de chine soul, says in this remarkable picture of metropolitan life." This does not tell very much, but it is a good starter. It does tell that it is a story of New York and it hints at an interesting character sketch. He does not hand out the entire story for your inspection, but offers just a suggestion, a sample. Your interest is aroused and you are in a receptive frame for the succeeding advertisements. These carry more copy, but along the same lines. None of them exploit the entire plot, but are written to interest you in the story with the suggestion that you can see it at the Rex. Mr. Hart used the two displays in the reverse order, for the first production followed the one headed: "What does the world owe you?" but we think they would have worked better the other way around. It is comparatively small matter, since all three examples are good, but the title advertisement would have caught the interest more easily had it been the first to run. These and the third, which we do not reproduce, are all in the same general style; a style within the reach of the average small town compositor if he can be coaxed away from the use of overlarge faces. The main point is that all of these give display to the title and house. That is the first thing you see—"Back Pay" and "Rex Theatre." You can't miss that even though you may try to avoid it. The only other display line is held so far away that it cannot fight back, and it is going to take a lot of effort to kill that down with poor composition. Of course, there should be variation in the type layouts to give variety, but this can be accomplished without altering the principle of a couple of big display lines and the rest in smaller type. Mr. Hart gets a better result than the average, both as to layout and copy. A man like that does not need as many stunts as the man who cannot write good ad copy or who cannot get good display and, therefore, must make more of his appeal through exploitation to overcome his handicap. Save these two clippings against the time you need them to show your printer, if you do not decide to go into executive session with him at once. If you do talk to him, point out how Hart gets a big display through using a smaller letter and more white space. Show him that a two-column ad looks larger in a three-column space than where the entire area is filled with black display. If you can once push this idea into your compositors' heads you will have won half the battle. This is a good argument to use, and we do not know but that we would rather have these sample ads from Mr. Hart than a stunt; which usually is good only for a certain line of plays. This is available on all styles of story.

A Striking Costume Swells Swanson Play

The artist who designed this cut for Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, has an idea of what will sell. It looks as though it might have come out of the Paramount plan book, but wherever it came from, it is one hardworking little idea. It matches the story and sells the tickets to those who will most approve the story. No one is going to come to the house with the idea of seeing something advertised in the paper and find something else. The cut is characteristic of the play and no one can cry false pretenses. If this is a plan book cut, the house agent has worked it up remarkably well. If it is all house, then both artist and agent can pat themselves on their respective backs and feel that they have earned their money, for it is a pretty display even for a house which holds a very high percentage of successes.

A TELLING ILLUSTRATION

Reduced Design Is Not Good Selling

In a quarter page space, this display on Borderland for the Park and Mall theatres, Cleveland, probably would have been capital, but it is a seventy lines across two and the design gets such a reduction that it suggests a story not worth while. A plain type display in the seventy line drop would have been impressive and selling, but there is so much design for so small a space that you get the idea that the picture itself is small stuff; which is unfortunate with so good a production. There is absolutely nothing the matter with the drawing except the size. It is too big a design for so small a space, but as a design it is capital and properly displayed it would have put the picture over to the limit, in all probability. As an ambitious subject scaled down to a four-inch width looks mean and apologetic and the impression is transferred to the title. It is possible that the houses did a large business on this announcement, but if it did, it is because of other factors and not through the presentation of the subject in this advertisement. The management simply failed to realize that the drawing which looked impressive in the original copy, many times the size of the reduction, became the reverse when it was pulled down below a logical measurement. Bold type, in precisely the same space, would have given the effect of bigness, for the type face would have been reasonably large and suited to the dimensions of the announcement. Sometimes the reverse holds true and a drawing which might be all right in a three-inch width is too small when hit up to six, but so long as managers fail to consider the newspaper sizing when they regard the artist's copy,

A Paramount Release

we shall have with us these occasional examples of poor judgment. The Loew houses in Cleveland do a good line of advertising as a rule, and much of it is as good in the smaller spaces as it was in the quarter pages the same houses took a couple of years ago, when the Cleveland displays were about the best offered anywhere. The average is good, but the management does not always realize that it cannot do in a two column what it used to do in four. Advertising should always be drawn for the space to be used in the newspaper. It may be two or three or more times as large in the copy, for a large copy is an advantage to the engraver, but it should always be drawn with the space to be used in mind, and drawn to reduce properly to that space, no matter how it may look in the original design. If more managers kept reducing glasses on their desks, and also held in mind the loss of values between clear white card with jet black ink and a slightly yellow paper with grey ink, there would be far less money lost in advertising with a reverse twist. That might be a good word for Lem Stewart, by the way. "It is not an advertisement, but a reverse." This is a reverse, since it repels rather than attracts.

These Two Displays Show Placing Value

Here are two displays from the Majestic Theatre, Madison, Wis. Both are three nines. Both use the same cut and signature plate. One gives more than double the display effect of the other because the layout gives strength to the lines. It is more a matter of layout than copywriting, for both sets of copy are capitally done. The first is the advance display, which is handicapped by the need for a display for the bill just closing. This is done in a panel precisely the same letter, but it shows up better in the narrow panel. This is not always the case, for sometimes the split up title will lose value through being run down the column. The use of a twelve point type for the reader text gives this a better display than the eight point in the larger space, and the shorter line permits it to be more easily read. It is not bold enough to fight the larger letters and yet it is a heavier face than straight Roman, and a very desirable font for advertising work. But the greater display value comes from the paneling, which permits the sale to be consummated in the space at the right with whatever assistance the cut may give, which depends entirely upon the interest felt in two gun ladies in the particular clientele to which you appeal. Paneling sometimes costs more than straight display, but it nearly always gives more in display than the additional cost represents in money.

Jumped the Receipts

George Schade used a jumping frog novelty with the legend: "Hop to the Schade Theatre. 'The Seventh Day.'" He passed them out liberally, and the result was so good that he opened an advance sale for the Barthelmess picture. The frog can be procured from any toy or novelty concern. A spring is caught into a lump of shoemaker's wax and gradually pulls off, causing an unexpected leap. His best stunt was handing them out at a picnic. They were all over the place and scared a lot of nervous women, but everyone in Sandusky knew that "The Seventh Day" was coming to the Schade.

A Comedy Banner

Because "Too Much Wife" was a comedy, J. B. Robertson, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., did not go to the trouble of labeling it. He put the suggestion over in a more emphatic way by using a novel banner.

Instead of the usual oblong sign he employed a huge gingham apron, on which the title was painted, and hung this in the lobby. Passers-by laughed and decided that the film must be good, too. Get that, "too?" That is what sold the tickets.

Robertson used all of the gingham he could get for two dollars and put it all into the skirt cover, with the result that he elevated the receipts some fifteen per cent. above the average.

FALSE FRONTS. One of this company's cheaper pictures and I don't believe I'd advise any one to run it. Advertising; "just a picture." Patronage; family. Attendance; poor. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

HIDDEN WOMAN. Just a fair picture that did not draw. Advertising; lobby and newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

JAN OF BIG SNOWS. A five-reel Curwood picture that would come under the class of "average" in my house. Patronage; family. Attendance; poor. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. As good a picture as anyone would want to see. Pleased fair crowds three days of fair week. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Associated Exhibitors

UP IN THE AIR ABOUT MARY. One of the best comedy dramas made this season; 100% satisfaction. Well liked. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Wm. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

WOMAN WAKE UP. They made me believe I was going to get "some" picture, but it did not stand behind it. It is a good program picture and will please fairly well. Patronage; mostly men. Attendance; only fair. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

F. B. O.

EDEN AND RETURN. A good light comedy. Advertising; newspaper, lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

QUEEN OF THE TURF. Sold to me as a special and flopped very much as I advertised it strong and people were disappointed after seeing it. Advertising; lobby front, advance cards, newspapers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very poor. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

TWO KINDS OF WOMEN. A good picture that drew fair houses. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. H. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

First National

COURAGE. A crackerjack story, good entertainment and sold at live and let live prices. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. Pleased 100%. Great picture to get patrons in the movie habit again. Advertising; used little more than usual. Patronage; best. Attendance; crowded house. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

DAUGHTER OF TWO WORLDS. A good drama that drew well and pleased. Advertising; posters and press. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

HER MAD BARGAIN. We cannot say that this is more than an average program picture. Patrons did not comment favorably or otherwise. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; poor. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

HER SOCIAL VALUE. Pleases all classes. Star very popular here, assisted by strong cast. Advertising; ones, sixes, photos, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; extra good. George J. Tuston, Wonderland Theatre, Napanee, Canada.

LOTUS EATER. The unusualness of this is one of the appealing factors. Story rather improbable. Mr. Barrymore does his role justice. Advertising; extra. Patronage; better class. Attendance; poor. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

MOTHER O' MINE. A 100% picture if ever there was one. Suspense and interest holds to the very end. Don't be afraid to advertise this one. It is one of the best we have ever shown. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; rural. Attendance; good. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

MY BOY. A very appealing picture, full of heart throbs. They will cry a bit and laugh a bit at this one. Advertising; twenty-fours, sixes, threes, ones, slide and photos. Patronage; resort visitors. Attendance; good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. A typical Constance Talmadge vehicle. Connie proves she can really act. Sure to please her followers. A little drawn out. Advertising; extra. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

THE SCOFFER. A dandy, worth while picture. You can't go wrong on this. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

SILENT CALL. A wonderful picture of the outdoors. The dog won the applause of the entire audience. Give us more like it. Advertising; extra. Patronage; resort visitors. Attendance; good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

SONNY. The best picture of the year. Patrons even say it exceeds "Tol'able David." Many went out of their way to tell us about it. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS. With the elimination of two or three scenes which are suggestive, this is a winner. It should be "cut." Advertising; big. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

TWO MINUTES TO GO. Fair football picture which may satisfy Chas. Ray admirers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

Fox

FOOTFALLS. Everything great except the very end which seemed to disappoint a little. Advertising; ones, three, six, slide, program. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

PRIMAL LAW. Dustin Farnum in the Primal Law will surely please an audience that is if you can get them in, but the thing that puzzles us all is how we can get them in. If I paid ten dollars for him I could not get an audience. They just won't take him here. Picture not bad, fair program picture. Advertising; window, newspapers. Patronage; hard boiled. Attendance; poor. J. S. Kallet, Rome Theatre, Rome, N. Y.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. The most elaborate picture I have ever seen; the acting wonderful; good story and plenty of thrills, but no business. The first night killed it. My patrons don't like this type of picture. Advertising; every means. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. Reports from patrons not as favorable as other Farnum pictures. A good program picture. Advertising; ones, threes, photos. Patronage; general. Attendance; extra good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, W. Virginia.

STRENGTH OF THE PINES. Just another motion picture, stale plot, a few fist fights for action and absolutely devoid of artistic recreation or education value. Why do they do it? B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

UP AND GOING. This is the poorest Tox Mix picture we ever saw and it is about as poor as any of the list of poor pictures. Advertising; posters and cards.

Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. B. A. Aughinbough, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

VIRGIN PARADISE. Pearl is a Serial Queen and has no place in this. Pleased children and fair percent of adults. Advertising; one six and ones. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. S. Pace, Texline Theatre, Texline, Texas.

WITHOUT FEAR. Nothing extra when you advertise it. Don't call it a special for you'll disappoint them. Advertising; regular lobby and lithos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tenn.

Goldwyn

BE MY WIFE. Stay away from it, clever enough in its way, but does not impress us as what the public want. Lot of old "hokum" to carry the star, dog more intelligent than any of the cast. And prints, Goldwyn does not seem to have a print in the Chicago exchange that is fit for a fifth class house to run, let alone what is needed in a first-class house. Advertising; 2 papers, 2 column, 6 inch. Patronage; country town. Attendance; not good. Columbia City Theatre Co., Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

DOUBLING FOR ROMEO. Very good, pleased hundred per cent; if your audience likes comedy, book this one. Consider the best Will Rogers yet. Attendance; good. Thos. L. Maynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

FROM THE GROUND UP. A very clever little picture. Pleased every one who saw it. Advertising used; lobby, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. O. W. Harris, Sapulpa, Okla.

GOLDEN DREAMS. Should have been titled "Nightmare." This is a lemon that the reviews praised highly. Pictures such as these are what made 'em quit going to picture shows, if I did not have to I would not show up here at this theatre for a month, after the spread we made on this picture. Get this one out if your audience is at all critical and if you have it bought, don't endorse it too highly. It may backfire as it has done for us. Arthur Hancock, Columbia City Theatre, Columbia, Indiana.

THE GRIM COMEDIAN. Just a fair picture. Nothing big but pleased about seventy-five percent. Advertising; lobby, newspaper. Patronage, mixed. Attendance; fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

OFFICER 666. Rather tedious in starting but blooms out a good one after all. Got them in on popularity of Jerome Patrick who is well known here. Advertising; one sheets. Patronage; industrials. Attendance; good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

OLD NEST. Sold reserve seats, one matinee and one night show; house packed but patrons disappointed by poor print. Many scenes cut out. Picture great. Advertising; lobby, ones, threes, heralds, letters. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fine. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

SNOW BLIND. Very entertaining pocture. Many favorable comments. Snow scenes good, will please any one. Will take for its good story. Advertising; newspaper and lobby display. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

WALL FLOWER. A pleasing picture that satisfies. Advertising; usual. Patronage; transient. Attendance; fair. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

Some exhibitors have already answered last week's question as to what would make these reports more useful.

Several of you say you'd like to have reports on only one side of the page so they could be clipped and pasted in a file. This can't be done because there is so much real exhibitor news and service that the extra space is all filled up.

Other good friends have been interested enough to suggest cutting out the "Attendance" and "Patronage" and substituting population and class of people the reporting house draws from.

It's all good criticism and shows what a big crowd takes active interest in this dependable tip exchange.

But before the actual changes are made, come in with more advice, so that when the changes are made you'll all have a hand in making these reports the most useful and direct booking tips on earth.

VAN

Hodkinson

FRENCH HEELS. A picture which has all the elements of a fine piece of entertainment. Pleased everyone. Good story which holds the interest until the end. Irene Castle is supported by a very good cast. Advertising; one sheet, newspaper, lobby cut outs. Attendance; fair. Patronage; general. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

JANE AYRE. I have been a hundred percent Hodkinson, but will have to admit that the class of pictures he is now releasing are not up to the old standard. This is a costume play. Size it up, one every two years enough. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

THE LIGHT IN THE CLEARING. Did not really please more than twenty-five percent. Some said fair, a few walked out. Acting was good but story did not suit. If you have this booked say as little as possible about it and you will get by with it. Advertising; less than usual due to previous reports. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, N. Y.

RIP VAN WINKLE. Made a hit especially with the youngsters. Lends itself admirably to exploitation and should be a winner for the majority of houses. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Metro

FASCINATION. Picture fairly good but not to Mae Murray's standard. Pleased about seventy-five percent. Price too high for small exhibitor. Advertising; photos, slides, heralds. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. W. Babitz, Grant Theatre, Cicero, Illinois.

FOUR HORSEMEN. A good picture but by no means the production its owners claim for it. Could have easily been done in eight reels and sold for less money. Advertising; everything possible. Attendance; rural. B. A. Aughinbough. Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Wonderful picture. Artistic Mae Murray does great acting. Story very interesting. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Placerville, California.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. Most persons declared this the best picture I have ever shown. You can't go wrong in booking it. Advertising; sixes, threes and one sheet posters. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

Paramount

BACHELOR DADDY. The best picture, from every angle, I have run in months barring none. Pictures of this kind do not cost a fortune. They please everybody and are censor proof. May the producers make many more as good. Attendance; good. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

BACHELOR DADDY. Go get this one, boys. It's a corker and has fun by the barrels. Romance enough for a high school girl and a thrill or two for good measure. Advertising; newspaper, billboard, lobby and house organ. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

BEAUTY SHOP. Did not register heavily here but should go over with a high class audience anywhere. Feature length comedies are a poor proposition for me. Advertising; newspaper, lobby, billboards and programs. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. We are unable to surmise where they get the idea that they require about four prices for this. We admit it is a good picture but why give it all to the producer. It pleased the patrons. Advertising; extra. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

BORDERLAND. A beautiful picture that pleased the women but very few men liked it. Direction and acting good. Advertising; regular. Patronage; general. Attendance; very light. H. J. Lougeker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

CAPPY RICKS. Pleased 100 percent. Many favorable comments. You cannot go wrong on this one. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

THE DICTATOR. Wallace Reid excellent. The star is certain to draw well here. Lively business for a week's run. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FOOL'S PARADISE. It is in every way 100 percent attraction. It will please the most exacting. The story is good, acting wonderful and above all elaborate scenes are shown. Advertising; paper, ones, sixes, twenty-four, heralds, photos. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

FOR THE DEFENSE. Very good mystery drama but a little too heavy for this time of year. Clayton miscast, Grassby and Maym Kelso run away with the show. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fairly good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT. A plum good picture except too long, but will give satisfaction. A picture that will go anywhere, good acting. Good settings. Advertising; big newspaper, six ones, slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. H. I. Perkins, Dixie Theatre, Bastrop, Texas.

GOOD PROVIDER. An exceptional picture, but not as good as "Humoresque." Don't pay too much for it. I lost money. H. D. Whatton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

GREAT IMPERSONATION. Very good picture but did not draw very well here. Weather was very hot. Advertising; insert cards, one sheet, regular lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

GREEN TEMPTATION. Betty Compson. Excellent; although the picture has been shown here previously it continued to please a big business. Wm. Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JAILBIRD. A fair picture, nothing more. Not a very funny comedy and no comparison to "23½ Hours Leave." Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

MAN FROM HOME. A well produced, carefully directed film. An excellent cast and beautiful backgrounds. None of the six cast had a special box office appeal here but those who saw the picture went away well pleased. Advertising; usual. Attendance; fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MISTRESS OF THE WORLD. Good entertainment, four episodes, keep them coming and make money for us. Rental right. Advertising; one, six and threes, photos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Elmer E. Stearns, Dewtell Theatre, South Dayton, N. Y.

OVER THE BORDER. Good winter scenes; fine action picture. Not so good in Canada where we have real Royal Mounted Police. Advertising; newspapers, photos, slide, posters. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. C. L. Querris, Palace Theatre, Toronto, Canada.

OVER THE BORDER. Fairly good. Snow stuff extra fine. Compson miscast but Moore does fine. Several very noticeable blunders in plot. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY. It's a joke for a small town. Don't see how big town folks can like it; they are just country people, too. It was a lemon for me, too long, as most of them are that are more than five reels. Can't see where they get "big" out of this. Patrons kidded me about it. Advertising; big, newspaper, six ones, slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. H. I. Perkins, Dixie Theatre, Bastron, Texas.

THE SHEIK. Pleased 100 percent. Had to hang out S. R. O. sign. Heavy downpour did not keep them away. Advertising; usual. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

THE SHEIK. Pleased 100 percent. Print in terrible condition and there should be some penalty on an exchange which sends out subjects in this condition. Advertising; twenty-four, one and 3, newspapers and heralds. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. H. L. Bennett, Victoria Theatre, Parsons, W. Va.

SHAM. Splendid little picture, not too long as most of them are. Will please ninety-five percent. Advertising; six ones, slide, sidewalk signs. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. H. I. Perkins, Dixie Theatre, Bastrop, Texas.

True Blue

A fellow worth while is D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pa. He says: "I'll continue to send reports and they'll be honest ones, too. Yours for success to the ambitions of the department."

The ambitions of the department are to make and keep friends like Mr. Strayer and to serve you all with the best film reports from honest folks.

TRUTH CONQUERS. Like all foreign pictures we use it fails to please. Why a company like Famous Players depreciates their usual good stuff with these is beyond my comprehension. Mina May, the star, is very poor. Attendance; poor. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

TRUTHFUL LIAR. Light drama with nothing exceptional. A good evening's entertainment, nothing more or less. Wanda is taking on weight lately. Business good due to a street car strike. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. A good one of Wallie Reid. Pleased all my patrons. Reid is a good draw for me. Advertising; ones, photos, window cards. Patronage; general. Attendance; extra good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, W. Virginia.

THE WHISTLE. The best Hart ever made. It takes a deep soul that Hart cannot reach the bottom of in this production. A beautiful story. Can't say too much of the human appeal. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. E. J. Bregger, Gem Theatre, Crystal Falls, Michigan.

Selznick

United Artists

IRON TRAIL. A carefully produced, well liked picture. Advertising, usual. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THREE MUSKETEERS. This Douglas Fairbanks picture is a film classic that all sorts of business should be done on; it's merely up to the exhibitor. Advertising, usual, with mailing list. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, big. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Universal

STEP ON IT. Talk about your Saturday program—this is a knockout! The six sheet alone is worth what you pay for the picture and the picture will please all Western followers, 100 per cent. If you have not played it you owe it to yourself to book it today if you have any Western followers. Order some extra six sheets. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, overflowing. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

THE TRAP. Good, clean picture. Lon Chaney wonderful. Advertising, one six, three ones, window cards, heralds. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. E. E. Stearns, Dewtell Theatre, South Dayton, New York.

THE TROUPER. Just ordinary. Advertising, one sheets. Patronage, general. Attendance, good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

WILD HONEY. Greatest water scene ever seen in pictures here. The scene of the water rushing on Miss Dean and her hero will make anyone sit up and take notice, and stay awake at night wondering how it was done without killing the star. It puts the real punch in the picture. Patronage, high class. Attendance, fairly good. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

Vitagraph

SILENT VOW. Splendid. If your patrons like Duncan, by all means give them this one. It will please any type of audience. Advertising, sixes, threes, ones, slides, Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SILENT VOW. Pictures like this always please, the action and scenery in this picture will win its own way anywhere. It has a good plot and is well produced. Patronage, very best. Attendance, very good. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. Comedy drama; not a box-office picture. Average business. Tully Marshall well suited to character he portrays. Good for one day showing. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. Just a fair one; if you don't pay too much for it. Program picture. Advertising, ones, three, photos. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

Comedies

CIRCUS HEROES (C. B. C.). Hallroom Boys comedies are one of the best bets in the comedy line. This one much different from the average. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

COUNTRY CHICKENS (Educational). A corking good comedy of rural life. New stuff; plenty of laughs. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

HAUNTED SPOOKS (Pathe). Harold Lloyd scores in this; support excellent. You could hear them roar over in the next town. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

HIGH FLYERS (Universal). Star comedies are consistently censorproof; this means much to the exhibtor. They are seldom world beaters but average up well; this one fair. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

OH, PROMISE ME (Christie - Educational). A corking good comedy, good enough for the best of picture houses. Chas H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

RENT COLLECTOR (Vitagraph). A very good comedy. Pure hokum. The kids went wild over it. Semon is a great favorite with them here. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SAILOR-MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib.). Drew third biggest crowd in history of house. One of the best comedies ever made. Kept them laughing for ten minutes after show. Show it, and boost it to the skies. You'll get them! Advertising, every means I could think of. Attendance, great. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SCHOOL DAYS (Vitagraph). One of Larry Semon's best. There's something doing every minute and it kept the house in a roar from start to finish. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

SEMON COMEDIES (Vitagraph). I have run them all, and consider them the best comedies for slap-stick and antics on the market. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

Serials

HURRICANE HUTCH (Pathe). Picture and photography good; acting very good. But I have starved to death on it. Cannot get a crowd with it; would not come with three-reel Lloyd. Ran fourteen episodes, advertising every way I could. Attendance, very poor. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Boys, this is a "knockout" so far; have shown second chapter. If you haven't bought it, "get busy!" W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

WHITE EAGLE (Pathe). Did a capacity business on this serial. Plenty of pep in it; just the thing for Saturday crowd. Book it. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

Guessing Contest

If an exhibitor said he didn't book by these reports because they were not sincere, and another said he didn't send reports because nobody read them—which would be wrong?

Short Subjects

MESSAGE OF THE FLOWERS (Prizma). A tiresome thing that people will fidget through, welcoming the end. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

State Rights

BONNIE MAY (Federated). A poor title and a star with little back of her. Good entertainment, but Bessie Love is, for me, a poor drawing card. Advertising, one sheets, newspaper and electric sign. Attendance, poor. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

GOLDEN TRAIL (Arrow). Not up to the standard as a program picture; not the spirit expected in a Western picture. Advertising, average. Patronage, general. Attendance, poor. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

FLAME OF THE YUKON (Triangle). Forced to play this in order to clean-up an old contract, but wished we had played it sooner. An old one but a good one. To our surprise the print was in excellent condition, with not a single out of frame. One of the best fights we have shown here for some time. Took well with the roughnecks and hardboiled guys. Patronage, village and country. Attendance, good. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

LAST CHANCE (Canyon). Full of shoot-'em-up scenes that may appeal to the wild and wooly Western fans. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

MOTION TO ADJOURN (Arrow). It is a good picture that will hold your audience, with just enough humor to please. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

RANGER AND THE LAW (Capitol). A good Western. Lester Cuneo a big favorite here. Plentiful action. Very pleasing entertainment. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

THE UNKNOWN (Goldstone). A good picture, full of stunts. The star takes well here. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

WOLVES OF THE RANGE (Sunnywest). Poor photography is the outstanding feature of this picture. Only a fair Western; too little of the "rough stuff" that Western patrons like. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.)

The Young Diana

(Marion Davies — Cosmopolitan-Paramount —6,744 feet)

M. P. W.—Will appeal to the eye.

E. H.—Lavishness marks it throughout, and with a notable cast and wondrous direction, it should prove a big attraction.

F. D.—The directors have procured some good results, but the production as a whole is stretched beyond capacity and not overconvincing.

N.—One could go on indefinitely enumerating the wonders of this production.

T. R.—Here is an unusual story, one that presents difficulties for the person who would attempt to estimate the popular view of the production as motion picture entertainment.

Heart's Haven

(Featured Cast—Hodkinson)

M. P. W.—An impressive story.

T. R.—For those who place their faith in God above everything else this picture will have a tremendous appeal.

F. D.—Will interest many.

N.—While it doesn't carry any plot appeal manages to exude a wholesomeness sure to be appreciated.

E. H.—All the charm of simplicity and wholesomeness of the Burnham novels.

The Woman He Loved

(William V. Mong—American Releasing—5,200 feet)

M. P. W.—William V. Mong draws a fine characterization in a picture which has but a vague connection with a title that has a certain amount of box-office advantage.

T. R.—An entertaining story and has an appeal that should be fairly general.

F. D.—Essentially a human interest drama . . . It is not a big picture but a pleasing one.

N.—The trouble with this picture is its reliance upon the long arm of coincidence. Where it scores is in the detail and characterization.

E. H.—Very little to offer in the way of originality or novelty of plot. Character drawing fairly well handled but coincidence plays too prominent a part.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.

(Featured Cast—Fox—8,361 feet)

M. P. W.—Undoubtedly is destined to rank with "Over the Hill" in its virtually general appeal.

T. R.—The picture was designed and produced on the theory that the bulk of the public can be made to smile and weep with a child as readily as with a mother.

F. D.—Director Dawley has used his material to advantage and as far as production values are concerned, the offering is well up to standard.

E. H.—Depends to no small extent on the apparent vogue of the orphan film.

N.—Women of America, yes, men too, have a real treat in store for them in this excellent Fox special. Its theme is one of universal appeal—motherhood and the joys which little children bring into the household.

Grandma's Boy

(Harold Lloyd—Associated Exhibitors—4,800 feet)

M. P. W.—Harold Lloyd's first five reel picture a knockout.

N.—If exhibitors want to start off the new season with a real novelty, a sure box-office winner, they will make no mistake in putting this one down.

E. H.—Pure entertainment, good as gold . . . It is brimful of mirth-provoking situations and the story is a wholesome and sensible one.

T. R.—Brimful of lively action, hilarious situations and without a single dull spot to mar its mirth-creating powers.

F. D.—It's a cleanup if you get it, and a sour face if the other fellow lands it.

The Curse of Drink

(Featured Cast—Weber & North—5,900 feet)

M. P. W.—It's a melodramatic picture with plenty of thrilling moments and a cast of names that should draw.

F. D.—Old time meller will get by with those who like this type of material.

N.—Should be a good investment for the state right buyer because it carries a "kick" and a moral.

T. R.—There is no let-up in the interest from the flashing of the initial title.

E. H.—Vastly entertaining story of the troubles which befall the family of a plain, every-day American working man.

Moonshine Valley

(William Farnum—Fox—5,619 feet)

M. P. W.—There is something generally familiar about the material. But Herbert Brenon, the director, has handled it so as to bring out the most effective situations and with fullest appreciation of the human interest motive.

T. R.—There is a lot of action in Mary Murillo's story "Moonshine Valley" but for all of that the plot seems draggy and trite.

F. D.—Farnum has dramatic role that will probably please his admirers.

N.—Its pure unadulterated melodrama, a red-blooded story which gives our old friend Bill Farnum opportunity to put over a portrayal of real dramatic power.

E. H.—Ordinary program stuff.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower"

Marion Davies Scores Big Success in Cosmopolitan's Magnificent Production Based on Popular Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

If doubt lingers in anyone's mind as to the ability of our producers to make a picture on the same scale of gorgeousness, lavishness and magnificence as has been exhibited in some foreign productions, the Cosmopolitan production, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, will dissipate it; in fact, it outdistances their best efforts.

Coupled with this, is a story adapted from one of the best-liked of romantic novels, and while it is a costume play it deals with the ever popular theme of a spirited and charming princess who prefers the love of a man without a title to a marriage for reasons of state only. Then, too, it is interpreted by an exceptionally fine cast and the main facts closely follow history, which lends vividness and interest to the story.

Marion Davies unquestionably does the best work of her career and gives a fine portrayal of the very real, human and lovable character of Princess Mary Tudor; she acts with charm and feeling and never looked more beautiful than she does in the striking and gorgeous costumes of English and French royalty.

Excellent, too, is the work of the supporting players who comprise an exceptionally large cast. Forrest Stanley, as Charles Brandon in the role opposite the star, is well cast and gives a fine performance. Superb is the work of Lyn Harding, who gives a striking delineation of King Henry VIII and whose make-up seems a re-creation of the portraits of that monarch. William Norris, as the senile and doddering King Louis XII of France, gives one of the finest interpretations of this type of character ever seen on the screen; while Pedro deCordoba makes the somewhat minor role of the Duke of Buckingham stand out. And so on through the lesser characters listed below, each powerfully portrayed by well-known actors of the stage and screen.

Here is a picture that should hold any audience, and while it would do so from the appeal of its romantic and very human story and the acting of a distinguished cast, it is in the technical perfection of the production, the magnificence of the photography, the excellence of the direction, the massiveness, beauty and gorgeousness of the particularly wonderful perfection and detail of the sets, decorations and costuming that this production excels.

It is safe to say that never has a picture been produced with greater beauty of surroundings, whether interior or exterior, or such striking lavishness and perfection of detail from the largest cathedral and street scenes to the smaller and more intimate ones, or with greater artistic excellence than this one. The walls, windows, tapestries, furnishings, everything, show a wealth of detail, and the result of huge expenditure, skilled workmanship and painstaking study. Then, too, the scenes have been so finely posed and photographed that every frame is a picture that you will like to stop and study and enjoy because of its art and beauty.

Here is a production that will cause you to believe the advance statements of its huge cost and that all the props, decorations, etc., are either real, or exact duplicates of the originals, the result of months of labor on the part of expert artists and craftsmen. And it all shows in the film.

The greatest credit for this picture goes to two men, Robert G. Vignola for his excellent direction, and Joseph Urban for the settings. Mr. Urban has out-done himself in his share of the production, while Mr. Vignola's direction is excellent, ranging from his handling of close-ups to the big mob scenes. Luther Reed provided an effective scenario and Mr. Vignola has built up the interest and action to a thrilling climax in the escape of the princess with Brandon's aid during a storm following a duel with the new French king and culminating in the plunge of the two leading characters and their horses from a high bridge.

"The Mohican's Daughter"

American Releasing Corporation Offers Picturization of Jack London Story.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Indian treachery is the dominating motive of this picturization of Jack London's story titled "Jees Uck" but known on the screen as "The Mohican's Daughter." The picture's appeal is not broad enough to include all classes of patrons. It will afford entertainment principally to those who are interested in typically Indian subjects.

The picture has a certain sameness of mood, a continual spirit of dark intrigue that seems a little too heavy at times. There is a lack of brightness both in the action and in the physical aspect of the film. Most of the scenes are dimly lighted, and while this is perhaps suitable in view of locale of the action remote from the bright lights of civilization, a little variation would lessen an indescribably gloomy effect.

Jack London's heroine, Jees Uck has a great appeal as played by Nancy Deaver. Her performance is one of the memorable achievements in the picture. Saxon Kling is another who is pleasing because he seems to have escaped the melodramatic manner noticeable in most of the characterizations.

The Cast

Jees Uck.....Miss Nancy Deaver
Kitty Shannon.....Miss Hazel Washburn
Neil Bonner.....Saxon Kling
Amos Pentley.....William Thompson
Jack Hollis.....Jack Newton
Father La Claire.....Paul Panzer
Chatanna.....Nick Thompson
Nashluta.....Mortimer Snow
A Half Breed.....John Webb Dillion
Inigo His Wife.....Miss Myrtle Morse
Their Child.....Rita Abrams

Adapted from the Story "Jees Uck" by Jack London.
Scenario and Direction by S. E. V. Taylor.
Photography by Oliver Marsh and Lester Lang.
Length, 5,500 Feet.

The Story

To get real medicine for a sick child, Jees Uck risks a death penalty for disobedience of a tribal law.. She is defended by the Indian medicine man, who is killed by the chief for his pains. The crime is fastened on Jees Uck, who flees to the protection of her white lover at the trading post. When the post is attacked she misinterprets the presence of an intriguing white woman and surrenders herself to the tribesmen. Her lover follows and gets into the chief's tent by a ruse, finds evidence of the chief's guilt and delivers him to the authorities. Then Jees Uck finds her happiness.

"Manslaughter"

Gorgeous Scenes Interpolated in Intensely Dramatic Story Make This Cecil B. DeMille's Best

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

About the best tribute that can be paid a picture of more than average footage is to say that it holds you so that you do not realize its unusual length. This is just what Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, "Manslaughter," does. With almost the first scene you get right into the story and it rivets your attention until the final close-up.

Mr. DeMille is a showman and knows how to appeal to his audiences. In this production he has selected a popular novel with a gripping story, transferred it to the screen in a forceful manner, embellished it with his characteristic touches, including some typical DeMille scenes of gorgeousness and splendor, and presented it with players who vivify the characters.

Basing his theme on the craze of a certain class of ultra-rich for speed and excitement he not only strikes a popular chord, but it gives him the opportunity for the introduction of spectacular and exceedingly well-handled scenes in which he points to the similarity between this attitude and that of Rome in the days of its decadence. This point is strikingly brought out and while the scenes are interpolated at two telling points they do not interrupt the interest, but on the contrary enhance the drama of the modern story.

The Roman scenes are but incidental to the main story which has a love vs. duty theme. A district attorney in order to be true to his oath of office and believing also that it is about the only way to bring her to a realization of what her mad craze for speed and excitement is leading her, sends his sweetheart to prison when her car kills a policeman who is seeking to arrest her. While many may question the fact that a woman under such circumstances could ever again love the man who had treated her thus, it nevertheless provides opportunities for highly dramatic situations. Then, too, there are cross currents that enhance the drama.

Upon three principals the majority of the action rests and they measure up to the demands of the story. Thomas Meighan is excellent as the district attorney and forcefully brings out the sincerity of the character. Upon Leatrice Joy falls the lion's share of the drama and she gives a remarkable portrayal in the contrasting situations of the excitement-loving woman of wealth, the hate-crazed woman in prison and later, when she realizes her folly and seeks to help others and regenerate the man she loves, who in the meantime has "gone to the dogs." Lois Wilson, in the pathetic role of the wealthy woman's maid, gives a fine performance which wins the spectator's sympathy.

In having the hero sink to the social depths and the girl reclaim him, and his final renunciation of the governorship because she as an ex-convict cannot share it with him, also in bringing the wealthy woman within the power of her own maid whom she has sent to prison, and the maid's regeneration; the already forceful and vivid story is enhanced.

While the scenes where the hero fights against demon rum are not new screen material, they are well done and the tenseness is relieved by clever comedy touches.

Taken altogether, "Manslaughter" is Cecil B. DeMille's finest achievement.

They don't make showmen any wiser than those two shrewd Joes — Joe Schenck and Joe Plunkett, of the Strand. Joe Schenck produced "The Eternal Flame" and Joe Plunkett grabbed it for the New York Strand. Schenck never invested his money in a better enterprise, for "The Eternal Flame" is a Norma Talmadge masterpiece. It is colorfully entertaining from every angle; beautifully staged, gorgeously costumed, brilliantly and picturesquely acted by a wonderful cast. Produced at a time when the public is flocking in droves to see American-made costume plays, this Norma Talmadge wonder should jam your house. It has everything, story, star, cast, pretentious settings and exploitation angles that, properly utilized, should boost your box office. Here's a business-getter that is as sure a money-maker and as safe as a government bond. —R. F.

The Story

District Attorney O'Bannon in love with Lydie Thorne, one of the idle rich who is crozy for speed and excitement. Unable to make her realize her folly, when her car kills a policeman he prosecutes her and she is sent to prison. There she meets her maid whose prison sentence is indirectly due to Lydia's thoughtlessness. In prison, Lydia realized her folly, she becomes reconciled with her maid and the two learn that the best thing in life is to help others. The District Attorney in the meantime has sunk to the lowest social depths. Lydia, doing charitable work, finds him and brings about his regeneration. He runs for governor and with victory in sight renounces his ambition when he finds that Lydia being an ex-convict cannot share his honors.

"Deserted at the Altar"

A Simple Story, Well Told, Inspired By Melodrama of the Same Title.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Phil Goldstone's screen adaptation of "Deserted at the Altar" is just what the introductory title claims it to be—a simple story of simple folks. As reviewed by the writer it is a trifle long, approximately seven reels being consumed in telling the story, which can be easily cut down to six reels at the most.

One particularly good feature about this picture is that the screen version clings closely to the stage play, with the desertion at altar scene cleverly worked up. It is far from being an elaborate production, the producer having satisfied himself with some picturesque shots and a cast of players who work intelligently.

It is melodramatic to the 'teenth degree and if your audiences typify that class of patrons who delight in this form of entertainment, "Deserted at the Altar" should not miss. Unlike most melodramatic stories that have been adapted for screen presentation, however, this one is easy-going, entertaining and will make its particular appeal to those who delight in character studies. But you'll find all the village blokes, gossips, belles, beau brummels, etcetra.

Scenically, it is a beauty, the director having been unusually careful in the selection of his locations, all of which are beautiful to look at. The photography by Glen McWilliams and John Meigle is a tribute to both gentlemen. Directors William K. Howard and A. Kelly had a good cast with which to work, Tully Marshall doing as fine a piece of acting as has been recorded in his favor in many a picture. Little Frankie Lee and his dog, Queenie, are natural. Bessie Love is good as is also William Scott as the city "feller." The rest of the cast works consistently well.

The Cast

The Country Girl.....Bessie Love
The Other Woman.....Barbara Tennant
The Teacher.....Eulalie Jensen
The City Chap.....William Scott
The Other Man.....Fred Kelsey
The Boy.....Frankie Lee
The Squire.....Tully Marshall
The Minister.....Wade Boutler
The Mob Leader.....Les Bates
The Sheriff.....Edward McQuade
The Gossip.....Helen Howard
The Dog.....Queenie

Adapted From Pierce Kingsley's Stage Play and Grace Miller White's Book.
Directed by William K. Howard and A. Kelley.
Photography by Glen McWilliams and John Meigle.
Length, Seven Reels.

The Story

A poor country girl and her little brother, orphans, live with the squire, a hypocrite, who with his son conspires to steal her inheritance. The girl is in love with a visitor from the city. When the latter seeks the parental consent of the squire to marry the girl, he agrees. The wedding ceremony is abruptly interrupted by the intrusion of a strange woman with a baby in her arms. She accuses the groom of being the father. Broken-hearted, the girl returns to her home, the old man satisfied that his plan has worked. But to make certain he suggests the visitor be run out of town. Developments convince the strange girl that she had been deceived, that she had been made a tool of by the squire's son, who attacks her and then accuses the city chap, who later is about to be hanged by the mob, who had followed the biddings of the squire, when the wronged woman appears, exonerates him and accuses the squire and his son, who are taken into custody, with the country lass and the man of her heart left alone to pursue their future happiness.

"Broadway Rose"

Metro Special Typically Mae Murray and Will Please Patrons With an Eye for the Beautiful

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Mae Murray is at home in "Broadway Rose" for two reasons; first, she is a dancer and as such she is always at her best, and, second, she is surrounded with gorgeous settings that furnish a picturesque and beautiful background for the stunning costuming of the production in general. And "Broadway Rose" is indeed a production, stupendously typically Mae Murrayish. There are the pretentiously luxurious cabaret settings emphasized and consistently carried out with similarly beautiful interiors that intensify the value of the picture as a production.

These Mae Murray productions are always a tribute to the directorial genius of Bob Leonard and, in this instance, "Broadway Rose" represents about the very best thing he has done. It is difficult to think of Mae Murray in any role but the sort that she has been depicting in these Tiffany productions; they held her patrons, who see in her a combination of gracefully spectacular dancer, beautiful damsel plus a whole lot of pep, and that latter quality seemingly counts much with Mae Murray enthusiasts.

Insofar as the story is concerned there is nothing new about it, but the Mae Murray version of any old story is generally accepted as new by her admirers. It's the old yarn about the ambitious girl leaving home and her sweetie for the bright, dazzling city, meeting the scion of a wealthy family, falling in love with him, being betrayed by him and finally returning home to first love—and happiness.

But if your patrons like Mae Murray, they will like "Broadway Rose," for as a production it is just as big as "Peacock Alley" and perhaps, bigger than "Fascination." If you've made money on these two pictures, you won't fail with this one. The cast with Monte Blue, Alma Tell, Ray Bloomer and others is good. Photographically, scenically, directorially it is a gem. The picture has exploitation angles that none of the other Murray features possessed. And on the manner in which it is exploited depends the extent of your gross, for "Broadway Rose" is a showman's picture from every angle.

Story and scenario by Edmund Goulding.
Directed by Robert Z. Leonard.
Length, 7,227 feet.

The Story

Rosalie Lawrence, a dancer who had left her country home to achieve fame and fortune, falls in love with Hugh Thompson, son of a millionaire, who is secretly betrothed to Barbara Royce. Later she returns home where she meets again her sweetheart of childhood days, Tom Darcy. But absence makes the heart grow fonder and she returns to the city, confident she loves Hugh, whom she marries secretly. The older Thompson charges that Rosalie sought Hugh merely for his money and the weakling son is convinced. He approaches Rosalie, informs her that she stands in the way of his inheriting fifty million dollars and that the amount is too much to sacrifice for "any woman." Barbara hurls charge after charge, though ignorant of their marriage. Disgusted, and repentent Rosalie at last comes to a realization of her dilemma and she returns to her waiting sweetheart back home.

"Missing Millions"

Paramount Presents Alice Brady in Crook Drama, Offering Continued Surprise

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

As a crook drama, "Missing Millions," in which Paramount stars Alice Brady, strikes the popular note. It is a long time unravelling and provokes much suspense. It does not end with a promised reform and is minus the usual emphasis on a human interest angle except for a touch at the close, where there is just enough pathos and sacrifice to leave a satisfying impression.

This absence of sentiment and undivided attention to the more technical angles of the plot makes the story more plausible and enjoyable. Alice Brady helps to establish this characteristic. She gives an unusually convincing performance of a society crook without spoiling her conception of the part by too many soft touches. She is always the sophisticated, clever conspirator. The cast appearing in her support includes such reliable actors as Frank Losee, David Powell, William B. Mack and George Le Guere, the latter in the most appealing role in the drama.

The scenes on board ship are highly successful from the standpoint of entertainment and suspense. Here the laying of the plot, robbery, the climax and the denouement are revealed in a sequence that will surely hold the interest. Both director and scenarist have done well. The scenes are attractively equipped and Miss Brady stunningly gowned is a brilliant figure.
